Mr. FESSENDEN. Before that amendment is acted upon, I deem it my duty to make a statement to the Senate with reference to it, to explain it. In the deficiency bill that we passed at the beginning of this session, we appropriated $46,000 for the repair of the President's House, and it was supposed at that time that that was ample to cover everything that was necessary and called for. We have, however, a full statement made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings before the committee, from which it appears that, large as that amount was, a very considerable portion of it was taken up in the payment of bills that were found to exist against the President's House, which had accumulated before the time that appropriation was passed, and of which the Commissioner knew nothing. In consequence of that and of the unexpectedly large repairs that were needed there, especially in the upper part of the house, the house being in a very dilapidated condition, they have got to a point where there is no provision whatever left for the East Room. The East Room has been dismantled with reference to repairs, and is in a very unfit state. The curtains are cut to pieces and much defaced; the furniture is all worn out, pretty much, as we understand; and in order to be in keeping it will be necessary when it is repaired to have new curtains, &c., and to furnish everything up $20,000 will undoubtedly be necessary, if we undertake to repair it at all, in order to put the East Room in a proper situation. The repairs of the building have necessarily been large. The building and the furniture were very much dilapidated. The question presented itself whether the appropriation should be made; whether the East Room, which is the only room that is usually open to visitors, should be left in its present situation or should be put in a proper condition. The committee thought, on the whole, that while we are about it we might as well make the house decent, although the appropriations are unexpectedly large, larger than was anticipated; and for that reason we recommend this appropriation.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the $46,000 that was appropriated in the last deficiency bill has been expended to discharge debts?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Some part of it.

Mr. HOWE. And that the Commissioner knew nothing about it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They were existing debts against the house.

Mr. HOWE. I should suppose there would be no debts against the President's House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In modern times it has so happened that as the business has been managed debts have been contracted for furniture, fixings, &c., and the bills have proved to be larger than we were aware of. There is no doubt of that fact and of the propriety of paying them.

Mr. HOWE. The explanation suggests this state of facts: that you put $46,000 into the hands of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to disburse in a particular way, and he has appropriated it to an entirely different purpose, for which he had no authority whatever. Under those circumstances I do not know what assurance we can have that if we put $20,000 more in his hands it will not go the same way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have the estimates now to cover the amount.

Mr. HOWE. To cover what you design to have done; but to cover what the Commissioner may choose to do I suppose the committee is not prepared to say that this will be sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON. Somebody must expend it.

Mr. HOWE. I take it there are ways in which you can give away more than $20,000. That $46,000 seems to have been disposed of without accomplishing anything that was designed to be accomplished by it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, yes; a large portion of it has been expended on the house.

Mr. HOWE. What portion of it I do not know, but a large portion of it has been appropriated to purposes not contemplated by the appropriation and not authorized by any law. For my part, I am not willing to vote appropriations until we can have them expended for the purposes for which they are designed.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another reason why we might hesitate about this. I do not know that is definitive. It is already seriously considered to build another house for the President.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That will take some years, and this furniture will be all worn out before a new house is built.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line one hundred and forty-nine, to strike out the words "that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized," in line one hundred and fifty-four to strike out the words "and that the sum of" and to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury;" and in line one hundred and fifty-five, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words "is hereby appropriated for said alteration and repairs, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so that the clause will read:

To alter and repair the building in the city of Philadelphia belonging to the United States, known as the Pennsylvania Bank building, so as to render it suitable for the occupancy of the appraisers connected with the customs at Philadelphia, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill down to and including the following clause:

To enable the Secretary of War to make the pay of the persons employed at any time during the last fiscal year as temporary clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General, or any division thereof, equal to the pay of first-class clerks, which is hereby directed, such sum as may be necessary for this purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the word "last" before "fiscal" ought to be "present," so as to make it apply to the present fiscal year. The technical language of that clause will extend it back to 1864. I suggest to the chairman to strike out the word "last" and insert "present." I think that is what it means.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That did not occur to me before, but I am very much inclined to think it was intended for the last fiscal year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it ought to be so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The fact as stated to me about it was that certain clerks were temporarily employed there on trial, the trial being intended to be about thirty days and at a reduced rate; but instead of being kept thirty days on trial, they have been kept along eight or nine months, doing all the work of first-class clerks precisely as they did it; and we thought it was no more than fair to pay them at the same rate as first-class clerks. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not insist on the amendment; I have no particular desire about it.

The next amendment was in section two, line seven, to strike out "seven" and insert "six," and also to strike out "$4,870 45" and to insert "$374 65;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for increased compensation of the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, authorized by the second section of the act of June 1, 1866, to the 30th day of June, 1866, the sum of $374 65 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that sufficient to pay the increased compensation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In another bill we provided for the increase for the present year. This section was intended to cover the appropriation for the present fiscal year, as well as one month in the last year; but we have appropriated in another bill for the present year; and as we have amended it, this only pays the difference in a month's salary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the third section, in the following words:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That such sum as may be required to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to execute the resolutions of the House of the present session, directing the payment of increased and additional compensation to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is simply the same matter that they sent us once before, and we once yielded to, of legalizing the action of the House increasing the compensation of its clerks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fourth section, in the following words:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the words "one year," in the proviso regulating the distribution of a certain fund among the clerks and employees of the Treasury Department who had served therein one year prior to July 1, 1866, in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 23, 1866, are hereby changed to six months, and the same shall be construed accordingly.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know why the committee struck that out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We legislated on this subject in the legislative appropriation bill fully. There was a difference between the House and Senate on the subject with regard to giving this increased compensation at all. The Senate had refused to give it so far as many of them were concerned; the House insisted upon it. We finally agreed that the compensation should be given, but it should only be given to clerks who had served one year. The result was that we had a committee waiting upon us to know why those who had served eleven months could not have it. They thought that was so near the time fixed, they ought to have it, and if we had made it six months that would be right. Then I asked them what those who had served five months would say to that; and if we put it at five months, what those who had served four months would say to that. We should get into the same difficulty precisely; and after establishing a rule by the consent of both Houses, we thought it very unwise to be continually changing it. The effect of changing it will be to give it to everybody.

Mr. CONNESS. The reasoning of the Senator would be very good if this were an original proposition; but as it comes from the House it appears to me that we might readily accede to it, and that the reasoning is not quite so good.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is only the House insisting in another way on doing what they gave up on full conference before.

Mr. CONNESS. But my appeal to the Senator is upon this ground, and I think it is the strong point in the case: that in adopting this proposition of the House we take the more liberal and generous view of the case, and it will only include a few more deserving persons. I need not tell the Senator that those persons regard it like manna from heaven; it is the brightest light that has beamed upon their vision for many a day. I believe that the chairman of the Finance Committee and the Senate are generous enough to accede to this proposition and to include a few more.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It will include a great many more. The proposition, if adopted, will take a great many thousand dollars out of the Treasury. It will include all the first and second class clerks, all the women, all the laborers, all the messengers, all the watchmen, and it is to come, not out of any fund particularly, but out of the Treasury. If you adopt this section, you do not save yourselves from further difficulty, for those who have been there under six months will claim just as much, and you will have the same trouble over again. As we have settled it at this session, it would be most unwise, in my judgment, to allow ourselves to change it. I hope the Senate will strike out this section and not bring up that vexed question again.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fifth section, in the following words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $32,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated to pay Madison Sweetzer, upon condition that the said Madison Sweetzer shall first, by a good and sufficient deed, convey to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to the following lands, conveyed by the United States to Joseph Richardville, sr., and Joseph Richardville, jr., by treaty at St. Mary's, October 6, 1818, to wit: the west half of section No. 23, the east half of section No. 28, and section No. 27, of township five south, range four east, lying in the county of Auglaize and State of Ohio.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason why we struck that out was because it is a private claim.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to amend the section before the vote is taken on striking it out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The proper way would be to allow the vote to be taken on striking it out, and then, if that fails, to move to insert afterward, because this being a private claim—

Mr. SHERMAN. It does not come within the rule as it comes to us in the bill from the House. The Senate rule only applies to amendments offered in the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It comes under the rule of the Finance Committee and which you and I have always acted upon and enforced to the best of our ability.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would always vote to exclude from a House appropriation bill a private claim; but I wish to change the character of this section before the vote is taken on striking it out. That is the easiest form in which to do it. I move to strike out in lines three, four, and five the words "pay Madison Sweetzer upon condition that the said Madison Sweetzer shall, first, by a good and sufficient deed, convey to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to," and insert in lieu thereof "enable the Secretary of the Interior to quiet the title of the occupants of;" so that the section will read:

That the sum of $32,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to quiet the title of the occupants of the following lands, &c.

I examined this question thoroughly this morning in connection with the Senator from Maine, and I am satisfied it would promote the public interest to pass this proposition in some form. The only doubt I had was as to the amount. The facts are about these: in 1816, by an Indian treaty, the United States granted in severalty to the persons named in this bill, two Indians or half-breeds, I am informed, two sections of land in St. Mary's purchase, as it is called. At a subsequent date, in 1826, the United States sold this land to other parties. One of the Indians had died and the other was a minor and did not present or make a claim. He was not in a condition to make it. Subsequently judgment was obtained against the Indian who had undoubtedly the legal title to two sections of land in favor of Madison Sweetzer, a citizen of the State of Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON. How did he get it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Richardville owed money and Sweetzer got a judgment against the Indian, levied it in 1855 upon this land, and sold it. In the mean time the United States had sold it in the ordinary course of settlement of the public lands, and it is now occupied by some twenty-two families and divided into small tracts varying from twenty acres up to one hundred and twenty, and lying near a flourishing village in Ohio. Madison Sweetzer thereupon commenced an action of ejectment against the occupants of this land, and by the judgment of the Supreme Court finally maintained his title and got an order of eviction, and he has now a writ of eviction against the parties in possession of the land, under the decision of the Supreme Court; so that the truth is, the United States having first given this land to an Indian, subsequently sold it, and the title of the Indian is now vested in Madison Sweetzer under a sale upon his judgment. It is manifest, therefore, that the United States must by some rule of law either maintain the title of the present occupants, or pay back the purchase money with interest and such stipulated damages as the law would allow. That is perfectly clear.

Under these circumstances, two years ago a bill passed both Houses authorizing an appraisal of this land upon certain principles in order to ascertain how much the United States ought to pay to protect the settlers who held under the patents of the United States. I am told that the first appraisal was $12,800. This appraisal Madison Sweetzer, who held his writ, refused to take. His title had been perfected by the decisions of the courts and he was entitled to turn these people out of doors, although in all probability, if he were to attempt to do so, it would create trouble and perhaps a riot in the community, as the people were all against his claim. Thereupon the citizens applied for a reappraisal, desiring that Sweetzer's claim might be satisfied and that their title might be protected.

At this session we passed a joint resolution authorizing a reappraisal of the land, directing the appraiser to appraise the value of the land without the improvements. That resolution was referred to the committee of which the Senator from New York [Mr. HARRIS] is chairman, was examined and passed, and approved on the 5th of May last. Under that law, a reappraisal was had, and the appraiser assessed the value of the land, without the improvements at twenty-five dollars an acre, which makes the amount stated here, $32,000. That is now the assessed value; and this section is simply to carry into execution the reappraisal heretofore made under a law of Congress. I doubt very much whether it comes under the title of a private claim; but I will not dispute that matter. There may be some doubt about that; but there is no doubt that the United States ought to protect these persons in their title. They are innocent parties; they bought the land in good faith; in entire ignorance of this prior title, and they ought to be protected in the enjoyment of their rights. The only question with me was, what amount we ought to give Madison Sweetzer; but here we are not in a good position to negotiate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Whom did the settlers buy of?

Mr. SHERMAN. The settlers bought of the United States and hold under the patent of the United States; but this Indian title was prior to the patent, and according to the decision of the court, and no doubt properly rendered, overrides the patent because the first title is under the Indian treaty. Now Madison Sweetzer's judgment is only $6,000, recovered in 1855. The principal and interest of that judgment would only amount to from $10,000 to $12,000; but Madison Sweetzer has got this right, a legal right which he has maintained in the courts, as he says, at great expense, and he refuses to surrender this right for the amount of his judgment and we cannot compel him to do so. He is a citizen of the State of Indiana. I do not know anything of him. At any rate he thinks he has got a good thing, and I presume he is disposed to hold on to it.

Under the circumstances I think we shall have to pay this reappraisal made by a person selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and I think made upon a proper basis. I read this morning the testimony upon which it was based. He assesses the value of the land, without improvements, at twenty-five dollars an acre. I have never been on this land, or probably in the county in which it is, but from my general knowledge of the location I do not think the reappraisal is unreasonable. Twenty-five dollars an acre for unimproved land in that country is not a very high price. It is not more than from fifty to one hundred miles from Dayton, and is in the Miami valley, in a very rich country. Under these circumstances I think we ought to place a sufficient sum in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior to enable him to extinguish this claim of Madison Sweetzer. If he can do it for less, well and good; but if he insists on enforcing his right or having this amount of money we ought to pay it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the United States were represented in these suits on the part of Madison Sweetzer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; the United States always resisted the claim, and it was settled finally by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. RAMSEY. This is the claim of Richardville under one of the Miami treaties.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the name of the Indian.

Mr. RAMSEY. And Madison Sweetzer claims through Richardville. One of the provisions of that treaty, I think, is that the President of the United States shall assent to the alienation by the Indian of his title; is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the subsequent treaty that was made treated Richardville as dead. They assumed a fact that did not exist. This young Richardville, who was one of the grantees, was actually living, and that was proved, as a matter of course, as one of the facts in the case; but in a subsequent treaty they alleged the fact that Richardville was dead.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a sample of the way our Indian treaties are made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. The fact was not so, and Richardville turned up again, contracted debts, and one of his creditors got judgment against him for $6,000 and interest and sold this title under that judgment, and that title has been held by our courts to be good.

Mr. RAMSEY. This claim, I believe, has been before the Indian Bureau and very thoroughly gone into, and there was a report made there. I know nothing about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have here a report made by Mr. Neell in the House of Representatives June 20, 1862, and Congress passed a bill for the relief of these parties and authorized an appraisal; but the trouble was that Madison Sweetzer would not take the amount of the first appraisal. The result was that a new appraisal was ordered and the appraisal amounts to $32,000, twenty-five dollars an acre.

Mr. RAMSEY. The sixth article of the treaty made and concluded at St. Mary's, in the State of Ohio, between Jonathan Jennings, &c., on October 6, 1818, contains this provision:

"ART. 6. The several tracts of land which, by the third article of this treaty"—

The article making the grant to Richardville, under whom this man claims—

"the United States have engaged to grant to the persons therein mentioned, except the tracts to be granted to Jean Bapt. Richardville, shall never be transferred by the said persons or their heirs, without the approbation of the President of the United States."

Now, I am told that approbation has never been had. Why these facts were not made to appear before the court I do not understand. I do not understand that the United States were at all represented there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There was another treaty after that and they bought Richardville out; that is, they made a bargain with the father, and treated the son as dead, because he was a minor.

Mr. RAMSEY. I presume the committee are fully informed of and know all about the investigation on the part of the Indian Bureau here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know nothing about it except what is suggested in these reports.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This has been regarded by Congress, whenever it has been examined, as a very clear case. The simple question is, whether the Government shall make good their own title.

Mr. SHERMAN. Except as to the amount.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Except as to the amount.

Mr. Sweetzer would not take $12,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is so; but there are some facts that the Senate ought to understand. This property was sold by the United States about forty years ago for something like two thousand dollars. It has been in the possession of the claimants, the same persons to whom it was sold, ever since that time. By the laws of Ohio, where a person is evicted the grantor is obliged to pay back the consideration with interest. All the claim there would be upon us would be to pay back the consideration with interest, and at the ordinary rate of price—I do know what it was—

Mr. SHERMAN. Two dollars and a half per acre.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It would not amount to anything like the sum mentioned here. That is really the liability of the United States, supposing they were an individual, to make good to these persons what they have suffered in case of an eviction. It would not be anything like the sum that is here appropriated. There was one appraisal; the land was valued at ten dollars per acre. Mr. Sweetzer would not take it. Somehow or other this Congress—I suppose without knowing much about it—passed a bill for a reappraisal. That has been had, and it has got up to twenty-five dollars per acre. That Mr. Sweetzer says he is willing to take. The only question is this: as there are some twenty families on this tract, will the United States, instead of waiting and taking the consequences of an absolute eviction, if one be had, and then paying the damages which they are legally liable to pay by the laws of Ohio, which would be, comparatively, a small sum, consent to quiet the title by paying this very large sum of $32,000? Would it not be better to let Mr. Sweetzer get possession as he can, and then settle with the claimants on legal principles or even equitable principles, which would not require anything like the sum now demanded? As the Senator from Ohio says, it is a question of how much money we are willing to pay. This is the only way we can settle with Mr. Sweetzer, perhaps; but I am told that Mr. Sweetzer would have a very hard time of it to get possession.

Mr. JOHNSON. We cannot force him to part with his title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Undoubtedly you could not; but you could settle with the occupiers of the land if they were evicted; and you could settle with them, as I have said, for what they originally paid with interest until the time they were evicted, and in addition to that, their improvements, deducting what they have received from the avails of the lands. Their improvements, the Commissioner says, amount to very little, and they have cut off about half the timber on the land, amounting to more than their improvements were worth; so that the legal claim against the United States, in case of an eviction, would amount to very little. Probably Mr. Sweetzer, from what I learn, if he were to undertake to enforce his writ of eviction, would find it pretty hard work without calling out the posse comitatus and having a row. The persons living on the land are not willing to give it up, and the people of the county sustain them in holding on. The question simply is, whether the Congress of the United States will pay this exorbitant sum—there is no doubt about that, in my judgment—to quiet this claim for the benefit of those persons, some twenty families, who hold under the original grant. For my part, I dislike very much being imposed upon, and I would rather take the legal consequences.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Sweetzer will not take less than the reasonable value of the land without the improvements. Now, this is the estimated value of the land without the improvements.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know it is not. I have no faith in the estimate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If he recovers the land he gets the improvements unless the occupant-claimant law of Ohio protects the occupant. I do not know how that is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He has got to settle for the improvements himself.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I was going to inquire about that. An occupying claimant in Ohio coming in would be compelled to pay for the improvements, I think.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I say I do not know what the occupying-claimant law of Ohio is. I have not examined the statutes.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There used to be a law of that kind. I was about to ask the Senator from Ohio about that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But I submit to Senators it would not be just to the occupants of this land to say that "you shall have just the technical rule of law on this subject." I know that in the case of a breach of warranty the rule is purchase money with interest, but perhaps there is no warranty in the patent the Government has given. Perhaps there is no liability on the part of the Government, technically, to that extent. I do not know that there is, because a Government patent is not a warranty deed; but the case is just this: these people have relied upon the title that the Government has given them; we all know the common people think a patent is perfect; they think when they have got a patent that that ends all questions; they rely upon that. They purchased this land. No doubt it has cost these claimants that now occupy the land very much more than what the Government originally got. They have acted on the title of the Government. I think good faith requires it to make that title good to them—not to Mr. Sweetzer. Mr. Sweetzer is not interested in this question. He is willing to get out of the way if he gets the reasonable value of his land. He would rather hold on to the land. He told me so early in this session. He is a citizen of Indiana. He can make more than this out of the land. Almost anywhere in Ohio good land is worth more than twenty-five dollars per acre. We western men all know that. This land will very soon be worth fifty dollars an acre. If the improvements in the neighborhood are going on with any degree of rapidity that land will be worth fifty dollars an acre in two or three years, the way lands are going up. It is for the interest of the Government now to close this matter up, to settle this dispute, and to settle the title in favor of these occupiers, so that they may go and make valuable improvements. The report of the Commissioner shows that improvements in that neighborhood have been delayed by the uncertainty of this title. Good faith, I think, requires the Government to secure to these occupants a title which the patent induced them to believe they received. On that ground I go for it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator whether good faith requires any more from the Government than it requires of him in business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; for the simple reason that our plain, common people, when they see a patent from the Government of the United States, ask no lawyer's opinion about it. They take that as conclusive. It may be foolish on their part; but the patents have so uniformly all over the country proven to be sufficient that they make no inquiry about them. Just show them the great seal from the Land Office, and that is satisfactory; and it is not often that the courts will disturb them either; but in this case the patent is not good, and I think it ought to be made good to these people.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know that I should have said anything in reference to this claim but for a remark of the Senator from Maine, who stated that the bill that had been passed at this session probably was not much considered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I apologize to my friend for the remark.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not ask for any apology; but I wish to say a word in reference to the matter. This subject came before the committee of which I am a member, and I examined the case with as much care as I was able to bestow upon it; and I consulted the Commissioner of the General Land Office in reference to it. There was some evidence before the committee on the subject. I became entirely satisfied that the first appraisal was really not to be relied upon. It was an appraisal made by an officer of the Government; a surveyor, I think. I was satisfied he did not know much about the value of the land. It appeared to the committee that this owner was willing to take the venture of a second appraisal by appraisers to be appointed in an impartial manner. He had remarked that he would take the value of the land as it should be found upon a reappraisal. Under these circumstances I thought the owner was acting fairly, and I thought the Government ought not to insist upon the former appraisal made by one of its own officers, who probably never saw the land and knew nothing about its value. Under these circumstances it was that the committee reported a bill for a reappraisal; and it seems to me good faith toward the settlers upon the land, who have taken the land from the Government and gone on and occupied it, requires that the Government should now pay this appraisal thus made, evidently impartially, and thus relieve these settlers, who have acted in entire good faith, from any further trouble about it. It seems so to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can state that the appraiser appointed, J. F. Kinney, is an employé of the Interior Department, and he went out there and took the testimony of quite a number of witnesses; among the rest, he took the testimony of one or two interested in this matter as settlers; and that testimony is given in a report which is before me. I have no doubt this is about the fair value of the land.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Upon the whole I think we might as well make this appropriation and close this business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee striking out the section as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out the seventh section, in the following words:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason why that was stricken out was that it was a sequence of the other provision, where they had raised the salaries of their employés by a mere resolution; and therefore, unless we struck out this section providing that "the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives," it would not conform, and it is really putting the Capitol police upon the same ground that we object to putting the others upon; that is to say, allowing the House by resolution to raise them. I should have no objection, individually, to this section if it was amended to read in this way, to meet what will probably be done on the other bill:

That the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed by law to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives.

And then if they are raised the Capitol police will be raised also.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think you had better strike it out and let them both be considered in the other bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This will not be considered in the other bill necessarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the other section at any rate. It is twice in this bill about the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where else?

Mr. SHERMAN. In section three. That includes the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have stricken out section three.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but that question is open between the two Houses. It is repeated twice in this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the bill that was sent to the House last night the Senate inserted a clause giving twenty per cent. to its employés. That will undoubtedly afford the House an opportunity to put theirs upon the same level. It is therefore in that bill that that will be considered, and not in this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke of the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; if we insert in this section the words "allowed by law" and we amend the other bill as is proposed by giving the employés twenty per cent., the Capitol police will get that; if we do not, they will stand as the others do.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the committee was right in striking them out and leaving them to the committee of conference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The question would not necessarily arise before a committee of conference, because no amendment was made with reference to the Capitol police.

Mr. POLAND. I quite agree with the Senator from Maine in saying that the House has no right to raise the wages of the employés of the House without our consent. It is done by law, and they cannot make a law alone, and the mode in which they have undertaken it is irregular; but upon the bill that we passed last night we provided that the employés of the Senate should have twenty per cent. in addition to what is now provided by law. I shall, at the proper time, move an amendment proposing to give twenty per cent. in addition to the employés, clerks, and other officers of the House of Representatives, including the Capitol police. I cannot offer my amendment until we get through with the committee's amendments, but I shall propose an amendment to this bill, which the House will have to concur in to make it a law, that the employés of the House shall have the same per cent. addition to what is now provided by law that we have given to ours.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The result will be that you bring the same subject to be dispatched in two bills. They have already gone on the miscellaneous bill in which we have made a provision for the officers, clerks, &c., of the Senate.

Mr. POLAND. But there is nothing in it in relation to the officers of the House or the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; it has been sent to the House, and the understanding is that they will on that move an amendment giving the same compensation to their officers.

Mr. POLAND. I have become a little shy of understandings.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was supposed to be the course that would be taken with a view to avoid this difficulty that arises here. If it is not done there, it will not be done here. There is no use of putting on both.

Mr. POLAND. If it is not done there and it is not done here it will not be done at all, and I propose that it shall be.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If they disagree to it in that bill they will disagree to it in this.

Mr. POLAND. I propose that it shall be put on this bill and we shall get together somewhere. There is no danger of doing it twice.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think there is very great awkwardness in doing the same thing twice, and I do not want to have both bills burdened and debated about the same thing. Besides, it is not customary. I have never known an instance in which the Senate undertook to fix the compensation of the officers or clerks of the House, or the House the officers and clerks of the Senate. That is a new idea. It is always left to each branch to settle that matter, and if there is a dispute it is settled in a conference.

Mr. POLAND. The House have undertaken to do that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all.

Mr. POLAND. They have undertaken to fix the wages of the employés of their department, and we say they have not done it in a legal way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator in his inexperience is introducing a totally new practice into the Senate and into Congress. In all my experience here I never saw it attempted in either House to fix the compensation of the employés of the other.

Mr. POLAND. I do not care about the employés of the House; they may take care of themselves. I will restrict my amendment to the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I will ask the Senator: suppose the amendment with regard to the officers, clerks, &c., should fail, does he mean to give the twenty per cent. to the Capitol police and not to the others?

Mr. POLAND. We shall get together about that. I do not apprehend any difficulty. If they are left off in both bills they will be very sure not to get it; but if they are kept on both, I think we shall contrive some way by which they shall get it but once.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was instructed by the committee to move to strike out this section; but as we have now passed this additional compensation for our employés, I thought the better way was simply to insert the words "by law," so that the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed by law. Then if we fix upon the other bill the extra compensation of the officers and clerks of the two Houses, the Capitol police get it; if we do not fix it, they do not get it.

Mr. POLAND. I should like to inquire if we fail to put them on this bill and the House fail to put them on the other bill, how they are going to get it at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They will be on this bill if the words "by law" are inserted in this section, and they will get whatever the law fixes as the extra compensation of the other employés.

Mr. POLAND. If I understand it, the provision in their favor in this bill is stricken out on the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But if a law is passed in either bill, then they will get the benefit of this twenty per cent.; if it is not passed, they do not.

Mr. POLAND. I do not understand that you propose to pass any such law. Any proposition to cover these officers must be in one or the other of these bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is in the bill we finished last night with regard to the Capitol police and the employés of the Senate. The House will undoubtedly put on to that the employés of the House. Then, if that is agreed to, and probably it will be, it will be a law.

Mr. POLAND. Where are the Capitol police to stand?

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are then to take advantage of that law and get the same twenty per cent.

Mr. POLAND. They are not named in the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are named in this bill, and whatever is fixed by law as extra compensation for the others they will receive the same.

Mr. JOHNSON. Where is the same provision in this bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Section seven.

Mr. POLAND. If I understand the effect of the amendment you proposed, it was to strike out everything in reference to the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; I propose, instead of striking out the section, to insert the words "by law" after "allowed," and let it stand, "that the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed by law to officers," &c., instead of standing as it does now, allowed by a resolution of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is all right and will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will cover it certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine proposes to amend the section by inserting in line two, after the word "allowed," the words "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to add after the word "police," in the first line of that section, the words "and two policemen at the Executive Mansion." They discharge the same duty and perhaps more duty than the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We are providing here for the Capitol and not going any further than that, and in a bill which we have passed at this session we fixed the salaries at the President's Mansion just as they asked for them precisely, and they all professed to be satisfied with them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. They are fixed at just the same that the Capitol police here get, I understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why go to the Executive Mansion and the Departments in this matter, where we are merely acting for the Capitol? I do not want to burden this bill with other matters.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senator is mistaken. I think that the bill he refers to fixes the compensation of the messengers at the Executive Mansion, but not the policemen. My amendment is to provide for two policemen who have been detailed for service at the Executive Mansion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We provided for them in the executive bill. Their salaries are all fixed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This session?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir; of all the officers there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think not these two policemen. One of them spoke to me about it, and said they rendered more arduous service than the policemen do here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What I object to is to traveling outside of the object of this provision and beginning with the policemen there. The next thing will be that somebody will speak to a Senator about the policemen in the Departments, and so it will go on. This is confined to the officers, clerks, and policemen of the Capitol.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Executive Mansion ought to stand, in that regard, precisely with the Capitol. I think they ought to have the same compensation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have provided exceedingly liberally for everything about the Executive Mansion, just as it was asked for.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think you are mistaken about these policemen.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator from Maine will excuse me, I can add a little information on this subject. The fact appears to be this: when the guard of soldiers that attended at the Executive Mansion were relieved there were two policemen deputed to serve there; it was deemed prudent to have them there; and there is no provision for their compensation by any existing law; and therefore, unless the words suggested by the Senator from Indiana are added, those two persons will have no compensation. That is all there is in it. I got this information from an undoubted source.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It cannot be so.

Mr. CONNESS. It is so.

Mr. HENDRICKS, [to Mr. FESSENDEN.] You had better let it go in any way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If that is the fact I will not object. I will send for my clerk and find out. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana be laid over at present until we can get some information about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over by general consent, if there be no objection.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Do the words "Capitol police" in this section include those employed in the grounds as well as in the building?

Mr. FESSENDEN. All around the Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the seventh section, as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to insert after section seven the following words:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a verbal amendment, and will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the bill the following:

For contingent expenses of the Senate, namely: For the Senate folding-room, $5,000. For additional messengers during the session, $5,000.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to move an amendment to that amendment. I will state that my amendment is to correct a mistake or an error in the motion of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES,] who suggested an increase of twenty per cent. in the compensation of the employés of the Senate. It appears that there are seven or eight additional messengers whose compensation is not provided by law, and it has been ascertained this morning that the motion of the Senator from Iowa does not meet their case; that they will necessarily be left out; and it is to perfect his motion that I offer this amendment. It was thought that they would be unable to get it perfected in the other bill. My amendment is to insert at the end of the amendment of the committee the following:

And such messengers and other employés and clerks of committees whose compensation has not been otherwise increased at this session of Congress shall receive twenty per cent. in addition to the compensation heretofore allowed, commencing the first Monday in December, 1865.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the word "dollars" in line eleven, page 12, I move to insert the following:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the compensation of the clerk engaged in the sale of internal revenue stamps in the office of the United States Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator from California will give me his attention for one moment, I will now read the provision in regard to the policemen at the Executive Mansion. We inserted in the Senate the following amendment on the legislative appropriation bill, which was agreed to by the House:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to pay two policemen at the President's House, $2,640.

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to pay two policemen at the President's House (one from August 24, the other from November 23, 1865, to June 30, 1866, $2,023 34.

Mr. CONNESS. All I have got to say is the very highest compliment to the committee; it is all right.

Mr. CRESWELL. I desire now to go back to the amendment which was passed over in lines eighty-four, eighty-five, and eighty-six of the first section. In lieu of those lines I move to insert the following:

The compensation of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims shall be $3,500, payable quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

It appears that upon the establishment of this court in 1855 there was authorized to be appointed a solicitor of the Court of Claims alone; but it was soon found that it was impossible for him properly to discharge the duties; and the next year authority was given for the appointment by the President of an assistant solicitor of the Court of Claims, and also authority given to the solicitor himself to appoint a deputy. The assistant was to receive under the law of 1856 $3,500, and the deputy $2,500. By subsequent legislation in 1863 it was enacted:

"That the solicitor, assistant solicitor, and deputy solicitor of said court shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and it shall be their duty faithfully and diligently to defend the United States in all matters and cases before said Court of Claims, and in all cases taken by appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court; and no other fee or compensation than the salary of said solicitor and assistant and deputy solicitors shall hereafter, in any case, be paid to either of them, and no fee or compensation for services in either the Supreme Court or Court of Claims shall hereafter be allowed or paid in any case by the United States."

By this last enactment it will be observed that these three officers are put on precisely the same basis, all appointed by the President, and all have exactly the same duties to perform. Of course, the solicitor is the chief officer, who directs the operations of the other two; but the same duties being required of all these officers it seems to me to be eminently just that the deputy solicitor should receive the same salary as the assistant solicitor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What does the assistant solicitor receive?

Mr. CRESWELL. Thirty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The provision in the bill is that he shall receive the same salary as the solicitor. What does the solicitor receive?

Mr. CRESWELL. Thirty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What does the deputy solicitor receive?

Mr. CRESWELL. Twenty-five hundred dollars; and this amendment is to raise his salary to $3,500, the same as the assistant receivers. The duties incumbent on those officers are very onerous.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The increase should be made to commence "from and after the 30th day of June, 1866."

Mr. CRESWELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary reported in favor of a similar proposition to this, which was inserted in a bill that was passed by the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I presume it is all right, but I wish to put it in a shape in which it will be intelligible.

Mr. CRESWELL. Very well; I will modify my amendment so as to make it read:

The compensation of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims, shall be, from and after June 30, 1866, $3,500, payable quarterly out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The provision in the bill refers to the "assistant solicitor." Are you sure which one it is?

Mr. CRESWELL. The eighty-fourth line refers to the deputy solicitor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know; but the rest of the provision speaks of the assistant. Which is it?

Mr. CRESWELL. It is the deputy.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The assistant solicitor now receives $3,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then you have got it right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following amendment to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to the several clerks of the State Department twenty per cent. of the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 30th of June, 1866, and to continue until repealed by Congress; and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. President, I observe on page 7 of this bill that there is an appropriation for an additional twenty per cent. compensation to the messenger of the Court of Claims. There is one instance. Then on page 9 there is an appropriation for increased compensation of the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is to meet an existing law. We have to pay them the salaries provided for by law.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that; but there has been a law giving an increased compensation in that case. Then again on page 12 we have a provision "for salaries of additional clerks and additional compensation of officers and clerks in the Treasury, &c., $10,000." I will say nothing now in behalf of the proposition that I have sent to the Chair. It was so thoroughly discussed yesterday and two days ago, when first introduced, that I believe the Senate fully understand it. I hope, however, that they will not now hesitate to adopt it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is that last provision you referred to? Where do you find it?

Mr. SUMNER. On page 12, from line seven to line eleven.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has been my fortune to be in the District for the last eight or ten years and to be very familiar with the officers of the State Department particularly. It has been rendered necessary by professional as well as public business. I do not think that there are more competent clerks to be found anywhere. Many of them are men of very distinguished capacity. I have always been surprised that men of that standing, intellectually and morally, would remain in the office for the salaries they get. They are barely able to live at all by the strictest economy. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I sincerely hope that this amendment will not be adopted. If we begin with the Departments, we have got to go through with them. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] has given notice that he shall move as an amendment the bill for the reorganization of the Interior Department. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] will move the twenty per cent. additional, or something similar to it, for the reorganization of the War Department. Now, if you begin that kind of legislation on this bill for the Departments, the Senate can see where it will go. I should think they had experience enough of such legislation on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which we have just passed, not to be very desirous of entering into it again. If we do enter upon it, it is impossible to foresee when we shall get through or where it will end.

Now, sir, we have no statement from anybody of what the classification of these clerks is, what salaries they now receive, what duties they perform, or anything about it. We have simply the statement of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations, that they are a very accomplished set of gentlemen and render good service. When the question is put what each one in detail receives he is not prepared to say.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not heard any statement, at any rate. We do not know what the rates of salaries paid there are. It has not been communicated to the Senate. Before the Senate act on this question we ought to know what the number of clerks is and what they severally receive. The objection, however, which I have to it is to legislating for the Departments in this way. In some of the Departments I know that the large body of the clerks receive as much as they ought to receive. Take the Treasury Department, for instance. The only use of the additional appropriation made there, as I have often explained, is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the higher class of clerks that he could not keep without it. We have given no twenty per cent. to the lower class of clerks; we have given no twenty per cent. to the clerks in the War Department; we have given no twenty per cent. to the clerks in the Interior Department; we do not propose to do it; and yet the State Department is singled out on account of the labors there, which certainly, to say the least or most of it, cannot exceed the labors that have been performed in the War Department and in the other Departments for the last four years. The State Department has had, comparatively, a very easy time of it, and always has an easy time of it. If they are so superior to the clerks in the other Departments and have these interesting duties to perform, which are so gratifying to gentlemen of taste and scholarship, &c., it is all for their advantage, and I should not think it was wise to give them the additional advantage of putting upon them an increase in this way which you do not propose to give to the clerks in the other Departments. At all events, I am exceedingly anxious that we should not begin that kind of legislation for the Departments, at least upon this bill, for there is no knowing where it will end, or when we shall get through with the bill if we attempt it.

Mr. SUMNER. We have begun this kind of legislation, in the first place, for ourselves, and we have begun it, in the second place, for the servants and employés of the Senate. I think, having done that, our mouths are closed. We have got to go forward and meet every case on the principles of justice.

Now, sir, in bringing forward the proposition that I have, I do not intend, by suggestion or implication, to intimate anything against any similar proposition with reference to any other Department. I have brought forward this proposition because the subject was specially referred to the committee with which I am connected on a petition from the clerks of this Department. That petition was presented now many months ago. It has been considered more than once in the committee, and I was instructed to make the motion which I have now made. That explains my position in this matter. I have had before me no petition from any other Department. I am not instructed by the committee which I represent here to speak for any other Department. I move what I have moved according to the instructions which I have received, and the evidence before that committee. That is the reason why I confine my motion to the State Department.

But the Senator from Maine says that he has no information with regard to the compensation of these clerks. Why, sir, he knows very well what the compensation of clerks is. It is the compensation of the clerks in the other Departments. There are the fourth-class clerks who receive $1,800, the third-class clerks who receive $1,600, the second class who receive $1,400, and the first class who receive $1,200. There are no heads of bureaus in the State Department, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to that. I mentioned it last night. In the other Departments there are, and these heads of bureaus, I need not remind you, receive $3,000, $4,000, $5,000, and there is one at least who receives $6,000. Now, there are very important services rendered by certain clerks in the State Department—services comparable to those of heads of bureaus which, in any other Department, would be performed by the head of a bureau.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator why he has not done like the other committees having charge of other Departments—brought in a bill to reorganize the State Department?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator puts me another question, why I have not brought in a bill to reorganize the State Department? I alluded the other day, or last night, I forget which, somewhat to the history of the State Department in that connection. The idea is not a new one to reorganize it. It was a favorite one of Mr. Webster. He did propose at one time to reorganize it and commenced a work to that end, but he never completely carried out his idea, and the State Department has gone on now for a generation without any change or modification or open attempt at reorganization. I think it ought to be reorganized, but the measure that I propose is not as radical as that which the Senator from Maine invites. If I should propose a reorganization, involving as it would the payment of some considerable salaries, $3,000, $4,000, or $5,000 to certain persons, I should expect to encounter his most fervid opposition. I make no such proposition. I simply ask the Senate to add twenty per cent. to the compensation that these faithful servants now receive. In adding that twenty per cent. you simply follow the precedent you have set with regard to your employés in this Chamber and also with regard to other employés elsewhere. I do not see how you can resist the precedent. I do not see how you can untie your hands. You have tied your hands upon this question. When you voted what you did for your own employés, when you voted still more what you did for yourselves, you incapacitated yourselves from denying this addition of twenty per cent. to those faithful servants.

On another occasion I went at very considerable length—I think the Senator from Maine was not here; I do not know that I said anything, of course, that he would value—but I went at some length into some of the considerations why these clerks should receive an additional compensation. I set forth the work they were called to perform, and how immensely that work had increased during the last five or six years. I had in my hand at the time the statistics on the subject, which Senators will remember I read. I called attention then to the increase of prices in provisions and in everything else to which they were subjected, without any increase of compensation, and I think I referred to some of them as being so situated, having large families, that they were actually pinched by poverty and hardly able to get along. I know among them some cases that do appeal most powerfully to one's sympathies; and therefore I speak now, not only from my sense of justice to them, believing that they do deserve this increase, but I speak also with a sympathy for men who I know have been subjected to grinding poverty.

Now, sir, I make this appeal sincerely to the Senate. I hope they will not let this opportunity pass. Do not answer me by saying that the Interior Department ought to have the same, or the War Department the same. I am not going to argue that question. If you think they ought to have the same, make the motion; I shall not oppose you. I offer the amendment which I do on the evidence which has been laid before the committee which I represent. Had I had further evidence with reference to other Departments and proper instructions from the committee, I should have made my proposition broader.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say half past seven.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If anybody wants to meet at seven, make it seven o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Several of us cannot get back to the Senate Chamber by seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. Then I will say half past seven.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

FONTAINE T. FOX, JR.

Mr. DAVIS. Before we proceed with the regular order of business, I move to take up House joint resolution No. 164, which is to pay a little claim of $200 or $300; it has already been passed by the House and favorably reported on by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the proper accounting officers to pay to Fontaine T. Fox, jr., late aid-de-camp to Brigadier General W. T. Ward, a sum equal to the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant and aid-de-camp, from the 8th day of October, 1861, to the 8d day of April, 1862.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEBRASKA INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. WADE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 761) authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities, to report it back without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to instruct the Secretary of War to examine, adjust, and allow the expenditures and liabilities of the Territory of Nebraska, made and incurred in the year 1864, for the pay, equipment, and maintenance of territorial troops in the suppression of Indian hostilities and protection of the lives and property of citizens of the United States exposed to the attacks of the confederated tribes. The amount so allowed, when approved by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, is to be paid into the territorial treasury by a warrant payable to the order of the Governor of that Territory, and is to be in full for all claims in the premises on the part of the Territory or the troops thereof. But no allowance is to be made for troops beyond the companies called out by the Governor in that year, and placed under the command of the general commanding the troops of the United States in that Territory; nor is any rate of pay or expenses of any kind to be allowed higher or greater than those allowed by law to like troops regularly enlisted in the service of the United States. Forty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated to carry out the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised there is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WADE. I do not know that there is anything in the shape of a report, but all the original papers in the case are here. I presume it is all right. It only requires the claim to be settled according to what the officers find the facts to be.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not want to object to it, but I think the Senator had better put it in the same shape other bills are for Massachusetts, Iowa, Oregon, and Missouri—authorize the Secretary of War to investigate the subject and report at the next session of Congress. I do not want to object to the bill, but this is a departure from the uniform custom on such bills as the Committee on Military Affairs have been in the habit of reporting to the Senate, which all the Senate have concurred in.

Mr. WADE. I do not know of any other except in this shape.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, one for my own State, one for Oregon, one for Massachusetts, one for Missouri, and I do not know how many others have been passed in the shape I suggested. I do not interpose any objection to the bill if the Senate see fit to pass it in its present shape, but it is a departure from the uniform practice.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have it read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. WADE. It seems to me a carefully drawn bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not object to it.

Mr. WADE. If there is no objection to it I hope it will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 89) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Cheney;

A bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) for the relief of the officers of the thirteenth regiment of the United States colored heavy artillery;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 202) in relation to brevet appointments and commissions in the United States Army;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 142) respecting the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SUMNER, to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That there be paid to the several clerks of the Department of State, twenty per cent. of the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 30th of June, 1866, and to continue until repealed by Congress; and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to insert after "State" the words "and Navy Department."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am opposed to the amendment to the amendment, as I am to the original amendment. If one is wrong, the other is, and I do not want to give additional strength by having the two coupled together, which it might or might not do; I do not know how that would be.

My friend from Massachusetts closed his speech with an appeal to the Senate to do justice as he called it, and I hope really that the Senate will endeavor to do so. I also appeal to the Senate to keep this bill free from additional legislation. The argument is quite as strong with reference to other Departments as it is with regard to the State Department. According to the Senator's own statement the salaries are the same, and Senators may very easily see from the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Iowa what the result must necessarily be. We must spend the night here in squabbling over proposed amendments to put on the other Departments.

Now, sir, in the first place, as I understand it, I have seen no recommendation from the head of any one Department recommending a general increase of the salaries of the clerks. The Senator from Massachusetts has not told us that the Secretary of State recommends this increase. We have no such recommendation from the Secretary of War; and I know that the Secretary of the Treasury has made no such recommendation. There is one thing they do desire, probably, and that is that there shall be an increased compensation given in a few special cases. If Congress chooses to do that, I have no objection; but I have an objection to reorganizing the Departments on a bill of this description. It is bad and hasty legislation.

But the Senator has used one or two arguments to which I beg leave to allude. He says, in the first place, that we have raised the salaries of ourselves. So far as that is concerned I am not responsible for it, for one; but it is not done yet; it is only done so far as the Senate is concerned. In the next place, if that has been done, or is considered as having been done, it is, I suppose, because a majority of the Senate thought that we were not well enough paid; and we are the judges of that. There is no other tribunal to appeal to. We recommend it and act upon it. We are the head of this department in reference to that matter. So with regard to the clerks and employes here. We think that their pay is too low and that it should be raised. We act in a double capacity in these cases; but no head of any of the Executive Departments has recommended to my knowledge any general increase of the salaries of the employes in the Departments. I know with regard to the Treasury it is not so, and I know, moreover, that if applied to one Department it must go through all of them necessarily. This is a general increase of salary, because the argument is used, and used with great effect, "You have begun with one Department; apply it to the others; treat us all alike." That is the result of it, and it is very difficult to resist the argument, because they are equally meritorious. Now, I know with reference to the Treasury Department that it is merely in a very great degree a waste of money to do any such thing; that a large number, and the largest number, much the largest number of the clerks in that Department are paid to-day all that they ought to be paid; and to tender them twenty per cent. increase is merely taking money out of the Treasury because we happen to take a fancy to take it out to give those who serve the public, with no reason whatever to justify it.

The argument that we have placed $160,000 at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of increasing salaries does not apply. That is not for a general increase of salaries; it is for the purpose of avoiding the increase of salaries, and I put it on that ground in the Senate. There are certain clerks to whom you must pay more to keep them; there is also a necessity for temporary clerks to be employed there; and it was with reference to those cases that that amount of money is placed at the disposal of the Secretary, not to raise salaries generally but to avoid the necessity of it, and thus save money; and so it will prove in all the other Departments. And yet here is a proposition to put on this twenty per cent., beginning with the State Department, not called for, not asked for by the head of that Department, because the clerks apply to a committee of this body, and thus we begin a system which must necessarily be carried through. I have had occasion to remark before that in my judgment on the main question we are getting into the habit of dealing with a very lavish hand, carelessly, with regard to the public money—very much so in the other House, in my judgment, and not less so in this. Times have changed, and we have changed with them. Before the war we used to hesitate about appropriations, examine something about them; gentlemen considered themselves the guardians of the public Treasury and were averse to making appropriations. Now the race seems to be who shall be foremost in making appropriations out of the public Treasury, who shall exhibit the greatest zeal to take money out of the Treasury at this time to put into the hands of somebody, and now absolutely in this case we go hunting up persons to whom to give the public money. I think that is worth being considered.

But, sir, what I have principally to deal with is the fact that in this kind of legislation upon these bills we are following an exceedingly bad precedent. The Senate is getting out of its usual strictness on that subject, and we are running into very dangerous territory indeed in the way of legislation. I have no unwillingness to have these Departments reorganized. I shall be glad to aid in doing it; I think they need it; but let it be done systematically; let it be done for some good reason, and let us not, to avoid the trouble incident to that, just take the whole in a sweeping clause and apply it.

Sir, if we have done wrong in increasing by a vote of the Senate, so far as that could do it, our own pay and that of our own employes, it is no reason why we should do wrong in another direction. The Senator says, having begun we must go on. We had better retrace our steps if they are in a wrong direction. The doctrine that we must go on in wrong, if wrong, because we have begun, is not exactly to my mind a legislative idea. It is to be presumed whatever we have done we have done for good reasons, satisfactory to ourselves as applied to the individual case or cases; and it by no means follows that because we are satisfied of it in one case we must do it in all others. I think the experience the Senate had in the civil or miscellaneous appropriation bill for the last three days, when we went staggering, and I had almost said blundering, on in it, and came to a point almost where it seemed to be impossible to pass the bill, would be enough to warn us not to attempt to follow in the same course with regard to another bill at this period of the session, and really—I use the language of my friend, though I cannot use it so pathetically as he did—I do appeal to the Senate to keep the bill clear from amendments of this description.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, there is one general remark that I would make in reply to what has fallen from the Senator from Maine. He complains of the disposition which is now so prevalent to increase the compensation of public servants. Sir, we cannot forget that we are at this moment in what I may call a transition period, passing from the old time to the new time, from the old system to the new system, and the incident of that transition period is a change in prices and the consequent necessity of an increased compensation for public servants. Sir, you will not do your duty as legislators if you do not take into consideration that condition of things and its essential incidents. When the Senator from Maine reminds us of the present disposition to make these appropriations he must not forget that that disposition arises from the nature of things. We are in a period of transition; we must not be insensible to it; we must accommodate ourselves to it. That is the first remark I have to make in reply to the Senator from Maine.

But the Senator goes further and says that if we make an appropriation for the employes in the State Department, we must make it for the employes in other Departments of the Government. Sir, that does not follow. It may be so, I admit, but it does not follow necessarily. It may be that the need of these appropriations is greater in one Department than in another. But, sir, admit that we must follow this example and make these appropriations in other Departments, is that any answer to the case that I present? Not at all, sir. Let us go forward and consider the case of each Department on its own merits, and if on these merits we must make this appropriation let us make it twenty per cent. The Senator from Maine gives us his testimony with regard to one Department with which he has been so honorably associated. I refer to the Treasury Department. He says that he knows that the clerks in that Department as a body do not deserve this addition. Very well, sir; then it must not be made. I accept his testimony on that case, but there is no such testimony on the case which I now have the honor of presenting.

And that brings me to another point made by the Senator from Maine. He says that this appropriation is not recommended by the head of the Department. Sir, let me state how this appropriation is recommended. It comes before the Senate first on the petition of the clerks themselves. The petition was duly presented many months ago; it was referred to the appropriate committee; the committee took it into most careful consideration, not once or twice but several times, and finally directed the report which I have made, and which is now under consideration in the amendment moved. They have directed me to press that. This case, therefore, is presented to the Senate by one of the committees of this body.

What more, sir, do you need? The Senator from Maine says that it is not urged or recommended by the head of the Department. It is recommended by a committee of this body, having that subject specially in charge. But the Senator is entirely mistaken when he says that it is not recommended by the head of the Department. The head of the Department, it is true, has not in a formal letter recommended it to the Senate. He felt a motive of delicacy on the subject, and declined thus directly to interfere, but he has, in a letter addressed to the committee, expressed a strong desire that this appropriation should be made. Sir, I have not introduced this testimony before in this argument, and I do it now only in direct reply to the Senator from Maine, who virtually challenged it by saying in advance, or complaining in advance, that no such recommendation has been made.

I believe that I have now answered point by point all that the Senator from Maine has said. There is one other circumstance connected with this case to which I call attention. The number of employes or clerks in the other Departments, especially in the Treasury and the Interior, is very great. When you undertake to deal with their case you have a very large question, but the number employed in the State Department is comparatively limited. I have in my hands now a list of all those employes. From this list it appears that there are distributed annually among the twenty-five permanent clerks in the State Department for salaries, $41,000. You have there twenty-five permanent clerks of the State Department, among whom are distributed $41,000; and it is now proposed to add to that sum total twenty per cent. Sir, the appropriation is small. I think it hardly justifies the protracted debate which it has had now running over portions of three different days. The Senator inquired this afternoon in debate not only as to the number of these clerks but what they received. I had not at the time a memorandum of what they received, but I have received it since. I have already given the sum total received by the twenty-five permanent clerks, $41,000. Of this sum the chief clerk receives $2,200; the disbursing clerk, $2,000; the superintendent of statistics, $2,000; then there are eight clerks of the fourth class at $1,800 each, making $14,400 which that class receives; then there are nine clerks of the third class at $1,600 each, receiving a sum total of $14,400; then there are three clerks of the second class at $1,400 each, making a sum total in that class of $4,200; then there are three clerks of the first class at $1,200 each, making a sum total in that class of $3,600; the whole being a sum total of $41,000 distributed among twenty-five permanent clerks. There is then an Immigration Bureau with one clerk of the fourth class at $1,800, and one of the first at $1,200, making a total sum in that bureau of $3,000. There are also temporary clerks, about eight, who receive four dollars a day when they work full days, and proportionately for parts of days. And lastly, there are a few, say three or four, temporary clerks who copy for the compensation of ten cents a folio of one hundred words. Among these public servants there are many who have given their life to the service. At the head of the list is William Hunter, chief clerk, who has served in that Department thirty-six years.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator how much he gets under the present law.

Mr. SUMNER. Twenty-two hundred dollars.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the law has been changed.

Mr. SUMNER. He gets $2,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. Thirty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The change was made at this session.

Mr. SUMNER. That has not yet gone into operation. The Senator will remember that we created a new office of Second Assistant Secretary of State which it was expected that he would fill.

Among these is Robert S. Chew, who has been in the service thirty-two years; William Hogan, who has been in the service eleven years; R. S. Chilton, who has been in the service fourteen years; H. D. J. Pratt, who has been in the service fifteen years; Thomas C. Cox, who has been in the service eleven years; John P. Polk, who has been in the service eighteen years. However, sir, I will not follow out this narrative. I merely call attention to the length of service of these gentlemen as furnishing evidence of their fidelity to the Government by the extent by which, if I may say so, they have embodied themselves and their lives in the public service so that they have been so completely identified with it that they cannot easily pass from it into any other career of life. There they are, sir. You have had not only the flower of their years but almost the fruit of their existence on earth; and it seems to me that such public servants before they die do deserve a certain consideration from the Government which they have so faithfully served.

As I stated this morning, if we had bureaus in the State Department; if that Department was organized as the Treasury Department is organized, so as to furnish a place at $6,000 a year or $3,000 or $4,000 a year for the head of a bureau, these valued public servants would find perhaps a certain reward for their services; but there are no such bureaus in the State Department. All there are on a certain equality, a certain dead level; they range as clerks and nothing else, and they have only the pay of clerks; and my motion now is to add to that compensation twenty per cent. additional.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Independent of the objections that have been urged to this amendment by the Senator from Maine, there is one that has considerable weight upon my mind which has not been mentioned. I conceive this to be a vicious and unjust mode of compensation. Different employes in all the Departments now receive a different compensation; some are paid $3,000 or $4,000 a year, others are paid $1,500 or $1,200 a year, showing that there is a difference in the value of the services of these different employes. This amendment proposes to pay to each one of them twenty per cent. without respect to the value of the services of either one of them. It may be and I presume it is the fact that there are persons in the State Department who on account of their abilities and their experience ought to have their salaries increased perhaps $500 or $1,000, and I have no doubt that there are others in the State Department, as in every other Department, who receive a full equivalent for their labor.

That is undoubtedly true as to the Treasury Department, and I have no doubt it is true as to all the Departments; and if it be necessary to raise the compensation of any of the employes in any of the Departments let each Department be reorganized; let a salary be attached to each office according to the responsibility of the individual who fills that office; let the man who is required to exercise skill, who is required to have peculiar abilities or great learning, be paid a sum that will be an adequate compensation for what he brings into the performance of his duty, and let those who perform nothing but manual or mechanical labor be paid according to the value of their services. Last night we passed an amendment providing that twenty per cent. should be added to the compensation of the employes of the Senate. I voted against that amendment; I regard it as entirely unjust. I am willing to say, by way of an illustration, that our chief clerk, for instance, in my judgment, should have his salary raised $500 or $1,000, while there are messengers and persons employed about this Capitol who, in my judgment, receive every cent that their labor is worth, and yet he, notwithstanding the responsibilities of his position, notwithstanding the experience and skill which he is required to bring to the performance of his duties, receives his twenty per cent., while pages and the men who perform nothing about this Capitol but manual labor receive the same addition to their salaries. I object to this mode of compensation. Let the State Department be reorganized; let each office have a salary attached to it according to its individual importance in the Department; so of the Treasury Department, the Navy Department, and all the Departments, and that is the only way in which justice can be done.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to withdraw the amendment I proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was very anxious for an early adjournment, but I now rather regret that a day is fixed. I think if this session were to be continued four or five days longer perhaps we could come to an understanding on this most difficult question of the relation of the clerks of the State Department to the Government. [Laughter.] That is the only regret I have that the session is to come to a close on Saturday. The Senate has very fully expressed its views on several occasions; the Senator from Massachusetts has given us the benefit of his learning and the force of his argument on this question, how many times I will not undertake to say; and I think he might come to the conclusion that possibly the Senate understands, to say the least of it, the borders of this great and troublesome and difficult subject. He has shown by giving a statement of the facts that the clerical force of the State Department is the best paid clerical force in Washington. He says there are eight clerks who get the highest clerical salary, $1,800. One of the eight gets $2,000. Then there are nine that get the next highest salary of $1,600. Then there are three who get the next highest salary of $1,400, and only three who get the lowest salary of $1,200, while I suppose in the Treasury Department there are a thousand men working at $1,200 a year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The clerks of the State Department are the best paid in proportion to those of any Department there is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not know so much about it until the Senator made his statement. That statement has shown the facts that this Department is the best paid Department in the Government. He says it has no bureaus. Take one of the bureaus in the Treasury Department; the bureau of the Second Auditor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Notwithstanding the small number there, it has, by the legislation of this year, two Assistant Secretaries and one examiner of claims at $3,000, the ordinary pay of the head of a bureau.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was not aware of that fact; but take the Senator's own argument: he says it has no bureaus. Take one of the bureaus of the Treasury Department, the Second Auditor's, where they settle bounties and the like. I guess there are four hundred clerks, perhaps, in that bureau, and they are nearly all $1,200 clerks. If we are going to correct this thing, we had better do it upon some system and principle; we cannot do it in this way properly, and I think we might as well go on and make an appropriation bill of this.

I cannot say that it is particularly gratifying to my taste that whenever the Senator alludes to this interesting and delicate question, he says that Senators have voted to increase their own pay. What connection has that with this? What connection have the accomplishments required for a United States Senator with those of a clerk in a Department? I cannot see the force of the argument. Senators are presumed to bring to this body experience and learning; some from the professions, some from the commercial and manufacturing pursuits of the country. I should like very well that at an early hour we could get through with this bill; and if we can just get through this troublesome question, the greatest of all questions, the like of which is not known in our legislation, I have some hopes that we can get through the bill at a reasonable hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. Wait till that is disposed of.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Very well; I will not propose it.

Mr. WILLEY. I desire to direct the attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to the phraseology of his amendment. It seems to me a literal interpretation of his amendment as it is there, instead of increasing the compensation of the clerks in the State Department would diminish it. As I understand it, it is that "twenty per cent. of the compensation" now received by them shall be paid. I suggest to him that what I understand to be the design of the amendment is that an amount equal to twenty per cent. of all they now get be added to their present compensation. If I heard the amendment read correctly it simply is a direction to pay to the clerks twenty per cent. of the compensation now received by them.

Mr. SUMNER. I have already corrected it so as to meet the criticism of the Senator, though he will pardon me if I say that I think the criticism was not applicable. The salary which they receive now of course stands on the law, and this would be an appropriation of twenty per cent. further, but to obviate all doubt I have put in the word "additional."

Mr. McDOUGALL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after "State" the words "and of the Treasury, Interior, War, and Post Office Departments, and in the office of the Attorney General." I offer this amendment in good faith. I concur with the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, who appears simply in behalf of the State Department; but what is true of the State Department is true of all employes of the Government, as well as the employes of this body. The same reasoning applies equally well. The clerks employed in any of the Departments of our Government do not receive compensation enough for reasonable subsistence and clothing. They are not compensated as clerks are in commercial cities; they are not compensated as are persons of equal skill anywhere in the United States, and here in the most expensive city of the United States there are reasons why, the expenses of living having been vastly increased, we should make some provision to meet the consequences of that result.

I believe in good pay and exact service. For some years past the clerks in none of the Departments have been paid sufficient compensation to live comfortably here. I believe it would be a simple act of justice to increase their pay generally on a general principle. Assuming that their present pay is averaged properly and was properly averaged when it was arranged by previous laws, an increase by regular proportion would be just unless we reorganize altogether the Departments of the Government in their clerical force—a thing which should have been done long ago; which has been talked of for years but which no one has attempted. I believe the expenses of the Departments could be greatly reduced by a reorganization and a system that would make a smaller clerical force much more efficient than the present. But there is no prospect of that being done; and their being no such prospect I say adequate compensation should be allowed; and I am in favor as well of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as of the general proposition that all the employes of the several Departments should have their pay increased.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The amendment which I was about to propose but which I withdrew, was substantially the amendment of the Senator from California. I had put it in this shape:

There shall be allowed and paid to the clerks and employes of the War Department whose compensation has not been otherwise increased previous to July 1, 1866, twenty per cent. additional on their respective salaries, to take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1865.

If the amendment of the Senator from California fails, I shall take an appropriate occasion to offer that which I have just read, and I will say a word in support of it. I have been credibly informed that the employes of the War Department consist in a very large degree of retired and discharged soldiers, many of them wounded. More than three fifths of the appointments to clerkships in that Department have been of soldiers in our Army. I have been informed also that the average compensation at the present time of the clerks in the War Department, taking all the grades, is $1,200, whereas in the Treasury Department the average is $1,400. I understand further that the clerks of the War Department are employed seven hours per day while the average number of hours in the Treasury Department is six per day, so that it is very evident that the pay of the clerks in the War Department is inferior to that of the clerks in the Treasury Department.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to cause estimates to be made for the erection of suitable fire-proof buildings for the quartermaster's department in Washington, stating the location and price of the land, and plans and cost of necessary buildings, to be reported at the next session of Congress.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out "quartermaster's department" and insert "War Department." The offices of that Department ought all to be under the same roof in the same building—the Commissary, Quartermaster, Ordnance, Surgeon General, and all of them. We have got plenty of reservations elsewhere in the city. There is plenty of ground to be obtained if we did not own any; but we own enough. It may not be advisable to place this building in the square where it is now located. Let the matter be investigated by proper parties before the next session, and let them make a report.

Mr. WILSON. To build a building for the War Department is the work of years. They are under the necessity now of getting some safe place for the quartermaster's department and for the protection of the papers in that department that are now very much exposed, and the Secretary of War is exceedingly anxious that something should be done at this session.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will take no longer to have estimates for the whole. We have the Surgeon General's office in one place, the Paymaster General's in another, the Commissary General's in another, and the Quartermaster General's in another. It is difficult to tell where the offices are. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be made.

Mr. GRIMES. The War Department ought to be an entirety.

Mr. WILSON. Why not say "the War Department and quartermaster's department?"

Mr. GRIMES. The greater includes the whole. If the Secretary of War thinks it only advisable to build a quartermaster's department, he will so report to us.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection. I will accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer this amendment to come in on page 8, after line one hundred and sixty-eight:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the indebtedness incurred for the Indian service, in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, in the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, $40,000.

I will state this is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and has also been recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was passed by the Senate upon the Indian appropriation bill and stricken off by the committee of conference with the understanding that it should be put upon the deficiency bill, and for that reason I offer it at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment, after the word "dollars," in line thirty-five, on page 2, to insert:

For deficiencies in the payment of balances due for taking the census of 1860, $230,369 21.

I submit a letter from the Department which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Secretary read the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1866.

SIR: In answer to your letter of yesterday, desiring to be informed what sum would suffice to pay the balances due for taking the census of 1860 I have to say that the books of the Census office show the balance due United States marshals and their assistants on this account to be $230,369 21, and this Department has asked of Congress an appropriation of this amount for the purpose of liquidating these claims.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. T. OTTO,

Acting Secretary.

Hon. GARRETT DAVIS, United States Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer as an amendment to that this proviso:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be paid to any marshal or other person who has taken part in the rebellion against the United States.

If any of the marshals to whom this money is due entered into the rebel service and tried to overthrow the Government, they ought not to be paid.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say, in order that the Senate may understand the views of the Finance Committee, that this question was before us, and I suppose it was before the committee of the House, and it was not acceded to by either committee. We thought, as the presumption was that in the confederate States these persons had been employed in the rebellion, we had better wait until we got some proof of well ascertained claims of loyal persons before we made an appropriation for payment, and therefore declined to put it upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is really in the nature of a private claim.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know whether it would come exactly within that category; but whether or not, we came to the conclusion that although this might appear to be due by the books, yet it was unwise to make this large appropriation. Let it first be ascertained what amounts are due to parties who stood in proper relation to the Government to make a claim, and then we can make an appropriation to pay it. We thought that was the wisest course to take. I believe that is the conclusion to which the committees of both Houses came.

Mr. DAVIS. The object of this appropriation is to compensate for labor that was performed before there was a war or a rebellion. The sums due to these deputy marshals have been due about five years. I have had the honor of being a member of this body for about that period of time, and I have been pursuing some half a dozen claims with all the assiduity of a most vigilant constable from that time to the present and have not been able yet to overtake them. I hope with the guard that has been thrown around the appropriation by the very commendable vigilance of my honorable friend from Ohio, the amendment will be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say before the vote is taken that it is within my knowledge, as within that of the Senator from Kentucky, that these claims have been ascertained for a long time. There is scarcely any State, I apprehend, in the Union where there are not moneys remaining unpaid. It has been earned for five years past, and the only difficulty in the way of payment is the want of an appropriation. A great many cases have come to my knowledge.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Yates—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sumner, Williams, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That section four of the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the service of the United States," approved March 3, 1849, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof inserting the words, "that the said Auditor shall in all cases transmit his adjustment, with all the papers relating thereto, to the Second Comptroller for his revision and decision thereon, the same in all respects as is provided in the act of the 2d of September, 1789."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of continuing the index to Senate lists of private claims down to the present Congress, in pursuance of the order of the Senate dated March 16, 1866.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was before the Committee on Finance and was not recommended for the want of information, but I am since satisfied that it is right, and I make no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer an amendment, and I send to the desk with the amendment a letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after line one hundred and eighty-six on page 9:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the reasonable costs and expenses paid or incurred by the delegates of the southern Cherokees in coming to and going from Washington, and during their stay, upon the formation of treaties of peace and amity with the Indian tribes, a sum not exceeding $25,000: Provided, That said sum shall be refunded to the Treasury from the proceeds of the sales of Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas.

The following letter was read:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, July 25, 1866.

SIR: Delegates from the southern Cherokees, invited by the Government to visit Washington for the purpose of consultation in the negotiation of a treaty with the Cherokee nation, have been thus occupied since October last, first meeting Government commissioners at Fort Smith, and since at this city. They have thus lost their whole time and incurred considerable expense, which should be provided for by an appropriation. I am of the opinion that the sum of $25,000 would cover these expenses.

The amount might be restored to the Treasury when the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas shall have been sold.

With great respect, I have the honor to be your obedient servant,
JAMES HARLAN,
Secretary Interior.

Hon. J. R. DOOLITTLE,
Chairman Committee Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I now renew my amendment in regard to the clerks in the State Department.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it:

And that there shall be allowed and paid to the clerks and employes of the War and Navy Departments whose compensation has not been otherwise increased previous to July 1, 1866, by law of this session, twenty per cent. additional on their respective salaries, to take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1865.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Creswell, Harris, Henderson, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Lane, Nesmith, Norton, Ramsey, Sherman, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Fowler, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offered an amendment which was postponed, the Senator from Maine saying he would examine it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did examine it and I found that that matter was arranged on the other bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 131) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast;

A bill (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the Rebellion; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 719) to punish certain crimes in relation to the public securities and currency, reported it without amendment.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana, reported it without amendment.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 588) for the relief of Richard Chenery—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 788) to establish and protect national cemeteries—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the Militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) for the relief of the officers of the thirteenth regiment of the United States colored heavy artillery—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 202) in relation to brevet appointments and commissions in the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

THE PORTLAND FIRE.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine, which was in line seven to strike out "or" and insert "and."

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the amendment was concurred in.

EXAMINATION OF MERCHANDISE.

Mr. MORGAN, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the Senate No. 39, entitled "An act to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and eighth amendments as made by the House.

That the Senate agree to the ninth amendment made by the House, with the following amendment: insert after the word "inspectors," in the second line of said amendment, the words "of customs in any collection district shall;" and that the House agree to said amendment.

That the House recede from the sixth and seventh amendments made by them.

That the title of the bill be amended by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Z. CHANDLER,
E. D. MORGAN,
GEORGE READ RIDDLE,
THOMAS D. ELIOT,
CHARLES O'NEILL,
W. RADFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know what the report is.

Mr. MORGAN. The most important matter of difference was in relation to the salaries of the appraisers. The Senate fixed the salary of the principal appraiser at $4,000, and of the other appraisers at $3,000; the House amended by fixing the salary of the principal appraiser at $5,000, and of the others at $4,000. The House recede and agree to the bill as passed by the Senate in that respect. That was the principal matter of disagreement; the others were verbal. In relation to the time, we make it the 1st of September.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES K. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania, Mr. JUSTIN S. MORRILL of Vermont, and Mr. COLUMBUS DELANO of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the bill (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes, in certain cases, from State courts.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 693) for the relief of Robert Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward;

A bill (H. R. No. 806) more effectually to preserve the neutral relations of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 809) to further regulate the printing of public documents and for the purchase of paper for the public printing; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 756.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I gave notice to the Senate early this morning that it was necessary to have an executive session for business of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has now got to be nine o'clock, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is superseded by the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to take up the bill for the equalization of bounties.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I gave notice this morning that it was absolutely necessary to have an executive session for the consideration of certain treaties, which must be considered this evening or not at all; and there is other very important business also to be attended to in executive session. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to go into executive session. I want to call up the House bill to equalize bounties.

Mr. GRIMES. That is not the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bäckelew, Clark, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Guthrie, Lane, Poland, Sprague, Sumner, Wadde, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, Sautsbury, Stewart, Trumbull, and Wright—20.

So the motion was agreed to.

After two hours spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 26, 1866.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. ORTH. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object.

The Clerk continued the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object, and shall insist on my objection. There is a proposition before the House to increase the salaries of members of Congress to $5,000. My object is to consume time and defeat that proposition.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the Journal.

PASSENGERS BY STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce, a joint resolution to construe an act further to provide for the safety of the lives of the passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that the act which it proposes to construe shall not apply to boats used exclusively as tugs or tow-boats.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

REBECCA J. SHEPPARD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of Rebecca J. Sheppard.

The bill, which was read for information, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new bond for $100, with coupons from May 1, 1865, to Rebecca J. Sheppard, of Philadelphia, in place of her coupon bond for a like amount numbered twenty-nine thousand six hundred and ninety-seven, fourth series, loan of February 25, 1862, destroyed by fire.

Mr. COBB. I object.

AMENDMENT OF THE PREEMPTION LAWS, ETC.

Mr. FERRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill amendatory of the preemption and homestead laws; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that no existing provision or construction of law shall operate in the State of Michigan to the exclusion from the benefits of the preemption or homestead laws of half-breeds or other Indians, disconnected from tribal relations, where such parties in all other respects are able to meet the requirements of those enactments.

Mr. FERRY. I will state that this confers the benefits of the preemption and homestead laws on the Indians in the States. It has the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as well as of the Committee on Public Lands. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. FERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISS VINNIE REAM.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to contract with Miss Vinnie Ream for a life size model and statue of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, to be executed by her at a price not exceeding $10,000, one half payable on the completion of the model in plaster, and the remaining half on the completion of the statue in marble to his acceptance.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The rules were suspended.

The joint resolution was then received and read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

On the passage of the joint resolution, there were—ayes 57, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COBB and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

Mr. COBB. Since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] votes for the joint resolution, I withdraw the demand for a division.

The joint resolution was then passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HASTINGS.

Mr. MOORHEAD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back Senate bill No. 324, for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburg, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The explanation I can give of this bill is brief and comprehensive. The bill passed a year ago on the 3d of March, 1865; the description was wrong; Mr. Hastings was described as collector of customs of Pittsburg, when it ought to have been surveyor and depository of public moneys. This only makes the necessary correction. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MOORHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING OF TAXES.

Mr. HOGAN moved that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 759) to authorize the refunding of certain taxes.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill provides that where the license tax imposed upon any wholesale dealer has been calculated upon the amount of such dealer's sales for the previous year, according to the seventy-ninth section of the act approved June 30, 1864, and satisfactory proof has been made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the sales made under such license did not equal in amount the sales of such previous year, said commissioner shall refund to such wholesale dealer so much of the amount paid for such license as may be in excess of the proper tax chargeable upon the amount of sales actually made under such license during the year for which the same was issued.

Mr. HOGAN. It meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LOAN and Mr. DAWES called for the regular order of business.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill of the Senate (No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast by the southern route; pending the reading of which the House adjourned last night.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The amendments reported from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad were read, as follows:

Amend first section by inserting names of persons as additional corporators; also, by striking out the words, "between the twenty-fifth and ninety-eighth meridians," and the words "by way of the valley of the Canadian river and the headwaters of the Rio Pecos, near Anton Chico;" so that that portion of the section will read:

And said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, and construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, namely, beginning at or near the town of Springfield, in the State of Missouri, thence to the western boundary line of said State, and thence by the most eligible railroad route as shall be determined by said company to a point on the Canadian river, thence to the town of Albuquerque, on the river Del Norte, and thence by way of the Agua Frio, or other suitable pass, to the headwaters of the Colorado Chiquito, and thence along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, as near as may be found most suitable for a railway route, to the Colorado river, at such point as may be selected by said company for crossing; thence by the most practicable and eligible route to the Pacific.

Also amend first section by striking out "January" and inserting "October," and striking out "1867" and inserting "1866;" so that that portion will read: "the first meeting of said board of commissioners shall be held at the Turner Hall, in the city of St. Louis, on the 1st day of October, A. D. 1866."

Amend second section by striking out "two" and inserting "one," so that that portion will read:

Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass through the public domain, including all necessary grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, &c.

Amend the third section by inserting the words "and not including the reserved numbers" after the following clause: "and whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers, not more than ten miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections."

Also amend the third section by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty;" so that that portion will read:

Provided further, That all mineral lands be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act, and in lieu thereof a like quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated agricultural lands in odd-numbered sections nearest to the line of said road, and within twenty miles thereof, may be selected as above provided.

Amend the fourth section by striking out the words "United States" and inserting the word "company" after the words "shall be paid a reasonable compensation for their services by the;" and also insert the words "under oath" after the words "the commissioners shall so report."

Amend the sixth section by striking out the words "and the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the Government at a price less than $250 per acre when offered for sale."

Amend the seventh section by striking out "two" and inserting "one;" so that that portion will read:

That the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter upon, purchase, take, and hold any lands or premises that may be necessary and proper for the construction and working of said road not exceeding in width one hundred feet on each side of the line of its railroad, unless a greater width be required for the purpose of excavation or embankment.

Also amend the same section by striking out the words "increasing or diminishing, as the case may be, the award of the commissioners," and inserting the words "more favorable;" so that that portion will read:

And said party appealing shall give bonds, with sufficient surety or sureties, for the payment of any cost that may arise upon such appeal; and in case the party appealing does not obtain a verdict more favorable, such party shall pay the whole cost incurred by the appellee, as well as his own.

Also add to the bill the following section:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That whenever in any grant of land or other subsidies, made or hereafter to be made, to railroad or other corporations, the United States has reserved the right, or shall reserve it, to appoint directors, engineers, commissioners or other agents to examine said roads, or act in conjunction with other officers of said company or companies, all the costs, charges, and pay of said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid by the respective companies. Said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid for said services the sum of ten dollars per day, for each and every day actually and necessarily employed, and ten cents per mile for each and every mile actually and necessarily traveled, in discharging the duties required of them, which per diem and mileage shall be in full compensation for said services. And in case any company shall refuse or neglect to make such payments, no more patents for lands or other subsidies shall be issued to said company until these requirements are complied with.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out from the list of corporators the name of "James M. Scovel" and insert the name of "Alexander C. Cattell."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I notice that there are several members of Congress named among these corporators. I think it would be better to strike their names out.

Mr. PRICE. I have no control over that matter; it is for the House to decide.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I move to amend by striking out the names of members of Congress in the list of corporators named in this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. PRICE. I will hear it.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to amend the last section by adding thereto the following:

And Congress shall at all times have the right to prescribe the rate of charges for the transportation of freight and conveyance of passengers on said road.

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield for any such purpose, for it is an entirely unusual provision, and I see no necessity for introducing a different feature into this grant.

Now, in reference to this bill, I have but a few words to say, and then I shall call the previous question. This bill gives about the same grant of land to this Atlantic and Pacific railroad that was given to the Northern Pacific railroad. I desire to state but one other fact. The Northern Pacific railroad is not allowed to go further south than the forty-fifth parallel of latitude. This Atlantic and Pacific railroad runs along the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, so that it is kept some three or four hundred miles from the Central Pacific railroad, which is now being built under the control of the Government. Therefore they will not be conflicting lines.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish my colleague [Mr. PRICE] would state to the House how much land per mile and how much in the aggregate this bill grants.

Mr. PRICE. I will answer my colleague [Mr. WILSON] by reading from the bill, which states that the company shall be allowed "every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State." And as I said before, that is about as much as is granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to state in round numbers the number of acres of land that is given.

Mr. PRICE. I have as high respect for my colleague as I have for any gentleman upon this floor; and I will say now, for I may not have the opportunity again, that if I was delivering his eulogy I would say that he is a good lawyer and an honest man, and it is with great regret that I ever differ with him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Of course, I am very glad to hear all that; but the gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. PRICE. Before you can tell how much there is in anything you must know how wide it is and how long it is. Now, I only know how wide this road is, but I do not know how long it is. Now I call the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the call for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 52, noes 42.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. PRICE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 37.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading and read the third time.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 60, nays 44, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cooper, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Garfield, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Julian, Kelley, Koonz, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, Loan, Maynard, McClure, McCullough, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Platts, Price, Shanklin, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Bergen, Broomall, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Dawes, DeForest, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Kasson, Ketchum, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Mercer, Morrill, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Ward, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—44.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Kerr, Letwith, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, Moore, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Seafeld, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Wright—82.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read two of the joint rules which it is the invariable practice to suspend during the last days of the session.

The Clerk read as follows:

"16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the last three days of the session.

"17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation, on the last day of the session."

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules be suspended during the remainder of the present session.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object. There are bills in the Senate which I do not want to come here.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I move that the rules be suspended, in order to allow me introduce the joint resolution.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to; and the resolution was introduced and adopted.

PAYMENT OF ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

The House, agreeably to order, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward, on which Mr. HOTCHKISS was entitled to the floor.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in satisfaction of all claims for the rewards offered by the President of the United States or by authority of the War Department for the capture of the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, William H. Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said several sums shall be paid to the several persons above named, respectively, personally, or in case of their decease, to the persons who would be entitled to the same under the bounty laws of the United States in case of a deceased soldier; and all assignments or transfers of said sums, or any part thereof, and all powers of attorney to collect or receive the same, or any part thereof, except as hereinafter provided, are hereby declared void.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any of the persons entitled to receive payment under the provisions of this act may authorize, by a proper instrument in writing, (without stamp), the Representative in Congress from his or her district to receive and pay over the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That any person holding an assignment of any of the sums herein awarded, or a power of attorney to collect the same on account of moneys claimed to have been heretofore actually advanced to any of the parties herein provided for, may, within thirty days from the passage of this act, give notice thereof to the proper accounting officer of the War or Treasury Departments who shall have such matter in charge; and such accounting officer shall thereupon refer the same, with all papers and vouchers relating thereto, to the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, who is hereby authorized to investigate and determine the validity of such claim, and by a certificate to be signed by him, (without stamp,) direct the payment of so much of the money claimed as shall be equal to the amount heretofore advanced by the claimant to the person executing such assignment, transfer, or power of attorney. But no notice of such claim shall delay the payment of such sums to the parties herein named by the proper officer for a longer period than ninety days from the passage of this act, unless the certificate of such justice shall be filed within that period.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no payments shall be made under the provisions of this act until after the expiration of thirty days from the passage thereof; and in all cases when notice of an assignment or transfer shall be given, such payment shall be delayed until the filing of the certificate of the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as herein provided, not exceeding, however, ninety days from the passage of this act.

Mr. DELANO. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me that I may offer a substitute for the bill.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserting the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said several sums shall be paid to the several persons above named, respectively, personally, or in case of their decease, to the persons who would be entitled to the same under the bounty laws of the United States in case of a deceased soldier.

During the reading of the substitute, Mr. STEVENS said: May I ask whether that is not the award of the War Department commission?

Mr. DELANO. So far as it concerns the award for the capture of Jefferson Davis; the substitute is as reported from the Committee of Claims. It is just as reported by Judge Advocate General Holt. In reference to the awards for the arrest of Atzerott, they are precisely as reported by Judge Holt. The changes in the bill from the Committee of Claims are in reference to the arrest of Booth and Herold.

The reading of the substitute was then concluded.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I am willing to let the amendment be submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

For the capture of Booth and Herold:
To Lafayette C. Baker, the sum of $17,500; to Everett J. Conger, the sum of $17,500; to Luther B. Baker, the sum of $5,000; to James R. O'Beirne, the sum of $2,000; to H. H. Susan Jackson, (colored)..... 250 00
Mary Ann Griffin, (colored)..... 250 00
Total..... $75,000 00

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not want to see two or three men have $40,000 of the reward. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I have added provisions for the two colored women, Jackson and Griffin. This man Baker is building a big hotel in my State with the money he has made off the Government, and yet it is proposed to pay him $17,500!

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, before the various amendments are discussed I will explain my position to the House in reporting the pending measure. The question of the distribution of these awards was referred to various committees in this House, and it was bandied about from committee to committee without action. It finally fell into the hands of the Committee of Claims. They were directed to make an investigation and to report to the House in what manner the rewards should be distributed. The duty was then devolved upon me by the committee. I have heard all the evidence in relation to the several awards, all that I have been able to procure from the War Department and elsewhere, and presented this report to the committee. I supposed it was satisfactory to the committee. I had no idea any member had any objection to it or any part of it. If I had I should not have reported it. It is a matter in which I have no personal feeling. It is merely my judgment from the investigation I have made of the evidence. It is news to me that any member here objected to it. I do not wish to be forced to have an issue between myself and the commission that reported this matter to the House, and which was unacceptable to the House. I do not wish to have an issue forced on me and be compelled to discuss it here. I am told that the previous question will be voted down in case that it is called now, and members advise me not to press it. I am at a loss to know what my duty in the premises is.

Several MEMBERS. Call it now.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. In deference to many members of the House, I will now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER stated the first question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. DRIGGS, which was the award of the War Department.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I understand the question now is on the amendment which looks mainly to the award for the capture of Booth and Herold.

A MEMBER. That is all.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at a remark made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DRIGGS] when he offered his amendment, that General Baker was now building a hotel somewhere.

Mr. DRIGGS. Well, that is so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman says that is so. Then, that is the length and breadth, I suppose, of his argument. Has the gentleman taken any testimony in this case to determine who is entitled to the reward for the apprehension of Booth and Herold? Does he know anything about the case? And are the circumstances, business, or private character of General Baker an element in this case?

Mr. STEVENS. Allow me to say that the evidence before the War Department shows that Baker did not know anything about it.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The evidence before the War Department, begging the gentleman's pardon, gives the entire credit to General Baker for having planned, originated, and executed this enterprise; and I say, as a lawyer, that if you take the evidence set forth in the report of the commission of the War Department, take the reward offered and the terms of it, it will give every cent of it to General Baker. The report of the commission says:

"The expedition which resulted in this arrest was originated, planned, and generally directed by Colonel L. C. Baker, who, though not accompanying it, is regarded as having occupied the position of superior and commanding officer of those by whom it was immediately conducted. He is therefore deemed to be entitled to the same share of the reward which, under the statutory rule referred to, would be payable to the commander of a squadron, by a separate ship of which a prize had been taken, to wit: one-twentieth of the whole amount to be distributed, or, in this instance, $3,750."

Wherein the report before the House differs from the report of the commission is not in the service performed, but the principle upon which the reward is distributed. The report before the House is that it should be distributed upon the ground of service actually performed and of merit in this particular case, and not with reference to the rule governing a seizure in a prize case. I will read further from the report of the commission:

"The services of Messrs. Conger and Baker upon this expedition were, no doubt, of great value; and, inasmuch as these parties immediately represented the views and intentions of Colonel Baker, their part in carrying out the original plan was particularly important."

These are the persons to whom the War Department give the credit of having performed the service; and they say, in short, that they shall not be paid for it, but somebody else shall. If it were a prize case the law in prize cases would not give them the reward. Now, this reward was offered for the apprehension. The sum is fixed by the statute, and the parties who apprehended these men are entitled to it.

Now, in deference to this commission, in deference to what seems to be the popular wish, this sum has been divided up as the evidence seemed to require it to be done. Now, whether General Baker gets one dollar or one penny is wholly immaterial to me. When I shall have presented the case here I shall have discharged my duty. If the House chooses to deprive him of what belongs to him upon the ground suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Briggs,] then upon them will rest the responsibility. He is no friend of mine. In fact, all these men are strangers to me. If I had had the giving of the reward after the services had been performed I might not have given so much to any of them. But that is not the duty I was called upon to perform.

Now, in regard to the capture of Booth and Herold the circumstances are these: General Baker had that matter in charge as chief detective in Washington. He procured the evidence of where these men were; he mapped out the country to be searched; he called to him his aids, Lieutenant Colonel Conger and Lieutenant Baker, and gave them their orders. He procured a military force, and furnished the men who were in command of them with guides, with their charts, and with their directions. He did the brain work; he was responsible for the execution of the plan. It was his own plan, and if it had been unsuccessful the consequences would have fallen upon him, as they would have fallen upon General Grant, had he been unsuccessful in taking Petersburg and Richmond.

General Baker committed the execution of his plan to Lieutenant Colonel Conger, as brave and gallant a soldier as any who fought in our Army. He was a young man who enlisted from the town of Fremont, in the State of Ohio, on the 17th of April, 1861, and fought his way through from that time until the end of the war. He was twice shot through the hips, and he is now here with a withered limb, and unable to perform any manual labor. In God's providence he had this trust committed to him, and nobly did he discharge it.

If personal sympathy was to be allowed to have anything to do with this matter, I should say that Lieutenant Colonel Conger was the most meritorious man who had aught to do with this whole affair. He performed his duty as well as any man has performed any service during the war. And he accomplished his object. And with my consent he shall never be ignored in this matter with the paltry sum given to him under the rule prevailing in prize cases. You might just as well undertake to apply the rule which was observed in marching the beasts into Noah's ark as to undertake to apply that rule in this case. It is a perfect absurdity, and will strike every loyal mind in that way. It does manifest injustice to that brave soldier, and perpetrates an outrage upon him. There are persons in this House who fought with Lieutenant Colonel Conger, and who know whether what I say is true. I only speak from the evidence produced before me.

Now, sir, Lieutenant Colonel Conger and Lieutenant Baker started on their quest of Booth and Herold. I do not wish to say anything about the twenty-five men who were sent with them; I do not wish to have that issue forced upon me. I do not wish to discriminate one way or the other; but I will say that the evidence proves that the sum that is recommended to be given to them is all that they deserve to receive. That is the evidence; and if any gentleman in this House has any evidence to the contrary, I will yield to give him an opportunity to produce it.

Finally, after laborious services, they reached the tobacco warehouse where Booth and Herold were secreted. And I say here that to Lieutenant Colonel Conger and Lieutenant Baker is due the entire credit of capturing those men in that tobacco warehouse. It was with great difficulty that they were able to obtain six men out of the whole twenty-five to assist them. Finally, Lieutenant Colonel Conger went and laid down rails in the vicinity of three sides of the tobacco warehouse, and took six men and placed them upon the rails, telling them that he would shoot the first man who should leave his place. And this man Corbett, who performed such great services to the country, was one of the six men.

Lieutenant Baker stood alone at the front door where Herold was captured. Herold came out and surrendered to Lieutenant Baker, and he was taken and bound and tied securely to an apple tree. Then Lieutenant Colonel Conger went to the warehouse and set it on fire. Then as Booth was walking to the front door, with his arms trailing, evidently with the intention of surrendering, after having refused to do so for half an hour—as he was walking to the front door, Corbett, who was then an insane man, thrust his pistol in through a crack and fired it without knowing where the ball was going. By a singular circumstance he hit Booth in the neck and Booth was killed. This Corbett had been placed on a rail, and told that if he left his place he would be shot.

Now, mark another fact. In the mean time Lieutenant Colonel Conger had to go, and with his own hands, with the aid of young Garrett, one of these rebels, and get rails to be propped against the doors. Now, if you could see this Lieutenant Colonel Conger here, see his crippled condition, you would understand why it is proposed to allow him what is called here an "enormous sum," $17,500, for performing the part which he did. The cavalrymen, to whom the War Department proposes that large sums shall be given, were lying around under the apple trees and elsewhere.

Corbett's version of the affair is that he forsook his place and fired this shot because Providence directed him to do so. I am told that Corbett has since died in a lunatic asylum, and he was then evidently an insane man. Yet he is given the same sum as the other soldiers receive. For a two days' ride I think that is an ample compensation.

These soldiers had no care, no responsibility. If they had been unsuccessful they would have lost nothing. It was those who had charge of the expedition who had all to gain or all to lose. And the idea that the legislation of this country is to be based upon any such paltry consideration as to whether General Baker keeps a hotel or dram-shop, or is engaged in any other employment, is wholly foreign to the subject.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hotchkiss] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Certainly.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would ask the gentleman upon what principle of calculation did the committee propose to give $17,500 to General Baker.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Upon the principle of giving him the same sum as would be given to any one else for the same service.

Mr. SCHENCK. How in regard to Lieutenant Colonel Conger?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. By the principle that would govern me if I was acting as a referee or judge, or was sitting as a juror.

Mr. SCHENCK. Is there not, in the kindred cases of distribution of prize money, a law which gives to the commander of an expedition, whether an admiral, captain, or commodore, whether accompanying the expedition or not, one twentieth of the whole prize money? Now, General Baker, who is said to have been the brains of the expedition, remained here in Washington all the time, is allowed $17,500, which is nearly one fourth of the whole.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I am not a sailor nor the judge of a prize court, and I do not know anything about their rules, nor do I care anything about them. I judge of the merits of the case as it is presented to me.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman will understand me. I desire to know what principle was adopted.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The rule of merit; the same judgment I would pronounce had I been a referee, or a judge or a jurymen.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand the gentleman to say the committee did not adopt any kindred system.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The report says so.

Mr. SCHENCK. They adopted an arbitrary system of their own.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. It is not arbitrary. An arbitrary rule is the will or fiat of the person who adopts the rule. This is a rule which grows out of the justice of the case.

Why, sir, this military commission deprived James R. O'Beirne, the provost marshal of this District, who performed extraordinary and meritorious services, who tracked Booth and Herold through the swamps of lower Maryland, who tracked them to their hiding places in Virginia, and who would have captured them if this other expedition had not been sent out. Colonel O'Beirne was deprived by this commission of all share in the reward.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman to yield to me. I am desirous of getting information.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I do not yield further. I remember when I could not have a moment's time yielded to me by the gentleman, and when I simply asked him a question. I remember the language used upon the occasion.

George Cottingham, who is certified by the assistant judge advocate as having performed as meritorious service as any man engaged in the expedition, with having furnished him with evidence, as the only man who adhered to him night and day, procuring witnesses and securing the conviction of the criminals. Yet this man, supported by the strongest testimony, is entirely ignored by this commission. There are a number of like cases, but I will not follow them all up. Alexander Lovett, who is certified as having performed valuable and meritorious services, is also ignored by this commission.

Mr. O'NEILL. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman. If he is so convinced of Lieutenant Lovett's finding out these men, and giving the information which led to the arrest of almost the whole party, why has not he been recommended for more than $1,000?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The committee have taken the responsibility to give him $1,000. The War Department commission refused him anything. I must confess we have been somewhat influenced by their judgment in this matter. An effort has been made to deny these men any reward whatever. If any gentleman wants to give these men more than we have reported I have no objection to it.

Mr. O'NEILL. One word more. I ask whether the gentleman will permit me to amend the bill so as to raise the amount of Lieutenant Lovett to $1,500.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. This subject has been before the committee for several months. I believe it was referred to us in May last, and every man has had a full and fair opportunity to come before the committee and disclose all the facts within his knowledge. I have sent far and near to procure evidence.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand there was a letter before the committee from General Augur, commanding this department, indorsing Lieutenant Lovett, and certifying that he had first found out where these parties had gone.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman's affection for Lieutenant Lovett is a very sudden one. I have met the gentleman frequently, and supposed I was on reasonable, intimate terms with him, but never till now has he said a word upon the subject. It is easy enough where there are several hundred claimants here to exhaust one's time and strength in explaining why he has done this or that in each individual case. The most I can say is, so far as I am concerned, I have done the best I knew how. If anybody else knows any better I hope he will undertake the task.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to state that I presented the claim of Lieutenant Lovett to the chairman of the Committee of Claims some weeks ago. I think the papers in the case were submitted through me to the committee. I wish I had known that my friend was taking an interest in the matter.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I read the papers in the case of Lieutenant Lovett. I have examined and reported upon them. I have heard all there was about it. I have done for Lieutenant Lovett what his associates in arms would not do. They had not the courage to adopt any rule based upon equal and exact justice, but must go to the prize cases for an analogy. There are cases where there are no precedents and where you are not to be governed by precedents.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DRIGGS] says that being referred to in the manner he has been, he thinks he ought to have a little time. Sir, how did the gentleman open his case here? He informed the House that there was an attempt to do a great outrage against some constituents of his, because a man had come into his State to keep a tavern that he did not like. Now, I discard everything of that kind, and if the House shall vote down this report and refuse to adopt this law, why, well and good. But I think we have had enough of these insinuations from gentlemen on this floor and from outsiders. During this session a telegram has been shown me from Lieutenant Doherty, saying that there was a great fraud being perpetrated here, and he wanted the American Congress to stop the wheels of legislation and wait until he could be here. Lieutenant Doherty has been here pretty much all winter, and has been before me time and time again in regard to this matter. I have had rolls of documents from him, and I wish to avoid saying anything about him. But now, since he has had the impudence to come here and charge a man who has been engaged in the honest discharge of his duty, without fear or favor, one who is a stranger to all these men, who does not care personally whether they get a cent, and since gentlemen have shown the want of confidence in the committee to make the remarks they have, I feel constrained to say that I believe Lieutenant Doherty was a downright coward in this expedition.

From all the evidence, I believe that while these five men were guarding that tobacco-house where these prisoners were secreted, and while Lieutenant Colonel Conger was endeavoring to get a guard around the building, Doherty stayed under a shed, and no power could drive him out of it. And now he comes in and claims that he did the whole. Such is the evidence in the case, as it has been presented. If there is anything to contradict it, let it be brought in. I would like to know if gentlemen suppose that men are influenced by the considerations which they suggest here. I would like to know if legislation is to be based upon the conditions of men or the business they pursue, or what the public say about them; if a bad man is not going to have the same measure of justice meted out to him here as a good man, or if a hotel keeper is not to be treated as well as a minister of the Gospel, so far as justice is concerned. I would scorn myself if I were to listen to such suggestions. Sir, I am no friend of these men. I am not here to express my private opinion of them. That is no part of this case. The question is, what did they do; what service did they perform, compared one with the other? Here is a large sum to be distributed, and you have got to distribute it somewhere. You may place it where it belongs, according to merit, according to the service performed, where the want of success would have brought sad consequences to those engaged in the expedition.

We are about to reward men for their services in suppressing this rebellion—for the brains which they possessed and brought into action when the country required brains, for their skill and fidelity in the service which they undertook to perform. It is not the gunner who is to receive the largest acknowledgment of gratitude from the country, although he may have done good service in manning the batteries. It is the man who conceived the plan and executed it through the instrumentality of others. The report, if gentlemen will read it, will show upon what principle these recommendations are based.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me a few moments before he closes?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. DRIGGS. In regard to this report I have only to say that out of the $75,000 awarded to the captors of the assassins of President Lincoln—

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The gentleman makes a mistake; the amount to be distributed under the bill is $105,000.

Mr. DRIGGS. Out of the entire amount to be distributed, this report proposes to give $40,000 to three persons—$17,500 to General Baker, the same amount to Lieutenant Colonel Conger, and $5,000 to another person named Baker, a brother, I believe, of the general.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. No, sir.

Mr. DRIGGS. Well, he is a relative at any rate. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word in reference to the "hotel." I did not say that General Baker had not as good a right to build a hotel as any man; but I mentioned that incidentally to show that he had not suffered much pecuniarily by his connection with the War Department.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman allow me to say that, so far as General Baker is concerned, he never has received from this Government compensation in proportion to the services which he performed?

Mr. DRIGGS. I was informed by an honorable constituent of mine that this General Baker is building a first-class hotel in the city of Lansing, the capital of my State, but not in my district. I know but very little of this General Baker except as to his connection with the War Department. For some very mysterious reason this gentleman acquired a remarkable power in the Government, or at least in one branch of it, and exercised this power for many months during the progress of the war. But I have been unable to discover in what consists the great merit of this gentleman which entitles him to receive nearly one quarter of the whole amount awarded.

The award made by the War Department is, in my opinion, just. Under that award the privates will receive their equitable share. The gentleman from New York has said that the privates who assisted in the capture of Booth and his associates had nothing to lose; that General Baker and Lieutenant Colonel Conger had all the responsibility, had everything to gain or lose. Certainly I should think they had everything to gain if we adopt this report. If this bill passes in the shape reported by the committee, it will, in my judgment, inflict a great outrage upon all the privates, most of whom aided at least as much as Baker did in the capture of the assassins. Baker was in the city of Washington at the time. These privates had as much at stake in the work they undertook as he had.

Sir, I can see no justice, no propriety, in the award which the committee propose shall be made. It seems to me there must be some mysterious influence at work—I cannot tell where; nor do I make any personal charge in reference to any gentleman; but it must be obvious, I think, that a great wrong is about to be perpetrated if the House should adopt the report of the committee.

One word in regard to Lieutenant Colonel Conger, and I am done. He is really a noble, high-toned gentleman, and I should have been better pleased if he had been awarded about ten thousand dollars. I think he was really the active man in the whole affair. In regard to General Baker, I know nothing personally; but, as I have before remarked, I cannot see that he has rendered such services as to entitle him to nearly one quarter of the whole amount awarded. I shall vote against the bill as it now stands; and I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I want the House to take notice that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DRIGGS] has said that improper influences have been at work in this matter. It is a very singular remark for one Representative on this floor to make in regard to another.

Mr. DRIGGS. I disclaimed making any personal allusion.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I shall not resent the remark. I intend to prove to this House that I can stand here and hear such remarks without taking offense at them, particularly when they do not arouse either my resentment or my respect. But let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that such things ought to be avoided here. Until a man's character here is proved to be untrustworthy no such intimations should be made upon this floor, because, unless we stop this sort of thing, we shall have repeated the scenes that have given us so much trouble during the last few weeks.

Mr. DRIGGS. I distinctly disavowed any personal allusion.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Of course there is only one man whom he claims has been influenced. The gentleman, I suppose, would step up and wring a man's nose, and then say that he meant no personal offense.

I only desire to make one additional remark, and that is with reference to Lieutenant Baker. Lieutenant Baker guarded one side of this tobacco warehouse; and when Herold surrendered he took him prisoner, bound him, and guarded him. Not only that; in every part of this enterprise he performed his duty faithfully, while this Lieutenant Doherty lay under a shed in the neighborhood. That is the evidence. Yet in deference in part to popular clamor he must be allowed something. When you cannot do as you would, you must do as you must.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I thought the committee were uninfluenced by anything except the merits of the case.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. It is very embarrassing to any gentleman to be interrupted so frequently when on the floor; and I will now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE].

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to appeal to the House not to adopt the award which has been made by the War Department in this case. If that award should be adopted, manifest and great injustice would be done to the gentleman who commanded this expedition, Lieutenant Colonel Conger. As a lieutenant colonel of the volunteer army of the United States he was put in command of the expedition down the river on the Virginia side for the capture of Booth and Herold. He went to the commander of this department and obtained a force of men under the command of a Lieutenant Doherty, but they were all put under the control of Lieutenant Colonel Conger; they were subject to his orders. He accomplished the purpose for which he was sent. Through his efforts Booth and Herold were discovered and taken. On his return to this city, some three or four days afterward, he received a muster-out, dated anterior to the time when he started on the expedition. Simply and solely because of the fact that his muster-out antedated his performance of these services he is denied the first place in the award of the War Department. By that award, Lieutenant Doherty is placed at the head. Sir, I affirm here in my place that on the night of the capture, Lieutenant Colonel Conger put Lieutenant Doherty twice in a position of command, requiring certain duties of him, but afterward found that he had abandoned his post and left the premises, and then he ordered him to the rear, taking himself the personal command of the men.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How much do they give Doherty for that?

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. Under the award of the War Department he would receive $7,500, while Conger would receive only $4,000. I ask this House not to perpetrate such an injustice upon a brave, gallant, and true man. I know Lieutenant Colonel Conger well, although he is no constituent of mine and lives in a distant State. I ask that the mere fact of an anterior muster-out, of which no one, except perhaps somebody at the War Department, knew anything until after the performance of this service, shall not be made a pretext for inflicting such an injustice as to deprive Lieutenant Colonel Conger of the honor and the compensation which he so well deserves. I ask the House to vote down the amendment of my colleague. I am sure if I could read to him the proofs he would withdraw the proposition himself. As to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, I have nothing to say.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman has five minutes left, and if he does not object, I should like to make a few remarks.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the time I have left.

Mr. STEVENS. As there seems to be some difficulty in this matter in regard to the facts, it is right to know that the War Department appointed a judicious man, Judge Holt, as careful and honest a man as ever lived, and Adjutant General Townsend to make this examination. They say they examined the whole matter with great care. They made a distribution of the rewards and gave the grounds on which they made it. They are not arbitrary grounds. There are one or two particulars I should like to see otherwise in the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO;] but I am entirely opposed to the monstrous report of the committee which is now before the House. It seems to be an outrage on all justice and decency. That a man who did nothing should have $17,500, while those who did the work should only get $1,000, is too monstrous.

The gentleman says that if Mr. Baker, who remained here in town and issued his orders across the Potomac, had failed, the disaster would have been as terrible as if General Grant had been defeated. I do not see what the disaster was or what he had to lose. He had nothing to lose in this matter. He had not a great deal of character to lose before. I do not see what was the disaster which was to befall him. He did nothing; he sat here; he risked nothing. He is awarded by the War Department commission $3,000. I think he ought to be thankful that he gets anything. For the report of the War Department commission, I think it was excellent. I prefer the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO;] but taking two chances, I say that I will vote first for the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. DRIGGS;] and if that fails, for the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio; and if that fails, I shall vote against the whole thing.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. This report from the War Department is signed by General Townsend and not by Judge Holt. The report, instead of being signed and coming sustained with the authority of Judge Holt, comes only under the authority of General Townsend. I do not see any ear-marks of Judge Holt on it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says it is a most excellent report, but the first thing he does here is to attack it.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will refer to page 21 of the report he will see that Judge Holt does sign it.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. He may have had some hand in it.

Mr. STEVENS. It is a plain thing, I think.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The first thing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does is to attack the report of this commission. He referred to the fact that the colored servant of Mrs. Surratt was excluded from any share in the reward, although she was the most meritorious person concerned in the arrest of the assassin of Mr. Seward. She lay upon the floor feigning sleep, overheard the communications of these assassins, one to the other, saw their transactions, and at the peril of her life disclosed them. Yet this commission refused to allow her a cent. I apprehend that the gentleman has been reading my report instead of that of the War Department. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan includes these two persons.

Mr. DELANO. I want to place before the minds of the House the skeleton of the report of the War Department. For the arrest of Payne, $10,000; for the arrest of Booth and Herold, $75,000; for the arrest of Atzerodt, $25,000, and for the arrest of Davis, $100,000. In reference to the arrest of Payne, the Committee of Claims have reduced the amount, and given something to these two colored women. It is small and not worth quarreling about.

In reference to the arrest of Atzerodt, the War Department gives to Artman $1,200, and divides the rest among the others. The report of the Committee of Claims gives to Enos R. Artman, $10,000, to Zachariah W. Gemmill $5,000, and to another man who was not included, I believe, in the report of the War Department, $3,000. There is the variation in reference to the $25,000.

In reference to the $75,000 for the arrest of Booth and Herold, the War Department propose to give to Baker $3,000, to Doherty $7,500, to Conger $4,000, and to another man by the name of Baker $4,000. The Committee of Claims—and here is a material change—reported $17,500 for Baker, $17,500 for Conger, and $5,000 for the other Baker. The report that has been submitted I do not concur in. It so happened that the member of the Committee of Claims having charge of this report was not able until the last of the session to make his report, and I signed the report agreeing that it should be made, but I stated in writing that I did not concur in all of the views. Nevertheless, had I not been apprehensive that the effort to give these people this sum might have defeated the just and meritorious claim of Conger I should have offered my amendment.

I want to say that Conger was the brains and mostly the courage that brought to a successful issue the efforts to arrest Booth and Herold. It was through his sagacity that they first found the track that enabled them to follow up both to their destination. They got there at two o'clock at night. They called upon the man in whose tobacco house these men were secreted. Conger demanded to know where Booth was. He was told that he was not there. He said instantly, "Boys, give me a rope; I will hang this man." The man's son, fearing the execution of the threat, stated where Booth and Herold were. He then told his men to surround the barn. They were reluctant to do so in the moonlight. But he laid rails and caused them to stand there while he fired the building with his own hand. Thus by his skill and courage the arrest was made.

Now, if the report of the War Department is adopted, Conger is not rewarded. I say therefore, distinctly, I hope it will not be adopted. I hope this objection to Baker's claim will not cause the adoption of the War Department report, but that if the House is not willing to take the report of the Committee of Claims, it will adopt my substitute, and do something like justice to a man who for four years has been not only a brave soldier, but has suffered himself to be cut and hewed to pieces in the defense of his country. I propose to give Baker just what the War Department proposed to give.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired and debate is exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DRIGGS, it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the substitute offered by Mr. DELANO, and it was agreed to—ayes eighty-seven; noes not counted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following joint resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the thanks of Congress are hereby given to Allen Pinkerton, for his services in detecting the conspiracy to assassinate Abraham Lincoln in Baltimore, at the time of his passing through that city on his way to the capital to be inaugurated as President of the United States, in the spring of 1861, and preventing its accomplishment.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had concurred with the House in the passage of the resolution suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 406) for the removal of certain cases from State courts; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. No. 141) for the relief of Donahue, Ryan & Secor, builders of the iron-clad monitor Camanche; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and the regular order of business is the calling of the committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

TOWNSEND GLOVER.

Mr. BIDWELL, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a joint resolution authorizing the purchase of a certain collection or museum and the transfer of certain funds therefor by the Commissioner of Agriculture; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It authorizes the Commissioner of Agriculture to purchase of Townsend Glover, entomologist of the Department of Agriculture, his collection of natural history, of fruit, fungi, reptiles, insects, &c., at a sum not to exceed $10,000, if that amount can be spared from the appropriations heretofore made for that Department.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BIDWELL. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask that the Clerk read the letter which I now send to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 10, 1865.

DEAR SIR: During the session of Congress of 1855-56, two appropriations were made for agricultural purposes: one for $30,000, and the other for $75,000, as will be seen by reference to volume two of the Statutes-at-Large, pages 14 and 89.

I was at that time Commissioner of Patents, and had charge also of the Agricultural Department. Mr. Holloway, the present Commissioner of Patents, was then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives.

I was informed from various sources at the time, that among the items for the appropriations of that year was an estimate of $10,000 for the purchase of your specimens of fruits, with a view of having them permanently retained by the Government.

As, however, this purpose did not appear in the law itself, I had some scruple in regard to appropriating so much money for that purpose, but this scruple was removed by a statement prepared and signed by a majority of the members of each branch of Congress to the effect that such was their intention, and they desired to have it carried into effect.

The contract was accordingly regarded as having been closed, but before the money was paid and the transfer actually made, it was ascertained that so much of the appropriation had been devoted to other purposes that there was not sufficient remaining to make the payment to you. This is my best present recollection in relation to the matter.

Yours truly,
TOWNSEND GLOVER, Esq. CHARLES MASON.

Mr. BIDWELL. I might send to the Clerk's desk to be read many other communications relating to this subject. But the letter which has been read is sufficient to show that there was at one time an appropriation made for this purpose. I would also say that this collection in the Department of Agriculture is deemed to be one of great importance. It embraces many specimens of natural history of this country, and forms the foundation for a museum of natural history embracing specimens of the flora and fauna of this country, and more especially those things which relate nearly to agriculture. I believe there is now an implied contract on the part of the Government to purchase this collection of Mr. Glover, the price having been fixed at $10,000. Since that time the collection has been almost doubled in its proportions, and yet the committee propose that the same sum only shall be given for it now. I hope this joint resolution will be passed.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BIDWELL. I will.

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not know what this collection is worth in money; but I am fully satisfied that it is just what this Government ought to have. I believe that the idea embodied in that collection ought to be fully carried out. It embraces the classification of the agricultural and mineral substances out of which many products of art are formed; also, the various insects which are inimical to the production of certain substances, as well as those which are beneficial or which are innocuous. It also embraces the birds which prey upon certain insects which are injurious to fruits, and which are not; and these are so classified that any person going to that office, when the collection is complete, will find in regard to any particular product of agriculture the entire history and uses of it; the substances in the raw state, as well as in the various stages in which they are worked up into fabrics and articles of use. There is to be found there all the information which pertains to that whole class of subjects, arranged in such a manner that any agricultural department would, I think, be incomplete without it. This collection embraces such a numerous class of cases, not only of the productions of this country, but, to some extent, of the world, that the amount of information which can be obtained from that museum is of a value far beyond the price which it is now proposed to give for it. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BIDWELL. I call the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

On the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed there were—ayes 55, noes 16; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and Mr. BIDWELL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 26.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRADE WITH THE INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 610) in relation to trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS, ETC.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan, in pursuance of an agreement and compromise made with the Pottawatomie nation of Indians by treaty of 1846 with the United States, $39,000, in full of all claims in favor of said Michigan Indians, either against the United States or said nation of Indians, past, present, or future, arising out of any treaty made with them or any band or confederation thereof; and the annuity now paid to them is to be restored and paid to said nation for the future. This sum of $39,000 is to be paid out of funds now held by the United States in trust for said nation, drawing interest at the rate of five per cent.; the payment to be made per capita directly to heads of families, parents, or guardians of minors, as now required by law in reference to the payment of annuities.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say that this resolution grows out of a disagreement between certain tribes of Indians. A portion of the Ottawa and Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan removed to Kansas. There has always been a disagreement as to the amount due to those who remained behind. At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a bill appropriating $50,000 for the Chippewas. This House passed a bill appropriating a somewhat larger sum. The Indians of each of those tribes have sent on their representatives here this winter; and as it is simply a controversy between themselves, they have agreed on this bill, and desire very much that it shall be passed.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN TRIBES IN UTAH.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments joint resolution H. R. No. 92, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian tribes in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out the word "and," in line six, and after the word "severe" to insert "Buchanan & Co."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. I move in the fourteenth line to insert "$710."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to say one word. An appropriation was made for the Indian service in Utah. The Department thought all the just claims had been satisfied and the balance was transferred to the surplus fund. This is to provide that this balance may be again made available.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTHA A. ESTILL, OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WINDOM, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Martha A. Estill, of California; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides for the payment of $3,000, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 1st of January, 1853, for beef furnished to the Indians by her husband under contract.

Mr. SPALDING. There is an interest account in the bill which ought to be explained.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to say that in 1851-52 the Government appointed certain commissioners to make treaties with Indians in California, and one was this man McKee, who made this treaty with Estill. Those treaties provided that certain provisions should be furnished to the Indians. This beef was furnished at eight cents per pound. Congress heretofore has paid large bills at fifteen cents per pound to Fremont and others for beef furnished from the same localities. The committee examined the subject thoroughly and came to the conclusion that the claim was a just one.

Now, in reference to the interest account. It has been fourteen years since this beef was furnished. The committee were satisfied that it was sold at a reasonable price, and they have provided that interest should be paid at the rate of six per cent. per annum. If the House thinks it is not right it can be stricken out.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to strike it out.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD CHENERY.

Mr. WINDOM, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 588, for the relief of Richard Chenery, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WRIGHT. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation, and must, under the rules, have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the bill accordingly will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

BENJAMIN HOLLIDAY.

Mr. WINDOM, from the same committee, reported back the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 103, to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims, with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be non-concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the words "damages for change of route by military orders and;" so that the resolution would read:

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holliday as relates to property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. WINDOM moved that the House request a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL STEVENS, A STOCKBRIDGE INDIAN.

Mr. WINDOM, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 309, to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill authorizes Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase the tract of land known as lot No. 123, in the Stockbridge reservation, in the county of Calumet, and State of Wisconsin, under the act to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, Wisconsin, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1865. It also authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the entry and payment therefor, to cause a patent, in due form of law, to be accordingly issued to Samuel Stevens.

Mr. WINDOM. This bill is recommended by the Commissioner of Public Lands. The only question in reference to his right to pre-empt arises from the fact that his name is upon the roll as one of the members of the tribe, whereas he is really a citizen.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN T. JONES.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back Senate bill No. 122, for the relief of John T. Jones, an Ottawa Indian, for depredations committed by white persons upon his property in Kansas Territory.

The bill was read. It directs the payment of $6,700 for depredations, that being the amount adjudged by the Commissioner to be the value of the property destroyed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I raise the point of order that this is an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman to listen to the reading of the report. The bill has passed the Senate on three different occasions; the facts are simple and the report is brief.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will hear it read, reserving my right to object.

The report was read. It showed that the depredations were committed in August, 1856. In April, 1858, the Secretary of the Interior ordered an investigation. A report was made in July, 1858. The testimony of loyal whites established the fact of the loss of the dwelling valued at $7,000, of gold and silver to the amount of $700, and of injury to business to the amount of $7,000, this being less than half the amount claimed.

Mr. WRIGHT. The report shows that this is one of those old claims that has been no less than three times before Congress. This loss occurred long ago, and if we are going to take up the border troubles of—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman debates it he waives the point of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was going to say that under these circumstances I must insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER. Then it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is, the Committee on Indian Affairs having control of the morning hour.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I will not press it.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. ROSS. On behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of House bill No. 432, for the relief of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians. This matter has been fully examined. It is a claim founded upon a treaty between the General Government and this tribe of Indians.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Is that the church claim?

Mr. ROSS. No, sir; it appears by the treaty that they were to invest a certain amount of money in Government stock. Instead of doing that they invested it in Missouri and Tennessee State stocks which depreciated in value, so that when they came to receive their pay the stocks were sold, under protest, for what they would bring. This claim is for the difference between what they should have had and what they actually received under the treaty. A majority of the committee think they were entitled to interest upon this claim, but there is none allowed in the bill. It has been reported upon favorably by two or three previous committees and has passed through the lower House of Congress once or twice.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do I understand that these bonds were sold for less than par and now these Indians ask to be paid the difference between what they sold for and the par value of the securities?

Mr. ROSS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, you will have Wall street down on you by daylight to-morrow morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROSS. By the treaty stipulation the contract was to invest in Government securities. Instead of that they invested in State bonds of Missouri and Tennessee, and when payment became due the attorneys of the Indians received these bonds under protest and sold them for what they would bring. I have a report here, made in 1858, showing the amount due to these Indians.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Were they bound to take them?

Mr. ROSS. They were not bound to take them, but the debt was due them and they took these obligations and sold them for what they would bring. The Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs have both reported favorably upon this measure.

Mr. SPALDING. I would inquire—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is the motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The question being taken on the motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole, there were—ayes twenty-nine.

Mr. ROSS. I withdraw the motion.

HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, a joint resolution of the Senate No. 86, to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion.

The joint resolution was read at length. The first section repeals the joint resolution to provide for the printing of official reports of the armies of the United States, approved May 19, 1864. The second section authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint a competent person to revise, arrange, and prepare for publication the official documents relating to the rebellion and the operations of the Army of the United States, who shall prepare a plan for said publication and estimates of the cost thereof, to be submitted to Congress at its next session. The third section provides that the person whose appointment is hereby authorized shall receive a compensation for his services not to exceed $2,500 per annum, to be paid monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; provided, that said compensation shall not be paid for a longer period than two years from and after the passage of this resolution.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the word "revise" in the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I notice that the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint this historian. I would inquire if the Secretary of War knows who are good historians and who are not. It strikes me that this is rather a strange proposition.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Secretary of War is now authorized by law to publish these records at his discretion, and there is now being prepared an enormous record of about thirty volumes. This joint resolution proposes to repeal the law giving him that authority, and to authorize him to appoint some person to collate all the records, and to report at the next session to Congress what should be published, if anything. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES M. BLAKE.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back Senate joint resolution No. 177, for the relief of Charles M. Blake, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was read at length. It provides for the payment to Charles M. Blake of an amount equal to the pay and allowances of a chaplain in the Army for one year, namely, $1,560, less the amount which may have been paid him under a joint resolution for his relief, passed June 27, 1866.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with amendments, House bill No. 788, to establish and protect national cemeteries.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that in the arrangement of the national cemeteries in the States lately in rebellion and in the District of Columbia, established for the burial of deceased soldiers and sailors, the Secretary of War shall have the same inclosed with a good and substantial stone or iron fence; and hereafter such cemeteries shall be laid out in sections, to contain not less than two hundred nor more than three hundred graves, and to each section there shall be erected a marble monument on which shall be inscribed the name of each soldier buried in such section, with his rank, number of his regiment, his company, and State.

The second section provides that each grave shall be marked with a small marble headstone, with the number of the grave thereon, corresponding with the number opposite to the name of the party inscribed on the monument. And national cemeteries already established shall be made to conform as far as practicable to the foregoing plan.

The third section directs the said Secretary of War to erect at the principal entrance of each of the national cemeteries a suitable building to be occupied as a porter's lodge; and it shall be his duty to detail a meritorious and trustworthy sergeant to reside therein, for the purpose of guarding and protecting the cemetery and giving information to parties visiting the same. And the Secretary shall detail some officer of the Army, not under the rank of colonel, to visit annually all the cemeteries, and to inspect and report to him the condition of the same, and the amount of money necessary to protect them, to sod the graves, gravel and grade the walks and avenues, and to keep the sections and grounds in full and complete order; and the Secretary shall transmit the report to Congress at the commencement of each session, together with an estimate of the appropriation necessary for that purpose.

The fourth section provides that any person who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any tomb, monument, grave-stone, or other structure in any of the national cemeteries, or shall willfully destroy, cut, break, injure, or remove any tree, shrub, or plant within the limits of any of the national cemeteries, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, before any district or circuit court of the United States within any State or district where any of the national cemeteries are situated, shall be liable to a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment of not less than fifteen nor more than sixty days, according to the nature and aggravation of the offense. And the sergeant, or other officer on guard, in charge of any national cemetery, is authorized to arrest forthwith any person engaged in committing any misdemeanor herein prohibited, and to bring such person before any United States commissioner or judge of any district or circuit court of the United States within any State or district where any of the cemeteries are situated, for the purpose of holding the person to answer for the misdemeanor, and then and there shall make complaint in due form.

The fifth section makes it the duty of the Secretary of War to purchase from the owner or owners thereof, at such price as may be mutually agreed upon between the Secretary and such owner or owners, such real estate as in his judgment, is suitable and necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to obtain from the owner or owners title in fee-simple. And in case the Secretary of War shall not be able to agree with the owner or owners of any real estate needed for the purpose of this act upon the price to be paid therefor, or to obtain title in fee-simple for the same, he is authorized to enter upon and appropriate any real estate which, in his judgment, is suitable and necessary for the purposes of this act.

The sixth section authorizes the Secretary of War or the owner or owners of any real estate thus entered upon and appropriated to make application for an appraisement of the real estate thus entered upon and appropriated to any district or circuit court within any State or district where such real estate is situated; and any of the courts are authorized and required, upon such application, and in such mode and under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, to make a just and equitable appraisement of the cash value of the several interests of each and every owner of the real estate and improvements thereon entered upon and appropriated for the purposes of this act, and in accordance with its provisions.

The seventh section provides that the fee-simple of all real estate thus entered upon and appropriated for the purposes of this act, and of which appraisement shall have been made under the order and direction of any of the courts, shall, upon payment to the owner or owners, respectively, of the appraised value, or in case the owner or owners refuse or neglect for thirty days after the appraisement of the cash value of the real estate or improvements by any of the courts, to demand the same from the Secretary of War, upon depositing the appraised value in the court making such appraisement to the credit of said owner or owners, respectively, be vested in the United States, and its jurisdiction over the real estate shall be exclusive and the same as its jurisdiction over real estate purchased, ceded, or appropriated for the purposes of navy-yards, forts, and arsenals. And the Secretary of War is authorized and required to pay to the several owner or owners, respectively, the appraised value of the several pieces or parcels of real estate, as specified in the appraisement of any of the courts, or to pay into any of the courts by deposit, as before provided, the appraised value; and the sum necessary for such purpose may be taken from any moneys appropriated for the purposes of this act.

The eighth section appropriates the sum of $50,000 to carry out the purposes of this act out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments of the committee were to insert the words "or granite," after the word "marble" in the first section; and the words "or cast-iron" after the word "marble" in the second section.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF COLORADO.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865; which was read a first and second time.

The resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to settle with the proper authorities of the Territory of Colorado for the services of the first regiment of Colorado mounted militia, called into the service of the United States on the requisition of Colonel Thomas Moonlight, in the year 1865, and for the services of any other militia forces of said Territory which were employed in the service of the United States on the call of the Governor of the Territory in the year 1864; allowing in such settlements all amounts paid by the Territory to those troops for pay, use of horses, clothing, and other proper allowances during the time when they were actually in service; and the Secretary of War is to report to Congress in December next the amount found to be justly due.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of the officers of the thirteenth regiment United States colored heavy artillery; which was read a first and second time.

The resolution authorizes and instructs the proper accounting officers to pay to the officers of the regiment named the full pay and allowances of their several grades from the date on which they actually entered upon duty as officers of such regiment to the date from which they have already been paid, deducting such amounts as they may have received as pay of enlisted men during the period named.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BREVET APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution in relation to brevet appointments and commissions in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that hereafter every brevet appointment or commission conferred upon any officer of the Army shall specify precisely the distinguished act of gallantry or meritorious conduct for which the same is conferred, and which is intended to be rewarded by such brevet rank; and that the annual Army Register shall hereafter have appended to the name of each officer who has been or may be brevetted such particular statement of the act of gallantry or meritorious conduct for which the brevet was granted, and where and in what arm of the service or what department the same was performed or rendered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOCTOR ALEXANDER DUNBAR.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to contract on such terms as in his discretion he may think fair and reasonable with Dr. Alexander Dunbar for the use by the Government of his alleged discovery of a mode of treatment of the diseases of the horse's foot, and for his services for one year in instructing the farriers of the Army in such treatment; the amount agreed upon to be paid out of the fund already appropriated for the purchase of horses for the general support of the Army.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY PHELPS.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution appropriates $20,000 to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps for expenditures made by her in raising and equipping troops for the United States during the late rebellion, and for expenses incurred in succoring wounded soldiers, &c.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF GENERAL SCOTT.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution for the erection of an equestrian statue to the memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution appropriates $20,000 to H. K. Brown, of Newburg, New York, for an equestrian statue of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott, to be cast of guns captured in Mexico, and to be erected at West Point.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. KETCHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid on the table:

The memorial of Edwin B. Waggoner, of Richland county, Wisconsin, late lieutenant and prisoner at Andersonville, praying compensation for his services;

The petition of Edmund F. Jenkins for pay as second lieutenant from the date of his commission until the date of discharge;

The petition of D. W. Wallingford, late second lieutenant fifteenth Kansas cavalry volunteers, for compensation for services rendered as an officer, for which he was not paid; and

The petition of W. F. Scott, late adjutant fourth Iowa cavalry, for the difference between the pay of sergeant major and adjutant previous to his muster; also for the three months' extra pay proper.

Mr. ANCONA, from the Committee on Military Affairs, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid on the table:

The petition of H. B. Lacey, late brevet major United States volunteers, for relief for losses of property and vouchers taken and destroyed, without fault or negligence on his part;

The petition of J. B. Allen, late lieutenant and quartermaster seventy-second Pennsylvania volunteers, for relief from responsibility for certain money accounts lost during the Antietam campaign;

The petition of Henry C. Pearson, first lieutenant twenty-first regiment Pennsylvania volunteer cavalry, for compensation for loss of a horse and equipments; and

The memorial of Brevet Major General John B. Sanborn in favor of soldiers in southwest Missouri who furnished their private horses in the campaign of 1864.

Mr. ANCONA also reported adversely on the following resolution and bills of the House; which were laid on the table:

A resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of reporting an amendment to the act of March 3, 1849, providing payment for horses and equipments of officers lost by accident beyond the control of the owner, resulting from the management of railroad transportation, while in the service of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 542) to allow the extension of the wharf at St. Louis;

A bill (H. R. No. 751) for the relief of Henry C. Pearson; and

A bill (H. R. No. 752) for the relief of Samuel J. Green, late lieutenant third Pennsylvania volunteer cavalry.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to take from the Speaker's table the amendments of the Senate to the civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend that motion so that the Committee on Appropriations shall be instructed to report back as an amendment to those amendments the following amendment, to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union:

That, instead of any grant of land or other bounty, there shall be allowed and paid to each and every soldier, sailor, and marine who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States, and who has been or who may hereafter be honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one third dollars per month, or at the rate of $100 per year, as hereinafter provided, for all the time during which such soldier, sailor, or marine actually so served between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 19th day of April, 1865. And in case of any such soldier, sailor, or marine discharged from the service on account of wounds received in battle or while engaged in the line of his duty, the said allowance of bounty shall be computed and paid up to the end of the term of service for which his enlistment was made. And in case of the death of any such soldier, sailor, or marine while in the service, or in case of his death after the discharge and before the end of his term of enlistment, if discharged on account of being wounded, as provided, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow if she has not been remarried, or if there be no widow, then to the minor child or children of the deceased who may be under sixteen years of age.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid, or payable under existing laws, by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request prior to the 9th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to re-enlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and who did actually enlist or accept promotion or was so transferred. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically under oath, and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty, either from the United States or from any other source, and what amount of prize money, if any, has been paid or is payable to the soldier, sailor, or marine by whom or by whose representation the claim is made.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That whenever applications shall be made by any claimant, through any attorney or agent, the post office address of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the claim, which charges in no case shall exceed the sum of five dollars; and every such application shall be accompanied by the written affidavit of the attorney or agent that he has not charged, nor agreed for, and will not accept more than such sum of five dollars for his services in the case. The Paymaster General, or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the said attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than five dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall be forever thereafter excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That in case the payments shall be made in the form of a check, order, or draft upon any paymaster, national bank, or Government depository in or near the district wherein the claimant may reside, it shall be necessary for the claimant to establish, by the affidavits of two credible witnesses, that he is the identical person named therein; but in no case shall such checks, orders, or drafts be made negotiable until after such identification.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any soldier, sailor, or marine to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other papers for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act; and all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended so to be conveyed by any such soldier, sailor, or marine.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any soldier, sailor, or marine, or of his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, shall be made unless the application be filed within two years from the passage of the act; and the settlement of accounts of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be made in the same manner as now provided by law.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my object in offering this amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is to place the subject of the equalization of the bounties of the soldiers in such position as to force the Senate to some action on it. The House has passed the bill embodied in my amendment, but I fear it will not pass the other House during this session; and I want to put the subject in such shape as to compel action by both Houses. We ought not to adjourn without adopting some just system of equalization of soldiers' bounties. If my amendment should be adopted, and the Senate should refuse to concur, the subject can then go to a committee of conference where it can be so disposed of as to secure an agreement between the two Houses, and do justice to those who fought our battles. We ought not to delay this matter, and I hope the adoption of my amendment will secure speedy action.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to add that the committee be instructed to report the amendment, it was agreed to—ayes 69, noes 27.

The motion, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion, as amended, was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

FENIAN PRISONERS IN CANADA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to two resolutions of the House of Representatives of the 23d instant, in the following words, respectively—

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives respectfully request the President of the United States to urge upon the Canadian authorities and also the British Government the release of the Fenian prisoners recently captured in Canada."

"Resolved, That this House respectfully request the President to cause the prosecutions instituted in the United States courts against the Fenians to be discontinued, if compatible with the public interest."

I transmit a report on the subject from the Secretary of State, together with the documents which accompany it.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, July 26, 1866.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

NEUTRAL RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the regular order, being House bill No. 806, more effectually to preserve the neutral relations of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

That if any citizen of the United States shall, within the territory or jurisdiction thereof, accept and exercise a commission to serve a foreign prince, State, colony, district, or people in war, by land or by sea, against any prince, State, colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by fine and imprisonment, or either, at the discretion of the court in which such offender shall be convicted.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall, within the limits of the United States, fit out and arm, or attempt to fit out and arm, or procure to be fitted out and armed, or shall knowingly be concerned in the furnishing, fitting out, and arming of any ship or vessel with intent that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince, State, colony, district, or people to cruise or commit hostilities against the subjects, citizens, or property of any foreign prince or State, or any colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace; or shall issue or deliver a commission within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States for any ship or vessel to the intent that she may be employed as aforesaid, or shall have on board any person or persons who shall have been enlisted, or shall have engaged to enlist or serve, or shall be departing from the jurisdiction of the United States with intent to enlist or serve in contravention of the provisions of this act, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be punished by fine and imprisonment, or either of them, at the discretion of the court in which such offender shall be convicted; and every such ship and vessel, with her tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all materials, arms, ammunition, and stores, which may have been procured for the building and equipment thereof, shall be forfeited.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any collector of the customs, who is by law empowered to make seizures for any forfeiture incurred under any of the laws of customs, to seize such ships and vessels in such places and in such manner in which the officers of the customs are empowered to make seizures under the laws for the collection and protection of the revenue, and that every such ship and vessel, with the tackle, apparel, and furniture, together with all the materials, arms, ammunition and stores which may belong to or be on board such ship or vessel, may be prosecuted or condemned for the violation of the provisions of this act in like manner as ships or vessels may be prosecuted and condemned for any breach of the laws made for the collection and protection of the revenue.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, increase or augment, or procure to be increased or augmented, or shall knowingly be concerned in increasing or augmenting the force of any ship-of-war, or cruiser, or other armed vessel which, at the time of her arrival within the United States, was a ship-of-war, or cruiser, or armed vessel in the service of any foreign prince, or State, or colony, district, or people, or belonging to the subjects or citizens of any such prince, or State, or of any colony, district, or people, the same being at war with any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace, by adding to the number of guns of such vessels, or by changing those on board of her for guns of a larger caliber, or by the addition thereto of any equipment solely applicable to war, or shall have on board any person or persons who shall have been enlisted or engaged to enlist or serve, or who shall be departing from the jurisdiction of the United States with intent to enlist or serve in contravention of the provisions of this act, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be punished by fine and imprisonment, or either of them, at the discretion of the court in which such offender shall be convicted.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the district courts shall take cognizance of complaints, by whomsoever instituted, in cases of captures made within the waters of the United States, or within a marine league of the coasts or shores thereof.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That in every case in which a vessel shall be fitted out and armed; or in which the force of any vessel-of-war, cruiser, or other armed vessel shall be increased or augmented; and in every case of the capture of a ship or vessel within the jurisdiction or protection of the United States, as before defined; and in every case in which any process issuing out of any court of the United States shall be disobeyed or resisted by any person or persons having the custody of any vessel-of-war, cruiser, or other armed vessel of any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people, or of any subjects or citizens of any foreign prince, State, or of any colony, district, or people, in any such case it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such other person as he shall have empowered for that purpose, to employ such part of the land and naval forces of the United States, or of the militia thereof, for the purpose of taking possession of and detaining any such ship or vessel, with her prize or prizes, if any, in order to the execution of the prohibition and penalties of this act, and to the restoring the prize or prizes in the cases in which restoration shall have been adjudged.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such person as he shall empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land and naval forces of the United States, or of the militia thereof, as shall be necessary to compel any foreign ship or vessel to depart the United States in all cases in which by the laws of nations or the treaties of the United States, they ought not to remain within the United States.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That offenses made punishable by the provisions of this act, committed by citizens of the United States beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, may be prosecuted and tried before any court having jurisdiction of the offenses prohibited by this act.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit citizens of the United States from selling vessels, ships, or steamers built within the limits thereof, or materials or munitions, the growth or product of the same, to inhabitants of other countries or Governments not at war with the United States: Provided, That the operation of this act shall be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That nothing in the foregoing act shall be construed to prevent the prosecution or punishment of treason or any piracy defined by the laws of the United States.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BANKS. I move to amend the first section by inserting after the word "fine," in the tenth line, the words "not exceeding $2,000," and after the word "imprisonment," the words "not exceeding two years."

Mr. JENCKES. The uniform rule in the statutes of the United States is $3,000 and three years. There is a number of these statutes punishing offenses, and I hope the gentleman will accept the amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I propose to change it in this instance.

Mr. JENCKES. It would be in conformity to the statutes to make it read, "by fine not exceeding $3,000 and imprisonment not exceeding three years, either or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. BANKS. They are both included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I also move to amend the second section by inserting after the words "be punished by fine," the words "not exceeding $1,000," and after the words "and imprisonment" the words "not exceeding two years." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I also move to amend the third section by inserting after the words "and shall upon conviction thereof be punished by fine" the words "not exceeding $3,000," and after the word "imprisonment," the words "not exceeding three years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I would suggest that this third section be further amended by adding to the closing words of the section, namely, "shall be forfeited," the words "to the United States of America;" so that the forfeiture shall go entirely to the Government.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I desire to call attention to another amendment, which I think should be made in the sixth section. That section now reads:

That the district courts shall take cognizance of complaints, by whomsoever instituted, in cases of captures made within the waters of the United States, or within a marine league of the coasts or shores thereof.

I think it should be amended by inserting after the word "complaints," the words "informations, indictments, or other proceedings."

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. And section ten, I think, should be amended. That section now reads:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit citizens of the United States from selling vessels, ships, or steamers built within the limits thereof, or materials or munitions the growth or product of the same, to inhabitants of other countries or to Governments not at war with the United States: Provided, That the operation of this act shall be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war.

I think the word "munitions" should be stricken out and the word "articles" inserted.

Mr. BANKS. Insert the word "articles" after the word "materials."

Mr. JENCKES. I will agree to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I think the proviso in this section should be amended. I move to amend the proviso so that it shall read:

That the operation of this section of this act may be suspended by the President of the United States in regard to all classes of purchases whenever the United States shall be engaged in war or whenever the continuance of friendly relations with any foreign nation may in his judgment require it.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I have an amendment to suggest to section eleven, which now reads:

That nothing in the foregoing act shall be construed to prevent the prosecution or punishment of treason or any piracy defined by the laws of the United States.

I move to insert after the word "piracy" the words "or other felony." If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] will look into the Constitution of the United States he will find that the power to pass this bill is derived from the power given to Congress to define and punish piracies and felonies on the high seas. And felonies on the shores of the high seas have been declared to be punishable.

Mr. BANKS. I will not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to the twelfth section, which now reads:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

I would inquire of the gentleman if he regards this section as sufficiently specific. There may be provisions not inconsistent with this act applying to other conditions of circumstances, which ought also to be repealed. Ought there not to be a specific repeal of the present existing neutrality laws, naming them particularly?

Mr. BANKS. The committee had supposed that this section was sufficiently specific. But I will not object to any proposition the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] may submit.

Mr. SCHENCK. I think there should be a specific repeal of all former neutrality laws.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope that will not be done at this time, because there may be some important provisions of the neutrality laws to which the attention of the committee has not been called, and which may be very important to the interests of the Government.

Mr. SCHENCK. Under the terms of this act, all the provisions of our present neutrality laws which are not inconsistent with this act, but go beyond it, will stand.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, let them stand.

Mr. CONKLING. It strikes me that there is something in the objection suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK;] and with the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] I will move to amend by inserting after the word "acts," in the next to the last line, the words "or inflicting any further or other penalty or forfeiture than hereinbefore provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to trespass on the patience of the House by a lengthy discussion of this bill, but I desire to occupy a few minutes in explaining the modifications of the neutrality act of 1818 recommended by the Committee of Foreign Affairs. I will not debate the origin of the statutes of 1794 and 1797, or those of 1817 and 1818; I content myself with stating simply the modifications proposed.

The object of the committee has been to scale the neutrality act of 1818 to the standard of the foreign enlistment act enacted by Great Britain in 1819. The provisions of the bill which has been read are essentially the same as the provisions enacted for the same purpose in the foreign-enlistment act of Great Britain. With the exception of the section giving to citizens of the United States authority to sell vessels, the material of which they are made, and munitions of war to Governments or citizens of Governments with whom the United States may not be at war, there is nothing in this bill which is not contained in that act, and there is no provision in that act which is not substantially embraced in this bill.

One of the proposed changes is the repeal of that provision which prohibits the fitting out vessels without the jurisdiction of the United States. That section of the act of 1818 makes the Government responsible for the acts of those beyond its jurisdiction. This is a responsibility which belongs to other Governments; not to ours. The bill presented provides, however, that if citizens who have committed crimes beyond its jurisdiction shall return to the United States they shall be punished. This corresponds with the provision in the English act. It provides also for the repeal of the ninth section of the act of 1818, which requires owners and consignees of armed vessels departing from our shores to give bonds for their good conduct, whether these vessels are under the command and control of citizens of the United States or of citizens of foreign States, or within or beyond its jurisdiction. It also repeals the very oppressive and onerous provision of section eleven, which commands collectors of customs to detain vessels whenever there shall be any cause to suspect, either from the crew, cargo, "or other circumstances," that they were to be against other Governments. In place of this the bill provides that collectors of the customs shall have power to prosecute any vessel for offenses against this act, precisely as they have power to prosecute under similar circumstances for offenses against the laws for the protection and collection of the revenue of the United States, upon the effective execution of which the Government depends for its existence.

The bill also repeals the provision giving informers one half the fines and forfeitures that may result from the execution of the law. No such provision is contained in the English act. The amendments proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] and adopted by the House provide that all the proceeds of the prosecution shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill also repeals the sixth section of the act of 1818, against setting on foot expeditions against a foreign Government. The effect of that section is to enable the Government to hold a single man, a society, or association of men responsible for acts committed by a people. It is not contained in the English law. Instead of this the bill proposes that every man engaged in any enterprise prohibited by the provisions of this act or the laws of the country, shall be held responsible for what he himself does and shall be punished for any violation of law.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BANKS. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. I understood the gentleman to say that, as amended, the bill gave the whole forfeiture to the United States. Is that one of the amendments which has been adopted by the House?

Mr. BANKS. The amendment has been adopted by the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I do not think there will ever be a prosecution. I suppose that is the object of it.

Mr. BANKS. The Government is remanded to the persons by whom the offenses are committed. It is a provision which is based upon sound principles of law and justice. On the other hand, the bill gives the Government every power required for maintaining the neutrality of the nation. It gives the Government power to prevent and punish enlistments within the United States for hostilities against foreign Powers. It prohibits and punishes the organization of any expedition within the United States against other Governments by making every man engaged therein responsible for his crime. It gives to the President, the same as the law of 1818, power to use the land and naval forces to execute the law; and also to compel foreign vessels, if necessary, to depart from the country.

The bill clothes the collectors, as I have said before, with power to prosecute violations of this law as in the prosecution of violations of the revenue laws, upon which the existence of the Government depends. It provides for the punishment of citizens who have committed offenses against other Governments beyond its jurisdiction whenever they shall have returned. It withholds nothing given by other Governments to maintain in force laws of neutrality, but imposes upon the people no restrictions not necessary for maintaining peace with other nations. Beyond this I have nothing to say. I repeat, the purpose and object of this bill is to modify our statutes to correspond with the statutes of Great Britain, to place them upon a level with those of other Governments, and to give our citizens, as far as possible, all the privileges necessary to the full development of the prosperity and power of the country, and which may not conflict with the rights of other Governments. The single addition made by the committee in this bill is that embodied in section ten. It provides—

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act or any other existing law shall be so construed as to prohibit citizens of the United States from selling vessels, ships, or steamers built within the limits thereof, or materials or munitions of war the growth or product of the same, to inhabitants of other countries or to Governments not at war with the United States: Provided, That the operation of this section of this act shall be suspended by the President with regard to any classes of purchasers, whenever or wherever the maintenance of friendly relations with any foreign nation may, in his judgment, require it.

It is believed by many well-informed citizens that this right now exists. But citizens are prosecuted for its violation and the business of the country is greatly impeded by this uncertainty. Therefore, to remove all doubt, the committee have reported this section.

I surrender the floor now to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND.]

Mr. RAYMOND. My main purpose in rising, Mr. Speaker, is to move the substitution of a resolution reported by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the bill now before the House. I do not propose to enter upon any discussion either of the bill or of the very important principles which it embodies. I think that even the cursory statement just made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will show the House that the change proposed in the neutrality laws of this country is one of a very sweeping character and one which ought not to be made without more careful deliberation than it is now in our power at present to give it. I think the position which the United States has always held on the subject of the duties and obligations of neutrality has been such as to command in a very high and marked degree the respect of all other nations as well as the confidence and approval of our own people.

While our Government has always given the largest scope to the claims of neutral Powers it has also assumed in the fullest and most complete manner all the obligations and duties of neutrality. It has provided, I think, more fully than any other nation for the preservation of the rights and obligations of neutrality toward all other Powers. While it claims to the fullest extent that neutral nations shall enjoy the rights to which they are entitled as against belligerents, it has also held that war was exclusively the concern of the Government, and that individual citizens in any nation should never be allowed either to make war or to commit acts calculated to lead the nation into war without the fullest sanction of the Government, with whom alone that right and that power exist. And while it has always had upon its statute-books stringent laws of neutrality conformable in all respects to the rights of neutrality, it has also endeavored—sometimes I admit with indifferent success—to enforce these laws with rigid and exact justice, and to prevent citizens of the country from making war with any Power to which the Government itself had not previously made itself a party. It seems to me well for us to consider whether we can afford, in point of character—I do not speak of what we can afford to do in point of interest—to depart from the great principles which were laid down and embodied in the action of our Government under the administration of Washington, and which has continued to sway its counsels without interruption from that day to this.

But, as I said, I do not wish to enter at this late day upon any discussion of the general principles which this subject involves. I rose rather to say that it seems to me, as it seemed to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. PATTERSON,] who joined me in the minority report, that this subject merits much more full and careful consideration than we are now able to give it. But a few months will elapse before we shall again reassemble in the December session. The resolution reported by the minority proposes that a joint committee, to consist of three members of the Senate and six members of the House, shall take into consideration during the recess the subject of revising our neutral laws, and that they shall report at the next session such changes as they think it wise and expedient to make in order to conform these laws to the changed condition of international affairs and the progressive spirit of the age. I submit to the House that in that way we shall stand a much better chance of attaining results which will be satisfactory to us as well as to the people of the whole country than by acting in this necessarily hasty and imperfect manner upon the bill now brought before the House. I know no exigency in our public affairs which requires us to enter upon an immediate change in our neutrality laws. On the contrary, circumstances exist which incline me to believe that caution is more than ever requisite in making such a change. I can very readily see how the enactment of such a law as this, in haste necessarily, might encourage individual enterprises and expeditions at war with the spirit of our laws and with the real interests and honor of the nation.

It is proposed in this bill, moreover, as the chairman of the committee has stated, to base our laws of neutrality, not upon the principles which we ourselves have always held on this subject, but upon the laws and practices of a foreign Power. Now, sir, I submit that that is not a wise basis for our action. I concur fully in the sentiment that members cherish here concerning the action of certain foreign Powers on the subject of neutrality during our recent civil war. But do we not owe it to our own dignity and honor to continue to do hereafter what we have always done hitherto—base public laws of this kind upon the public principles which have come to be known as the American principles on the subject of international law? I shall with great reluctance consent to a departure from that which is our traditional policy, and which I believe to be the policy most consistent with the dominion and greatness of our nation. Especially should I be unwilling to make these serious changes in so hasty and imperfect a manner as these must be made if they are made now in the way proposed.

I move to amend this bill by substituting the resolution reported by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. A joint resolution or a bill cannot be amended by substituting a concurrent resolution for it, for the two are incongruous.

Mr. RAYMOND. I understand that the bill is before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RAYMOND. My proposition is to substitute a joint resolution for it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. RAYMOND. I move, then, to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That a joint committee of three members of the Senate and six members of the House of Representatives be appointed to revise the several statutes affecting the neutral relations of the people of the United States with those of other nations, and to consider and report what legislation is necessary to secure to the people of the United States the rights enjoyed by other nations; to secure the largest liberty of intercourse and trade consistent with permanent peace, and to harmonize the statutes of the United States upon this subject with those of other nations, and with the progressive spirit of the age.

The SPEAKER. The motion to amend is not now in order, pending the motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKS. I will withdraw the motion to recommit, in order to allow my colleague on the committee [Mr. RAYMOND] to offer the amendment he proposes.

Mr. RAYMOND. I now move the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. BANKS. I now renew the motion to recommit, and will yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. SCHENCK. Before the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] proceeds, I rise to a question of order. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND,] it would require, if adopted, the assent of the President to the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order which the gentleman makes?

Mr. SCHENCK. My point of order is, that it is not competent to put into the shape of a law requiring the signature of the President the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions appointing joint committees are not necessarily required to be sent to the President for his signature. But if Congress should consider the subject important enough they could send a resolution of that kind to the President. It may be an argument against the adoption of a joint resolution that it requires the President to approve the appointment of a joint committee of Congress; but it is not a point of order. The Constitution reads as follows:

"Every order, resolution, or vote to which the com-currency of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him," &c.

This clause has been construed so as not to require the signature of the President for simple concurrent resolutions of the two Houses. But if Congress should see fit they could send a resolution appointing a joint committee to the President for his signature.

Mr. ORTH. I will not detain the House long, because I am admonished by the closing hours of the session that debate cannot be indulged in to any great extent. I presume, also, that this House is prepared to vote upon the principles contained in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I trust this House will not sanction the appointment of a joint committee, as proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND.] This neutrality act has been upon our statute-book for nearly fifty years. And for this long time this great and powerful Republic has occupied a position before the world of placing upon her citizens restraints and curbs that no other nation on earth places upon its citizens or subjects. I think it is high time that our neutrality act should be so amended as to conform to the liberal spirit of the age. And if we pass this bill to-day I believe our action will be in full accord with the opinion and the outspoken sentiment of our constituents; a sentiment which demands that our country shall take her position as an equal with the most powerful nation on earth, and proudly maintain such position, if need be, by the strong arm of the Republic.

Whence the necessity of referring this subject to a joint committee of the two Houses for deliberation? Why give to this statute, old, hoary-headed with error, which should never have been upon our statute-books at all, a degree of consideration which is denied to the most important of our other laws? Is there any sanctity about this neutrality law except that which may have accrued to it from age? The only effect of such reference will be to retard legislation on this subject, and keep in force for a longer period a policy far from complimentary to our manhood as a nation. Let us show that as a nation we will no longer impose shackles and restraints upon our people which other nations less free and less liberal do not impose upon theirs. Let us especially show to Great Britain—and I presume no one will claim that we are under any obligations to her for her conduct toward us during the last five years—let us show Great Britain that if we apply to her the same test of neutrality that she has applied to us, she, at least, has no cause for complaint; that in adopting this law we but follow the precedent that she has set us, when we refuse to hold our people to a stricter neutrality than she enforces upon her people.

But I did not rise for the purpose of entering into a discussion of the merits of this bill. I rose simply to oppose the reference of this subject to a joint committee of the two Houses, for no good can result from such reference. If our neutrality law is wrong and requires amendment, let us amend it now, and not wait action which is uncalled for, and which is hardly without a precedent in the history of congressional legislation. Let us not sanction the idea that we cannot touch a law, amend it, or repeal it without first referring it to a joint committee of the two Houses. The bill is right, and should speedily become a law.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON.]

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose this bill, nor indeed to discuss it; for I concur heartily in the general scope of the able report of the chairman of the committee on this subject. But, sir, I desire to state my reasons for signing the minority report.

The bill has never been read before our committee. I never heard of the bill until yesterday morning at a meeting of the committee of about fifteen minutes' duration. Now, sir, the purpose and effect of the bill are to modify, if not entirely change, the policy of this Government, adopted under the auspices and direction of Washington and adhered to from that time to this—a policy under which our commerce has enlarged and prospered, and our rights and liberties been fully maintained. This bill is to affect all our interests as a commercial people; it is to affect our relations with foreign Governments now and hereafter. It proposes an essential and important change in the legislation of this country; and it appears to me to present questions of such gravity and magnitude as to demand more deliberate consideration than we can possibly give it in the few remaining hours of this session. Certainly a bill involving questions of such serious import should be maturely and thoroughly considered by the committee reporting it; and it appears to me to be a measure of such a nature that it should emanate from the best legal ability of this country, acting upon the most thorough and deliberate consideration.

Now, sir, the chairman of the committee may have considered this question thoroughly, and of course is justified under such circumstances in reporting the bill. But as regards myself, I have not considered it. At a time like this, when the principal nations of Europe are engaged in a war which may ultimately involve the whole of Europe, and when our own relations toward France and England are such as to demand our serious attention, we should not, it seems to me, by a measure of this kind, hastily considered and hurriedly passed, take a step which may effect our interests in such a way as to cause us grave regret hereafter. We should remember that we are even now asking of England reparation for injuries which we have suffered at her hands during the late war, from an administration of affairs which she claims is in entire accordance with her neutrality laws. Should we now modify our own neutrality laws so as to correspond with the law of England, we may thereby place ourselves at a disadvantage in our controversy with that nation. In my opinion, we ought, standing upon our present legislation, to make our demand and insist upon it. It is for these reasons, and for these reasons only, that I object to the consideration of this bill now. At a proper time, and after due consideration, I might be inclined to support it. I am opposed to hasty legislation on questions of such reach and magnitude.

Mr. BANKS. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, I concur with those who have expressed a wish that we had time to consider this bill with greater deliberation; yet I am in favor of final action within the time that remains. My colleague, [Mr. RAYMOND,] who says everything well, remarked that our neutrality laws have long commanded the respect of other nations. He might have gone further and told us that our acts of neutrality, as well as our laws of neutrality, have long commanded, not only the respect, but the approbation of foreign nations. Sir, there was a time when we might be the objects of this respect, the recipients of this approbation, if not with satisfaction, at least with indifference. That was the time when we were in the midst of undisturbed prosperity. It was when we were every now and then engaged, because bound in honor and in law to do so, in discharging our obligations of neutrality as inscribed upon our statute-book, giving to them a broad and generous interpretation. This was when with unflinching hand we chastised all interference in the struggles of other nations, now in the interest of England, now of France, and then of Spain against the Spanish American Republics.

But, Mr. Speaker, there came another time. There came a dark and portentous hour—an hour when we were no longer prosperous, but when we were in time of trouble—in the throes of distressing revolution. Then we were, as we had a right to suppose, to receive a just return for the hard faith we had so sacredly kept. Did we receive a just return? Did we receive any return which a proud and powerful people can brook? Did we receive any return which leaves us self-respect, not to speak of satisfaction, when we remember that we have enacted international comity into laws, that we have bound ourselves more and more by enactments in the interest of foreign Powers, that we have disciplined and hampered our people as other nations have not hampered or disciplined theirs, and that at last we have been despitely used and put off with excuses when our calamities seemed to have left us without power to exact our rights?

If we once derived pleasure from our painstaking foreign policy on the subject of neutrality, or if we once viewed it with indifference, that time is gone, and the feeling of the nation is changed. American citizens, of all nationalities, feel that if we have been parties to a golden rule we have received no exemplification of its spirit from our haughty neighbors, and now fair play and equal rights is to be the rule.

Look at the last four years. Begin with the Trent affair. Remember our harmless merchantmen burned at midnight in mid-ocean. Consider the Canadian raid upon Vermont and its issue. Recall the building of rams and the fitting out of pirates; and then the laggard and shambling efforts to arrest them. Do not forget the recent incursion upon Canada nor the rigorous fidelity with which the Government punished that incursion. Bear in mind the approbation with which that rigor was received in England, the gracious praise of the "Thunderer" of Fleet street; and from which shall we derive consolation? I remember all these things, and in the light of all I am unwilling to vote to postpone this bill, and I am in favor of such a change in our neutrality laws as will give to other nations neither more nor less than we ourselves receive. The particular bill before us was so recently reported that I have been unable to examine it except as I followed the reading from the desk. If it had not been reported from a committee in whose learning and ability I have so much confidence, I might feel more solicitude than I do as to its provisions in detail, and a greater reluctance to vote with so little deliberation.

I am willing to accept the assurance of its author, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] that it so readjusts the standard of neutral obligation as to make it conform to that which the leading Governments of Europe have established. I receive it as a measure of equality between America and the other nations of the earth.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the law now reported is not substantially the original neutrality law of the United States, the first one ever adopted by any nation?

Mr. BANKS. The bill reported, I will say, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Rhode Island, is identical with that adopted during Washington's administration, and from which we have since departed.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask whether that portion of the neutrality laws complained of recently was not adopted at the request of the Portuguese and Spanish Governments.

Mr. BANKS. Such is the impression made by the history of the times.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask further, whether in the Russell and Adams correspondence the whole history of these neutrality laws has not been exposed.

Mr. BANKS. I believe it has.

Mr. PAINE. The tenth section of the bill proposes to permit citizens of the United States to sell vessels and steamers to foreign Governments. The chairman of the committee has informed the House that the reason for this provision was that an impression had prevailed that such sales were prohibited and punishable. Accordingly, it is here provided "that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prohibit citizens of the United States from selling vessels, ships, or steamers built within the limits thereof, or materials or munitions the growth or product of the same, to inhabitants of other countries or to Governments not at war with the United States; provided that the operation of this act shall be suspended whenever the United States shall be engaged in war."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this. Will not these same prohibitions which he imagines exist in other laws still exist even though this section shall be passed? Will it not, therefore, be necessary, in order to carry out the object he proposes, to provide that this should not be prohibited either by this act or any other act. I suggest, therefore, to amend so as to have it read "that nothing in this act or in any other existing law shall be so construed," &c.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, to add after the words "this act" the words "or any other act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say a few words. I will not trespass long for I wish a vote before the recess to-day. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] was carefully considered by the gentlemen composing the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and upon a call of the roll of the committee it was disapproved by them with the exception of himself and the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. PATTERSON.] It was the judgment of the committee that this question be met now and that it should not be postponed; that both the committee and the House would be in a condition to pass final judgment upon the subject. Therefore, I trust, whatever that judgment may be, we shall not consent to a postponement, but approve or disapprove of the bill according to the judgment of the House. Let me here say a word in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] that this bill had not been read in committee. The gentleman did not honor us with his attendance except at the last moment of our deliberations upon the subject. We had given many hours of careful consideration to the subject for several weeks past.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would say to the gentleman that to the best of my knowledge I have been absent from but one meeting. I was absent one week, and if this matter was brought up at any time in the committee it must have been then.

Mr. BANKS. There have been several meetings of the committee on this subject. Perhaps the gentleman's attention was not called to it, because it was for a considerable time in the hands of a sub-committee. But at the last meeting of the committee when the bill was agreed to, the principles of it were distinctly stated as well as the points of agreement and disagreement between it and the other acts of this Government upon this subject as well as of Great Britain, and if the gentleman had desired the reading of the bill proposed it would have been read. It is suggested that we ought not to depart from the early policy of the Government on this subject. Let me say that the first object of this bill is to return to the early policy of the Government. Its provisions are substantially those of the act of 1794, enacted under the administration of Washington. Of the ten sections of this act, all are retained in this bill with one exception. Its passage will bring our legislation back to the policy of Washington's administration. The acts of 1797, 1817, and 1818 were departures from the policy of the Government, the principles of international law, and the legislation of every other Government. This bill strikes from the statutes enacted since 1794 the unnecessary, unusual, and onerous restrictions and prohibitions upon the commerce of the country and the power of its people.

I do not like to say much about the history of this legislation because it is not an agreeable subject; but it appears distinctly in the history of the periods to which I have referred that the changes in the neutrality law of 1794 were made to correspond, not with the wishes of the people or Government, or with a view to its interest or prosperity, but at the solicitation, and I might say at the demand, almost, of foreign Governments, and especially of Portugal and Spain, supported by Great Britain. We made our laws to correspond with their interests and wishes rather than our own, because we were in a condition not to resist that which they pressed upon us. But it was distinctly stated by John Adams, as President, by John Quincy Adams, as Secretary of State, and more recently by Mr. Adams, representing our Government at the Court of St. James, that the legislation and policy of that day were adopted with a full comprehension that the time would come when the people of this country would be able to assert their own right, upon the judgment of the people alone rather than at the dictation or upon the representations of representatives of foreign Governments. The question for this House to determine is whether that time has come. Sir, I think it has come.

If we want anything to prove our power, let us look at the history of this country for the last five years. If anything is required to exhibit our sense of justice, let the world look at the manner in which we have enforced our own laws against our own citizens, suffering under irreparable wrongs, at the demands of a Government that has been most unjust and ungenerous toward us. If anything is required to satisfy the world of our sense of justice, we offer it assuredly in the history of this country for the years just closed. But the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. PATTERSON] suggests that upon this subject we should call in the aid of the best legal talent that can be obtained. Sir, we have had enough of the best legal talent for the surrender of our rights. What we want now is talent for maintaining them. I would rather go to the hearts of the people and take counsel of their courage and love of country than to professional men, of whatever class or character, for instruction as to what should be our action upon this question. Let me ask my friend from New Hampshire, should he go to the people of the State he represents and asks them whether it is time to defend the rights of this country against Great Britain, what he supposes their answer would be.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the gentleman want a reply to his question?

Mr. BANKS. If the gentleman is able to give it, I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am as heartily in sympathy with the cause of liberty in this country or in the Old World as the gentleman himself can be. If the gentleman refers to Ireland, as he undoubtedly does, let me say to him that to that country I owe my origin, and I am as deeply interested in its liberty as he can be. My opposition to this bill is because it is being pushed too rapidly through this House when great interests of the country are involved in its passage. That is the only objection I have made to the passage of this bill; no other objection whatever.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman says he owes his origin to Ireland. All I can say is that his opposition to this bill does his origin no credit.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to help preserve the credit of my origin.

Mr. BANKS. But the gentleman has not answered my question. I ask him again whether he supposes, if he should go to the people of New Hampshire and ask them whether the time had come when we should strike from our statute-books restrictions and prohibitions upon our power and prosperity, which were placed there at the dictation of foreign nations, they would say that it was not yet time. Sir, I do not believe there is one son of New Hampshire who would not say that this is the time, or who would say that any higher talent is required in determining this question than the spirit of justice which fills the hearts of the people. But it is not necessary to debate this question further. The proposition submitted by the committee is, that we shall return to the statutes and policy of the age of Washington. Our purpose is to strike from our statutes unusual and unjust restrictions and prohibitions upon the privileges of our citizens and upon the power of our country which now stand upon our statute-books, but which are to be found upon the statute-books of no other nation upon the face of the earth. The bill we propose gives to the Government of the United States power to maintain our relations of neutrality with other nations, and at the same time relieves our citizens from restrictions and prohibitions that no considerations of fidelity or justice to other nations can justify.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. RAYMOND, and it was rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 0, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cooper, Cullom, Dawes, DeFrees, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Woodbridge—63.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ANCONA. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. DAWSON, is absent and is paired generally with Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague, Mr. WASHBURN, is necessarily absent, and is paired upon this vote, as also upon the admission of Tennessee, with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. GRIDER.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. My colleague, Mr. DEMAS HUBBARD is absent on account of sickness. If he were here I have no doubt he would vote for this bill.

Mr. WARD. The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. J. L. THOMAS is sick. If he were here he would vote for this bill.

Mr. NEWELL. The gentleman from New York, Mr. MARVIN, is absent. If he were present he would vote "ay."

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from New York, Mr. DARLING, has gone home in consequence of sickness in his family. If he were here he would vote "ay."

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. My colleagues,

Messrs. HUMPHREY and POMEROY, are both absent, and on general questions are paired. If they were here I presume they would both vote for this bill.

When the call of the roll had been concluded, The SPEAKER, directing his name to be called, voted "ay."

The result was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a bill to further regulate the printing of public documents and the purchase of paper for the public printing; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, provides in the first section that hereafter it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, in place of the reports of the executive Departments ordered by the act of June 25, 1864, to cause to be printed and bound twenty-five hundred copies of the annual reports of the executive Departments, with such accompanying documents as the heads of those Departments may respectively select, but not to exceed three hundred pages, for the use of said Departments, respectively.

The second section proposes to enact that whenever papers relating to foreign affairs shall be communicated to Congress, accompanying the annual message of the President, it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to cause to be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, two thousand copies for the use of the members of the Senate, four thousand copies for the use of the House, and twenty-five hundred copies for the use of the State Department, in place of the numbers ordered by the act of June 25, 1864.

The third section provides that in the publication of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, the detailed statement of offers for supplies and of articles embraced in each class under contract be omitted, and in lieu thereof the Secretary of the Navy shall prepare and submit with his report a schedule embracing the offers by classes, indicating such as have been accepted.

It is provided in the fourth section that it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, at the commencement of each session of Congress, to submit to the Joint Committee on Printing, estimates of the quantity of paper of all descriptions which will, in his opinion, be required for the execution of the public printing during the coming year. The Joint Committee on Printing shall then fix upon a standard of paper for the different descriptions of congressional and executive printing, and it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to advertise in only two newspapers published in each of the cities of New York, Cincinnati, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, for sealed proposals to furnish the Government of the United States with paper of the quality and in the quantity specified in the advertisements, and it shall be the duty of the Superintendent to furnish samples of the standard papers adopted by the committee to applicants therefor; such sealed proposals to be opened before, and the award of contracts to be made by, the Joint Committee on Printing. It is provided that the advertisement for sealed proposals for furnishing paper shall designate the minimum portion of each particular quality of paper required for either three months, six months, or one year, as the Joint Committee on Printing may determine; but when the minimum portion so specified shall exceed in any case one thousand reams, the advertisement shall state that proposals will be received for one thousand reams or more. No proposals are to be considered by the Joint Committee on Printing unless accompanied by satisfactory evidence that the person or persons making such proposals are manufacturers of or dealers in the description of paper which they propose to furnish. In awarding contracts an equitable period of time for filling the same is to be designated and allowed by the Joint Committee on Printing, without whose approval no contract shall be valid. It is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to include in his annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all proposals made and contracts entered into for the purchase of paper.

The fifth section proposes to enact that it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to compare every lot of paper delivered by any contractor with the standard of quality, and also to see that it is of the weight contracted for, and to refuse to accept any paper from any contractor which does not conform to the standard of quality and is not of the stipulated weight. In case of difference of opinion between the Superintendent of Public Printing and any contractor for paper with respect to its quality, the matter of difference is to be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing. In default of any contractor to comply with his contract in furnishing the paper contracted for in the proper time and of proper quality and weight, it is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to report the same to the Joint Committee on Printing if Congress is in session, or to the Secretary of the Interior if during a recess of Congress, and he shall, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing or of the Secretary of the Interior as the case may be, enter into a new contract with the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the Government, among those whose proposals were rejected at the last opening of bids, or advertise for new proposals, under the regulations before established; and during the interval which may thus be created, he shall, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing or of the Secretary of the Interior, as provided, purchase in open market at the lowest market price, all such paper necessary for the public service. For any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of paper for the use of the Government, the contractor or contractors in default and his or their securities are to be charged with and held responsible for the same, and are to be prosecuted upon their bond by the Solicitor of the Treasury, in the name of the United States, in the circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defaulting contractor resides. To enable the Solicitor to do so, it is made the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to report to him the default on its happening, with a full statement of all the facts in the case. The Joint Committee on Public Printing, or, during the recess of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to empower the Superintendent of Public Printing to make purchases of paper, in open market, at the lowest market price, whenever in their opinion the quantity required is so small, or the want is so immediate, as not to justify advertisement for and award of contract therefor.

The sixth section provides for the repeal of all laws or parts of laws, joint resolutions or parts of resolutions, conflicting with the above provisions; and it provides also that the Superintendent of Public Printing shall not print any greater number of the reports herein named unless otherwise directed by either House of Congress.

Mr. LAFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House a single moment in the discussion of this bill. It has been submitted to the Joint Committee on Public Printing, and meets their approval. It is also approved by the Superintendent of Public Printing.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HOGAN. The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 324) entitled "An act for the relief of John M. Avery," have directed me to report adversely upon it, and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, the purpose sought having been accomplished by other means.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOGAN. I am also directed to report back, with a similar recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 323) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864.

The bill was laid on the table.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit the following report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their eighth amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In line nine, page 1 of the engrossed bill, strike out "$2 50" and in lieu thereof insert "three dollars."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line two of said amendment strike out the words "and directed," and in line three, after the words "collection in," insert the words "any of;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. P. FESSENDEN,
J. M. HOWARD,
J. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES A. GARFIELD,
JOHN HOGAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Most of the amendments are verbal. Three of them make an addition to the bill by which trade between our own Government and the republic of Mexico is granted the same privileges and put upon the same footing as the trade with our northern neighbors.

The three leading points of difference between the House and the Senate are in reference to the second, ninth, and thirteenth sections. On the second section, relating to cigars, the committee effected a compromise which will be satisfactory, I think, to both Houses. The House is asked to agree to the Senate amendment in consideration of raising the duty on cigars from two dollars and a half to three dollars. The ninth section provides that in determining the dutiable value of imported merchandise, there shall be added to the cost, or to the actual wholesale price or general market value at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence the same shall have been imported into the United States, the cost of transportation, shipment, and transshipment, with all the expenses included from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States, &c. The committee on the part of the House made an earnest effort to save the section, but we were reminded that it passed the House only by the casting vote of the Speaker, and that it was rejected by a nearly unanimous vote in the Senate. The Senate committee believed that it would be impossible to carry it through the Senate. The Senate recede from its disagreement to the thirteenth section, which establishes a Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department. Though I greatly regret the loss of the ninth section, I hope the report will be adopted as the best that is likely to be secured at this late period of the session.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise for the purpose of opposing the adoption of this report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will give the gentleman two minutes; I cannot give him more, for the House must take its recess in five minutes from this time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The ninth section is the vital part of this bill. Without the ninth section I would not give a straw for the bill. If we strike that out, therefore, there is no use in the bill at all. It provides for levying duty on the article when put on shipboard, and is a feeble approach to the principle of Mr. Clay of having a home valuation. It is a feeble effort, but it is an effort in the right direction. I do not see why the House should back down and yield to the Senate. It is said that it interferes with the manufacture of coarse wools in New England.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot yield any further, as it is near the hour of recess. There is much in the bill besides the ninth section that ought to be saved, and I hope we shall not lose all in the effort to save a part—

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope the House will vote this report down.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MOORHEAD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 55, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Benjamin, Bergen, Bontwell, Cobb, Conkling, Cooper, Cullom, Dawes, Defrees, Eliot, Finck, Garfield, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Letcham, McKim, McRuer, Morrill, Blond, Lott, Lynch, Marston, McRuer, Morrill, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Nelson Taylor, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Windom—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckland, Delano, Donnelly, Briggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Koontz, Latham, William Lawrence, Maynard, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorehead, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Patterson, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Arnum, Ward, Welker, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—55.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Bradecoe, Bromwell, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Neill, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Woodbridge—82.

So the report of the committee of conference was rejected.

During the vote, the hour of half past four having arrived, the question was raised, and the Speaker decided that when a call of the roll had been commenced it could not be interrupted until it had been concluded.

And then, agreeably to the order of the House, at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m., the House took a recess till seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The hour of half past seven o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House resumed its session.

BRANCH MINT IN MONTANA.

Mr. McLAIN presented the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Montana for the establishment of a branch mint in the Territory of Montana; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN BOUNDARY OF MONTANA.

Mr. McLAIN also presented the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Montana for the alteration and extension of the southern boundary line of Montana; which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 780, to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, and that the House ask for another committee of conference; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Will the gentleman withdraw his call for the previous question while I ask a question of the Chair?

Mr. MOORHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I desire to ask the Chair this question: if the House shall insist upon its non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and we send the bill back there notifying the Senate of our non-concurrence, will not the responsibility of defeating the bill, if it should be defeated, then rest upon the Senate? I understand it will. Now, everybody knows that the Senate dare not defeat this bill. I believe if we insist upon our non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, and do not ask for another committee of conference, the Senate will either ask for a committee of conference themselves or they will recede from their amendments. There are two positions for us to take; and I think our first position should be to notify the Senate that we do not agree to the report of the committee of conference, and there leave the matter; and leave them to take the next step. And then the responsibility of defeating this bill, if it is defeated, will rest upon that body.

Mr. DAWES. I do not see how the responsibility will be with the Senate any more than with this body.

Mr. GARFIELD. Especially as this is a House bill.

Mr. DAWES. If the bill is defeated, I think the country will understand who is responsible for it, without any ruling of the Chair upon the subject.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] what he understands to be the difference between the two Houses.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the difference to be that one House wants the ninth section, and the other does not.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will give me his attention for a few moments, I will tell him what I think the issue is. As to the ninth section, I am willing to vote for the bill with or without the ninth section; I believe I have already voted for the bill both ways.

Mr. DAWES. I also am willing to vote for the bill with or without the ninth section.

Mr. WENTWORTH. As I understand it, the issue is this: the House wants the wool tariff to be collected upon principles which should apply to all articles upon which there is a tariff. But I understand there is a class of men represented in the Senate who want everything else protected but wool. Now if that is the case, I want to say here that I am not for any such compromise, I will go for the bill with or without the ninth section; but I do not feel that it is just longer to discriminate against wool.

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand the opposition to the bill, either with or without the ninth section, to be discriminating against wool. I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] propose last night to emancipate the wool-growers from the wool-manufacturers. It occurred to me that if he should succeed in doing so he would be in a curious position. I want to know if he supposes the wool-growers can get along without the wool-manufacturers, or the wool-manufacturers without the wool-growers. The one is the breath, the atmosphere, of the other; neither can live without the other. And when my friend emancipates the wool-growers from the wool-manufacturers he will be about in the position of the darky who proposed to keep store when everybody else in the world was dead. [Laughter.] Now, I suggest to him that the only way is to take care of them both. And when he proposes to frame a tariff bill in such a way that the wool-manufacturer cannot live, in order to protect the wool-grower, he is at a kind of work I cannot understand; I do not know how he will do it. I suggest to him that the only way is for the two to go hand in hand. Let the wool-manufacturer use what the wool-grower produces, and let the wool-grower produce what the wool-manufacturer wants to use.

Mr. WENTWORTH. My idea is this: that the wool-manufacturer ought to give us the protection on our wool which we ourselves ask, and that when you come to the protection of the manufacturers, they shall dictate their own terms. But when they try high duties for themselves and low duties for us, then I say it is time that we should emancipate ourselves. That is what I mean.

J. SAUNDERS AND W. H. HALL.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That James Saunders and William Henry Hall be placed upon the roll and paid out of the contingent fund the same compensation as other laborers of the House from the period at which they were employed, and until otherwise ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF GEORGE N. CARLTON.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the report of the evidence obtained by H. A. Risley, superintending special agent of the Treasury Department, to investigate the accounts and official transactions of George W. Carlton, late special agent and acting surveyor of customs at Memphis, Tennessee, and designated a depository of public money, report that there has not been time for a full investigation of the subject; and they submit to the House the accompanying papers which furnish all the information obtained by the committee, with the request that they be printed as part of this report.

The report, with the accompanying papers, was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

EXAMINATION OF IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. ELIOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate No. 39, entitled "An act to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York," after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate agree to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and eighth amendments, as made by the House.

That the Senate agree to the ninth amendment made by the House, with the following amendment: Insert after the word "inspectors," in the second line of said amendment, the words "of customs in any collection district shall," and that the House agree to said amendment.

That the House recede from the sixth and seventh amendments made by them.

That the bill be amended by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

Z. CHANDLER,
E. D. MORGAN,
GEORGE REAR RIDDLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
THOMAS D. ELIOT,
CHARLES O'NEILL,
WILLIAM RADFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. McRUER. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 62, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State.'"

Mr. ALLEY. Let the bill be read.

The bill, which was read, provides that an act granting lands to Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State, be amended as follows:

That there be, and is hereby, granted to said State, for the purposes aforesaid, such odd sections or parts of odd sections, not reserved or otherwise legally appropriated, within six miles on each side of said road, to be selected by the surveyor general of said State, as shall be sufficient to supply any deficiency in the quantity of said grant as described, occasioned by any lands sold or reserved, or to which the rights of preemption or homestead have attached, or which for any reason were not subject to said grant within the limits designated in said act.

Mr. ALLEY. I object.

Mr. McRUER. I think the gentleman will not persist in his objection when he hears a brief explanation. There is no grant of land in this bill. By the previous legislation of Congress there was a grant of three sections per mile to aid in the construction of a military road. This merely provides that where the land cannot be found within three miles of the road, the company may go three miles further.

Mr. ALLEY. I must object.

The objection was subsequently withdrawn, when

Mr. SPALDING renewed the objection.

LEWIS F. FIX.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the relief of Lewis F. Fix.

The joint resolution, which was read for information, proposes to direct the accounting officers of the United States to pay to Lewis F. Fix, of Ohio, the pay and emoluments of a lieutenant colonel of infantry for services as an officer of that rank, from March 1, 1865, to July 29, 1865.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. This bill is for the relief of a loyal German, who went to the war and was wounded so severely that he could no longer discharge his duties in line. He was appointed by Governor Fletcher, of Missouri, to the position indicated in the resolution; and in that capacity he served several months on the staff of General Dodge, of Missouri. The appointment, being made by a Governor, was technically not legal. But the services were rendered; they are recognized by the Government of the United States as proper to be paid; and the only reason why they are not paid is the technical defect in the appointment. The claim has been before the Committee on Military Affairs, and is approved by that committee, who are prepared to report in its favor; but I have thought it best to introduce the bill this evening.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

CHARLES YOLEY.

Mr. VAN AERNAM asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Charles Yoley, an applicant for a pension.

TAXATION OF UNITED STATES OFFICERS.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, for action at the present time, joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I object.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was referred, under the rule, to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Commerce be fixed at the same rate as that of the clerk to the Committee on Public Lands, to commence from the first day of the present session of Congress.

REBECCA J. SHEPPARD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of Rebecca J. Sheppard.

Mr. WARD. I object.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE—AGAIN.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I now renew my motion that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 780) entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," and ask for another committee of conference. On that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. Moorhead was agreed to.

Mr. MOORHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFERERS BY PORTLAND FIRE.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with an amendment, joint resolution (S. No. 131) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine.

The amendment, which was read, was to strike out in line seven the word "or" and insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill for the relief of certain drafted men.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be reported.

The bill, which was read, proposes to direct the Secretary of War to refund $300 to each person who paid that amount as commutation under the calls of the President of the United States of February 1, 1864, and March 14, 1864, and was again drafted under the call of December 19, 1864, and required to enter the service or furnish a substitute. It is provided that the total payments under this authority shall not exceed the sum of $60,000. The second section proposes to require the Secretary of War to refund from the commutation money an amount not exceeding $300 to each person drafted during the late war who furnished a substitute or paid commutation money when he was not legally liable to draft or was rightfully exempt from personal service under the decisions and rules of the War Department. The provisions of the act are to apply only to claims received at the War Department prior to its passage.

Mr. WARD. I desire to inquire how much money this will take.

Mr. ANCONA. It is provided in the bill that the amount shall not exceed $60,000.

Mr. WARD. Has not this or a similar bill been reported to the House?

Mr. ANCONA. It has not.

Mr. WARD. It looks to me like an old acquaintance. It seems to be one of the claims presented to the Committee of Claims, and which were rejected by them. In the opinion of the committee, it would be dangerous to establish this class of claims.

Mr. ANCONA. The gentleman is mistaken as to the character of this bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. If this bill is to pass this House or this Congress, it is because it is just and well founded on a correct principle; but to declare that all who have made this payment shall have refunded to them $300 each, and yet that the whole sum to be distributed shall not exceed the amount here prescribed renders the law nugatory and void. If there are more claimants than the fund will justify in making payment to, the question will naturally arise on the part of the proper officer of the Government, who shall be paid and who shall remain unpaid?

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I make the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and under the rules must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is now too late to make the point. It should have been made when the bill was first considered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANCONA, and Mr. TAYLOR of New York, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

Mr. ANCONA withdrew the call for the division, and also withdrew the bill.

WIDOWS OF REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions a joint resolution providing that the pension of widows of revolutionary soldiers, whose names are now on the pension-roll, and who were married to revolutionary soldiers prior to January 1, 1800, shall be increased to the same rate that the deceased soldiers would be entitled to under existing laws, if now living, such increase to be paid from the 30th of September, 1865.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was received and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed; it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT BALDWIN.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Public Lands House bill No. 693, for the relief of Robert Baldwin. It is merely in reference to a land warrant lost through the mails.

The bill was received, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House then proceeded to the regular order, being business on the Speaker's table.

WEARING OF SHEATH KNIVES.

The first business in order on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 334, to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the existing regulation for the government of the Navy of the United States, prohibiting the wearing of sheath knives on shipboard, shall be extended and made applicable to all seamen in the merchant service; and that it shall be the duty of the master or other officer in command of any ship or vessel registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States, and of the owner or other person entering into contract for the employment of a seaman or other subordinate upon any such ship or vessel, to inform every person offering to ship himself of the provisions of this law, and to require his compliance therewith, under a penalty of fifty dollars for each omission, to be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, one half for the benefit of the informer and the other half for the benefit of the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen.

Mr. ELIOT demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTH CAROLINA COLLECTION DISTRICT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 399, relative to a collection district in North Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT moved that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

R. P. PARROTT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 445, for the relief of R. P. Parrott; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I make the point of order that the bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole; that it cannot now be considered without reference.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SEAMEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 419, to repeal an act entitled "An act repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board of public and private vessels of the United States," approved June 28, 1864; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ELIOT moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast;

An act (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the Rebellion; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

GEORGE W. FISH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 446, for the relief of George W. Fish; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROSS raised the point that the bill made an appropriation, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed.

STOCKTON AND COPPERPOLIS RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 244, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask that the bill be read, as I propose to put it on its passage.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, equip, maintain and enjoy a continuous railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, by the most feasible route, to be selected by said corporation, and is hereby vested with all the powers and privileges and immunities necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said railroad company to the extent of two hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also, all necessary ground for station-buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables and water-stations.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers to the amount of ten alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad line as said company may adopt, whenever on the line thereof the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from preemption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and a plot thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or covered by private land grants, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, on the line of said road, within ten miles of the same, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers, not more than ten miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections: Provided, That all lands containing gold or silver, or copper, be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act, and in lieu thereof a like quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated agricultural lands in odd-numbered sections, within twenty miles of the line of said road, may be selected as above provided: And provided further, That the word mineral when it occurs in this act shall not be held to include iron nor coal.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever said railroad company shall have ten consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad ready for the service contemplated, the Pacific railroad commissioners shall examine the same; and if it shall appear that ten miles of said road have been completed in a good and substantial manner, and in all respects as required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and contiguous with said completed section of said road, unless said lands are of a character that they are covered by the exceptions and reservations of this act; then said company shall have a right to select such lands on the line of said road so constructed, within twenty miles of said road so completed. And from time to time whenever ten additional miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by the commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company, conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid; and so on as fast as every ten miles of said road are completed.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That said railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turnouts, stations, and watering places, and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling stock, equal in all respects to railroads of the first class, when prepared for business, with rails of the best quality. And a uniform gauge with the Pacific railroad shall be established the entire length of the road.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for twenty miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of railroad; and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or preemption before or after they are surveyed except by said company, as provided in this act; but the provisions of the act of September, 1841, granting preemption rights, and the acts amendatory thereof, and of the act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1832, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended to all other lands on the line of said road when surveyed, excepting those hereby granted to said company.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely, that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than ten miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, furnish, equip, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, 1872.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, Congress may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the said railroad until the whole capital is taken up by complying with the terms of subscription.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That said Stockton and Copperopolis railroad, or any part thereof, shall be a post route and military railroad, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within two years after the passage of this act, and not afterward, and shall be served on the President of the United States.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the said company is authorized to accept to its own use any grant, donation, or loan, power, franchise, aid, or assistance which may be granted to or conferred upon said company by the Legislature of any State, county, or municipal corporation, person or persons, and said corporation is authorized to hold and enjoy any such grant, donation, loan, or power, franchise, aid, or assistance, to its own use for the purpose aforesaid.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That unless the said Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company shall obtain bona fide subscription to the stock of said company to the amount of $200,000, with five per cent. paid within two years after the passage and approval of this act, it shall be null and void.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times the use and benefit of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may, at any time, having due regard for the rights of said railroad company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That lots in towns and villages shall be exempt from the provisions of this act.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the gentleman from California that this bill should be referred to one of the standing committees. It is one of the most remarkable railroad bills ever presented to this House. The first section provides for the creation of a corporation.

Mr. HIGBY. If gentlemen will wait the bill will be fully explained. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOLMES,] a member of the Committee on Public Lands, will offer amendments which I think will obviate all objections to the bill. It has been submitted to a majority of the Committee on Public Lands, although there has been no regular session of the committee, the bill not having been referred to them, and it has met with their approval.

Mr. ROSS. I ask the gentleman to let me move a postponement of this bill till next December.

Mr. HIGBY. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMES. I move the following amendments:

Strike out sections one and two and insert the following in lieu thereof:

SECTION 1. Beit enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California, by the most feasible route, to be selected by said company; and the right is hereby given to said company to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said company to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also all necessary ground for station, buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turntables, and water stations: Provided, That all the rights conferred upon said railroad company by this act are made upon the express condition that said company shall first be designated by the Legislature of the State of California as the company to be vested with the rights, privileges, franchises, and grants created or conferred by this act.

Section three, line four, after the word "railroad" insert the following: "upon the conditions presented in section one of this act;" and in lines seven and eight strike out "ten miles" and insert "five alternate sections."

Section four, line nine, after the word "lands" insert "hereinbefore granted;" and at the end of the section add the following: "the services of said commissioners under this act shall be paid for by said company."

Section six, at the end of the section add the following: "and the sections and parts of sections which shall remain in the United States within ten miles of said railroad on each side thereof shall not be sold for less than $2.50 per acre."

Section seven, at the end of the section add the following: "and upon a failure of said company to comply with either of said conditions the lands then unpatented to said company shall revert to the United States."

At the end of section nine add the following: "and all troops and munitions of war of the United States shall be transported over said railroad free of all expense or charge to the Government thereof whenever the same shall be required by the Government of the United States."

Section ten, at the end of the section add the following: "and filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior."

Section twelve, line one, after the word "that" strike out all down to and including the word "purposes," in line six.

Change the number of sections so as to correspond with the amended bill, and number from one to twelve, inclusive.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire whether these amendments have been printed?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. HIGBY. I have but a few words to say upon this subject. As I stated in the outset, the bill has been made to conform almost precisely to the Folsom and Placerville railroad bill which passed the House the other day, with the exception that there is only one half of the land granted in this bill that was granted in that. All the guards and restrictions of that bill have been placed upon this by the amendments which have been read.

Mr. DAWES. Is this the other half of the lands they did not take last night?

Mr. HIGBY. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. DAWES. Let us know where the other half goes.

Mr. HIGBY. This road is forty miles long.

Mr. CONKLING. And how wide?

Mr. HIGBY. For the first twenty miles of the road they can get one half the land within the width granted, and on the other twenty miles they can get two thirds or three quarters. But I will not occupy the time of the House further, and unless some one desires to ask a question, I will call the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. I will inquire whether there is any reason for pressing the passage of this bill now.

Mr. HIGBY. Simply this reason: this bill came from the Senate yesterday; and, for the sake of having it passed now, I had the Committee on Public Lands take the bill that passed the other day, and conform this bill to it precisely, with the exception that this bill gives only one half the amount of land.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand there has been no meeting of that committee, but that a majority of the individual members of the committee concur in the amendments.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman [Mr. HOLMES] says he has consulted a majority of the members of the committee, and that they concur in the amendments.

Mr. CONKLING. But that is not a parliamentary or competent committee for that purpose.

I wish to say that I would vote for a bill of this sort upon the statement of my colleague, who offered these amendments, [Mr. HOLMES,] as soon as I would vote for any such bill under circumstances like these, where I have not had an opportunity to examine it myself. Knowing him, as I do, I take his statement and assurance upon this subject as the highest evidence that the bill is a proper one, without an opportunity myself to examine it, or having him and his committee examine it with more deliberation; and yet I submit to the gentleman that a bill of this magnitude ought not to pass in this way, at this stage of the session, the amendments never having been printed, we never having had an opportunity to see them, and when nothing will be lost by having the bill passed over, the amendments printed, examined and reported upon, and deliberately passed, if passed at all. I do not want to interfere with the bill, but I appeal to the gentleman to allow somebody not inimical to the bill to move that it be postponed until the next session that we may consider it with some deliberation. I think I am not mistaken that the temper of the House is not favorable to passing the bill in this way, upon manuscript and unprinted copy; and if the gentleman will allow me I will make the motion.

Mr. HIGBY. The gentleman can make the motion after I yield the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I cannot do it if the gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. HIGBY. I call the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I move to lay the bill upon the table in order to take the sense of the House.

Mr. HIGBY demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion was then agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAN FRANCISCO AND HUMBOLDT BAY RAILROAD.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands to the bill of the Senate No. 133, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, in the State of California; from the consideration of which bill the Committee on Public Lands had been discharged, and the bill and amendment ordered to lie on the table. The amendments were read.

Mr. McRUER. I regret to see this evening a disposition to lay these bills on the table. There has not been a more meritorious railroad bill presented this session of Congress than that presented by my colleague, and which has just been summarily disposed of. I wish to say in regard to the bill now before the House, that it was passed by the Senate last February, that it came here and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and this has been the first opportunity presented to consider it. It provides for the construction of a road two hundred and fifty miles long through what is known as the coast range of California. For that two hundred and fifty miles along the coast there is not a navigable river. The land is to a great extent mountainous, and, without a railroad, comparatively valueless. For the first seventy miles the land of an agricultural character has been entirely taken up, and there is an absolute necessity for having some channel of communication with the waters of the bay of San Francisco if we expect that region of country to be settled and occupied. To-day that land is worth scarcely anything. Construct a railroad through it and the alternate sections of the public lands which are reserved by the Government will be worth four times as much as the whole land is worth or ever will be worth without it. This will be an expensive road to build, and if there is any reason for granting aid by the donation of public lands to aid in the construction of any road this is as meritorious a road as any for which lands have ever been granted.

It seems to be the opinion of Congress that California comes here asking immense donations. These railroad grants are not donations, for the Government and the nation are benefited by every section of land that will aid in constructing the road. The alternate sections will be worth four, five, yea, ten times, in many cases, what the whole country is worth without the road. We have no channels of communication there; we have no navigable rivers flowing to the ocean between the bay of San Francisco and the Columbia river; and it is necessary, in order that these lands may be made valuable, that we have some communication to tide-water and to a market.

Now, sir, I hope this bill will receive the favorable consideration of the House; and I move the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a remark.

Mr. McRUER. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say a word about this bill, without the slightest reference to its merits. This may be a very proper grant, the purpose to be attained may be of infinite importance or absolutely necessary—and I make no issue upon that—but I submit to the House, as I did in regard to the other bill, that at this stage of the session the proposition to pass such a bill is not fortunate. The substitute offered has not been printed, and we cannot see and examine it at all; and without its being printed we cannot comprehend the magnitude of this proposition. What is it? It is to grant a State—a State nearly as large as Massachusetts—for the purpose of constructing a railroad. It grants twenty square miles of land for every square mile of the road, as I make it, which amounts to five thousand square miles, a State almost as large as the State of Massachusetts, which I believe contains six thousand and some hundred square miles.

Now, consider the magnitude of that proposition, and then think of our sitting here the last night but one of the session and, without the bill being printed, and under the operation of the previous question, without the opportunity afforded of deliberate consideration of this measure, passing upon a bill of the magnitude of this.

As I said before, it is an ungracious thing to interpose, and I do not intend my interference to be special in the case of land grants to this particular State; but I say with regard to all measures as important as this, which come here in the form of bills which have not been printed, that they may be passed over without harm to anybody; and I shall raise my voice, feeble as it may be, against any final action at this stage of the session. All I ask of the gentleman is to allow me, or somebody not in hostility to the bill, to make a motion that it be postponed until next session.

Mr. McRUER. I must take the sense of the House on seconding the demand for the previous question; but before doing so I wish to say one word in reply to the gentleman from New York. He objects because the amendment has not been printed. Sir, it is not usual to have amendments brought in by committees printed. This bill has been upon the files of the House for five months. It has been considered by the appropriate committee, and unanimously reported by them with a recommendation that it do pass. It has received ample and full consideration, and this House is usually governed by the recommendation of its standing committees in matters of this sort. It is not presumed that one member in ten is going to investigate thoroughly for himself all the conditions of these railroad grants. Every amendment proposed to this bill by the Committee on Public Lands is of a restrictive character. They compel the grantees to act in good faith, and to construct this road with all reasonable degree of rapidity, or they lose their franchise and it reverts to the Government. But I am consuming too much of the time of the House, and I beg leave to move the previous question, which I will consider a test vote upon the passage of this bill. If the previous question is not sustained I will move to recommit.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood the gentleman to say he would allow me to move to postpone it.

Mr. McRUER. That is the same thing.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no; not by any means. Why not postpone it until next session?

Mr. McRUER. I call the previous question and hope it will be seconded.

The previous question was not seconded, only twenty-one voting in favor thereof.

Mr. McRUER. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, and that the same be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is a breach of the understanding, as I understood it, and therefore I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. McRUER. My motion is to recommit to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report at the next session.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; that is substantially giving the sanction of the House to the bill. I move to postpone the bill until the first Tuesday in December next.

The motion of Mr. CONKLING was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. I now ask unanimous consent to take the other bill, the Copperopolis railroad bill, from the table and make the same disposition of that.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, objected.

THE TAX BILL.*

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill to amend an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1864," approved March 8, 1865.

The bill, which was read, amends the thirteenth section of said act by striking out the words "without having first obtained a license so to do" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "without paying a special tax therefor."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. GARFIELD moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD GRANTS TO ARKANSAS AND MISSOURI.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and laid on the Speaker's table, to an act (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Missouri river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes.

The amendments were read.

Mr. ECKLEY. I desire to have the amendments acted on and the bill put upon its passage, and I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were adopted, the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, the bill was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ECKLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 406, for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to refer that to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope not.

Mr. BOUTWELL. This bill has not been into the hands of the Judiciary Committee of the House, but I have taken pains to examine it and I do not see any objection to it. The reason for its passage is this: in many of the southern States persons who pretend that wrongs have been perpetrated upon them by citizens of States recently in rebellion, in order to obtain judgment against those citizens join a citizen of the State where the plaintiff resides with the citizen of another State, and the citizen of the other State is compelled to try his cause in the State courts of the State recently in rebellion, and is subject to their authority and will in a matter affecting his rights. Now, the object of the bill is and the result of it will be, as I understand, that a citizen of New York who may be joined by a plaintiff in South Carolina with a citizen of South Carolina for the purpose of compelling the New York man to try his cause in South Carolina may transfer the cause, so far as he is concerned, to the United States courts, leaving the defendant in South Carolina to make his defense in the courts of that State.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my motion to refer.

The bill was read, as follows:

That if in any suit already commenced, or that may hereafter be commenced, in any State court against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $500, exclusive of costs, to be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought is or shall be a defendant, and if the suit so far as relates to the alien defendant or to the defendant who is the citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, is or has been instituted or prosecuted for the purpose of restraining or enjoining him, or if the suit is one in which there can be a final determination of the controversy, so far as it concerns him, without the presence of the other defendants as parties in the cause, then and in every such case the alien defendant, or the defendant who is a citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, may, at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, file a petition for the removal of the cause as against him into the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient surety for his entering in such court, on the first day of its session, copies of said process against him, and of all pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in said cause affecting or concerning him, and also for his there appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if special bail was originally requisite therein; and it shall be thereupon the duty of the State court to accept the surety and proceed no further in the cause as against the defendant so applying for its removal; and any bail that may have been originally taken shall be discharged, and the said copies being entered as aforesaid in such court of the United States the cause shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process against the defendant who shall have so filed a petition for its removal as above provided. And any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant by the original process shall hold the goods or estate so attached to answer the final judgment, in the same manner as by the laws of such State they would have been held to answer final judgment had it been rendered by the court in which the suit commenced; and any injunction granted before the removal of the cause against the defendant applying for its removal shall continue in force until modified or dissolved by the United States court into which the cause shall be removed; and any bond of indemnity or other obligation given by the plaintiff upon the issuing or granting of any attachment, writ of injunction, or other restraining process against the defendant petitioning for the removal of the cause, shall also continue in full force and may be prosecuted by the defendant and made available for his indemnity in case the attachment, injunction, or other restraining process be set aside or dissolved, or judgment be rendered in his favor, in the same manner and with the same force and effect as if such injunction, attachment, or restraining process had been granted, and such bond had been originally filed or given in the court to which the cause is removed. And such removal of the cause, as against the defendant petitioning therefor, into the United States court, shall not be deemed to prejudice or take away the right of the plaintiff to proceed at the same time with the suit in the State court as against the other defendants, if he shall desire to do so. And the copies of all pleadings filed or entered as aforesaid in the United States court by the defendant applying for the removal of the cause, shall have the same force and effect in every respect and for every purpose as the original pleadings would have had by the laws and practice of the courts of such State if the cause had remained in the State court.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts if this bill is not broad enough in its provisions to carry from the State courts to the United States courts every cause between two citizens of a State where either one of them has a partner living in another State.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not affect the right of citizens defendant of the same State with the plaintiff. If the interest of the defendant who is not a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought cannot be separated distinctly from the interests of the defendant who is a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought, then the proceedings must go into the State courts; but if the interest of the defendant who is not a citizen of the State can be separated, then he has the right to have it separated.

Mr. TRIMBLE. It seems to me this bill is overturning the principles of law that have existed from the foundation of the Government.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not change the rights of citizens of the same State at all. The rights of the defendant who is a citizen of the same State must be adjudicated in the courts of the State. Only the rights of the defendant who is not a citizen of the same State can be adjudicated in the courts of the United States when they are capable, in the judgment of the United States court, of being separated, so that there can be an independent judgment upon them.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I understand the law now to be that a citizen of another State has a right to carry his cause from the State court to the United States court where he is either a plaintiff or defendant.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Not if he be joined as a codefendant with a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought.

Mr. TRIMBLE. If he is joined as a codefendant and is alike responsible as a codefendant, does not this bill carry the cause from the State court to the United States court?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Only so far as in the judgment of the court his rights can be separated and adjudicated as distinguished from the rights of his codefendant.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I fear that this bill goes further than that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I demand the previous question on the passage.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, it was decided in the affirmative — yeas 80, nays 30, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Broomall, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Callom, Dawes, DeFrees, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Koonitz, Kaykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McClure, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Price, Raymond, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shel-labarger, Spalding, Stevens, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, and Wood-bridge—80.

YAYS.—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Bergen, Boyer, Eldridge, Finck, Glessbrenner, Harris, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Stephen F. Wilson—76.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONOHUE, RYAN AND SECOR.

The last business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 141, for the relief of Donohue, Ryan & Secor; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order that this contains an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The point being made, it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think this ought to go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BIDWELL. It has been to the Committee of Claims.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated as the next business in order the calling of committees for reports, as in the morning hour, commencing with the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEWIS F. FIX.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Lewis Ferdinand Fix; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It directs the proper accounting officer to pay to the claimant the pay and emoluments of lieutenant colonel of infantry from March 1, 1865, to July 29, 1865.

Mr. CONKLING. Does not this contain an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is accompanied by a report explaining the reasons, which I will have read if any one desires it. If not I will demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SCHENCK. Oh, no; allow the Military Committee twenty minutes.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I withdraw, with the understanding that the gentleman gets through in fifteen minutes.

BOUNTIES OF VETERAN SOLDIERS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the further consideration of bill of the House No. 622, to provide for computing the bounties of veteran soldiers, so as to protect the rights of such; and the same was laid on the table.

RAILROADS THROUGH MILITARY RESERVATIONS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution of the House No. 183, concerning the right of way of railroad companies through military reservations, and for other purposes; and the same was laid on the table.

EDWARD QUILL.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Edward Quill, an old soldier; and the same was laid on the table.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House No. 128, concerning the pay department of the United States Army; and the same was laid on the table.

PETITIONS AND RESOLUTIONS TABLED.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of sundry petitions and resolutions that had been referred to them; and the same were laid on the table.

EAST TENNESSEE CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 686, to establish a commission for the settlement of claims against the Government of the United States held by loyal citizens of East Tennessee; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

MICHIGAN MILITIA.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House No. 672, for the relief of certain companies of Michigan militia; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs were also discharged from the further consideration of the petition of messengers in the quartermaster's department for increase of pay; and the same was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. ANCONA, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of certain drafted men; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WARD. Does not that bill contain an appropriation?

Mr. ANCONA. I propose to amend the bill by striking out the last proviso.

Mr. WARD. I ask the Chair to state whether this bill contains an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The bill reads, "and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." The bill does contain an appropriation.

Mr. WARD. Then I insist that, under the rule, the bill shall go to the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. TAYLOR.

Mr. ANCONA, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of John W. Taylor; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Government to pay to John W. Taylor, late sergeant of company F, twenty-seventh regiment Kentucky infantry, a sum equal to the pay of a sergeant from the 30th of June, 1863, to the 31st of January, 1864, in full of all claims for military services.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ANCONA. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 49, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten minutes of ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 27, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a communication from the Second Auditor of the Treasury communicating copies of accounts of persons charged with the disbursement of moneys, goods, or effects of any kind for the benefit of Indians from July 1, 1864, to June 30, 1865; a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copies of the accounts of Superintendent Sells and Agents Snow and Dunn, of the southern superintendency, for the fourth quarter of 1865, with a copy of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject; and a communication of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting accounts of the superintendent and agents having charge of the tribes of Chickasaw, Seminole, Wichita, and other Indians, for the third quarter of 1865, have directed me to report them back and ask to be discharged from their further consideration. They are very voluminous, and the committee do not recommend their publication, but report them back to go on the files in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

RELATIONS WITH THE BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish to the Senate at the next session of Congress any information in his possession concerning the practicability of establishing equal reciprocal relations between the United States and the different British Provinces of North America, including the British possessions on the Pacific; and also concerning the actual condition of the question of the fisheries, with such recommendations as he may choose to make tending to the peaceful arrangement of these important matters.

CLAIMS OF MASSACHUSETTS AND MAINE.

Mr. SUMNER. I am also directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred sundry petitions relative to a railway running from the State of Maine into the British Provinces, to report joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) respecting certain claims of Massachusetts and Maine.

The joint resolution was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SUMNER. This resolution merely provides for the auditing of those claims; it does not go beyond that; and I should like to have the action of the Senate upon it now.

Mr. WADE. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution lies over under the rule.

CONTINUATION OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TRUMBULL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That all subjects before the Senate at the close of the present session, including those before committees, shall be continued to the next session, and shall then be proceeded with in the same manner as if no adjournment of the Senate had taken place; and the papers which have been referred to the committees, and may be in their possession at the close of the session, shall be returned informally to the Secretary, and by him restored to the committees when appointed at the next session.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue and for other purposes; and

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CLARK, Mr. VAN WINKLE, and Mr. MORGAN.

REFUNDING OF LICENSE TAX.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a little bill, to which there is no objection, which was sent to the Committee on Finance, being a bill (H. R. No. 759) to authorize the refunding of certain taxes, which contains a very necessary amendment to the internal revenue law. I have not had a chance to consult the committee, but there is no objection to it, and it is necessary to pass it at once. I move, therefore, that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be taken up; or, if there is no objection, I will report it back from the Committee on Finance—I suppose they will agree to it—and ask that it be taken up and passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that where the license tax imposed upon any wholesale dealer has been calculated upon the amount of such dealer's sales for the previous year, in accordance with the terms of the seventy-ninth section of an act approved June 30, 1864, and it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the sales made under such license did not equal in amount the sales of such previous year, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner to refund to such wholesale dealer so much of the amount paid for the license as may be in excess of the proper tax chargeable upon the amount of sales actually made under the license during the year for which it was issued.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 810) amendatory of section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865;

A bill (H. R. No. 812) for the relief of John W. Taylor; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) to pay Colonel Lewis F. Fix.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot;

A bill (H. R. No. 761) authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities;

A bill (H. R. No. 795) to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais, Maine; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox, jr.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it is not advisable to open that discussion to-day. There are but a few hours remaining to us of this session. I think we had better proceed with other business. The question involved in the admission of Nebraska is the very question that came up and was discussed so thoroughly with regard to Colorado. It occupied then, it will be remembered, many days, and we have not yet reached the conclusion of it. I think that we had better not begin on this question to-day. I hope we shall not take it up.

Mr. WADE. I hope it will be taken up, and as we have spent a third of the session in discussing this very question I hope Senators who have discussed it three or four times over before the Senate and said all that their ingenuity could invent against it will have the grace to believe that we remember their arguments and will act in reference to this question without a repetition of them. I think that by reason of the great discussion upon this subject in the fore part of the session we are the more ready and able to take it up understandingly now and go on with it. I hope we shall take it up, and not keep out a State applying to come into the Union any longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Fessenden, Grimes, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Edwards, Foster, Guthrie, Hendricks, Morgan, Norton, and Sumner—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Fowler, Harris, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wilson, and Wright—17.

So the motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

PRINTING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the assent of the Senator from Ohio, now that he has his bill before the Senate, I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take from the table the bill (H. R. No. 803) to further regulate the printing of public documents and the purchase of paper for the public printing. It is a bill that will give rise to no debate; it will save some hundred thousand dollars to the Treasury; and it is important that it should pass.

Mr. WADE. Very well; go ahead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the bill at this time, there being another subject before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Hereafter it is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, in place of the reports of the Executive Departments ordered by the act of June 25, 1864, to cause to be printed and bound twenty-five hundred copies of the annual reports of the Executive Departments, with such accompanying documents as the heads of those Departments may respectively select, but not to exceed three hundred pages, for the use of such Departments respectively. Whenever papers relating to foreign affairs are communicated to Congress accompanying the annual message of the President, it is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to cause to be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, two thousand copies for the use of members of the Senate, four thousand copies for the use of the members of the House, and twenty-five hundred copies for the use of the State Department, in place of the numbers ordered by the act of June 25, 1864. In the publication of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, the detailed statement of offers for supplies and of the articles embraced in each class under contract is to be omitted, and in lieu thereof the Secretary of the Navy is to prepare a statement with his report and schedule embracing the offers by classes, indicating such as have been accepted.

It is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, at the commencement of each session of Congress, to submit to the Joint Committee on Printing estimates of the quantity of paper of all descriptions, which will, in his opinion, be required for the execution of the public printing during the coming year. The Joint Committee on Printing is then to fix upon a standard of paper for the different descriptions of congressional and executive printing, and it is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to advertise in only two newspapers in the cities of New York, Cincinnati, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, for sealed proposals to furnish the Government of the United States with paper of the quality and in the quantity specified in the advertisements; and it is to be the duty of the Superintendent to furnish samples of the standard papers adopted by the committee to applicants therefor. The sealed proposals are to be opened before and the award of contracts is to be made by the Joint Committee on Printing to the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the Government. The advertisement for sealed proposals for furnishing paper is to designate the minimum portion of each particular quality of paper required for either three months, six months, or one year, as the Joint Committee on Printing may determine; but when the minimum portion so specified exceeds in any case one thousand reams, the advertisement is to state that proposals will be received for one thousand reams or more. No proposals are to be considered by the Joint Committee on Printing unless accompanied by satisfactory evidence that the person or persons making the proposals are manufacturers of or dealers in the description of paper which they propose to furnish. In awarding contracts an equitable period of time for filling them is to be designated and allowed by the Joint Committee on Printing, without whose approval no contract is to be valid. It is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to include in his annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all proposals made and contracts entered into for the purchase of paper.

It is to be the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to compare every lot of paper delivered by any contractor, with the standard of quality, and also to see that it is of the weight contracted for, and to refuse to accept any paper from any contractor which does not conform to the standard of quality and is not of the stipulated weight. In case of a difference of opinion between the Superintendent and any contractor for the paper, with respect to its quality, the matter of difference is to be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing. In default of any contractor to comply with his contract in furnishing paper contracted for in proper time and of proper quality and weight, it is to be the duty of the Superintendent to report it to the Joint Committee on Printing, if Congress is in session, or to the Secretary of the Interior, if during a recess of Congress; and under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing or of the Secretary of the Interior, as the case may be, he is to enter into a new contract with the lowest and best bidder for the interests of the Government, among those whose proposals were rejected at the last opening of bids, or advertise for new proposals under the regulations before established; and during the interval which may thus be created, he is, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing or of the Secretary of the Interior as provided, to purchase in open market at the lowest market price all such paper necessary for the public service. For any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of paper for the use of the Government, the contractor or contractors in default, and his or their securities are to be charged with, and held responsible, and are to be prosecuted upon their bond by the Solicitor of the Treasury, in the name of the United States, in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which the defaulting contractor resides. To enable the Solicitor to do so, it is made the duty of the Superintendent of Public Printing to report to him the default on its happening, with a full statement of all the facts in the case. The Joint Committee on Printing, or, during the recess of Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to empower the Superintendent of Public Printing to make purchases of paper, in open market, at the lowest market price, whenever in their opinion the quantity required is so small, or the want is so immediate, as not to justify advertisement for and award of contract therefor.

All laws or parts of laws, joint resolutions or parts of resolutions conflicting with the above provisions are repealed, and the Superintendent of Public Printing is not to print any greater number of the reports herein named unless otherwise directed by either House of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 698) for the relief of Robert Baldwin—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 812) for the relief of John W. Taylor—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 206) in relation to the pensions of widows of revolutionary soldiers—to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) for the relief of Colonel Lewis F. Fix—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

NEUTRALITY LAWS.

The bill (H. R. No. 806) more effectually to preserve the neutrality relations of the United States was read twice by its title.

Mr. WADE. I hope that bill will be put on its passage by common consent.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a very important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to its present consideration, it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE LAW.

The bill (H. R. No. 810) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not necessary to refer that bill, but very necessary to pass it, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the thirteenth section of the internal revenue law of March 3, 1865, by striking out the words "without having first obtained a license so to do," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "without paying the special tax therefor."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

A bill (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that that bill be postponed until the commencement of the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider it at this time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask that it be referred and disposed of in the usual way.

Mr. WADE. Let it be referred. I cannot permit bills to be interposed and discussed while the bill for the admission of Nebraska is pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia if there be no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I will withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to that committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield to me for a moment that I may move to postpone the bill which he has called up informally with a view of taking up a little resolution—House joint resolution No. 197.

Mr. WADE. I cannot consent to that now. The admission of a State into the Union is as important as anything else.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think this will take any time.

Mr. WADE. I will not object to it unless it is going to be debated; if it is, I must object to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the resolution? Mr. HENDRICKS. A joint resolution authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That will certainly give rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 197.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the Senator from Maine says it will be debated and the Senator from Ohio cannot yield unless there is to be no debate, I will not press the matter now, but I shall call it up directly.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the distribution of the bounty offered for the capture of the assassins of the late President Lincoln there are several soldiers interested, one of whom called on me this morning. He is maimed and crippled and really in such a condition that he would move the humanity of any one. He is entitled under any award that may be made to a pretty large sum of money; and all he has got in the world is the hope that as a matter of justice and honor we will act upon that bill. I think my colleague will give way for that purpose. It ought to be acted upon.

Mr. WADE. My bill wants to be acted upon also.

Mr. SHERMAN. But this is a bill in regard to the bounty offered for the capture of the assassins of Mr. Lincoln, and Colonel Conger, a wounded soldier, without a cent in the world, is entitled by any award that may be made to a considerable sum of money, and he is here anxiously awaiting the settlement of this matter. The subject has been thoroughly examined by the House of Representatives, and they have passed a bill which I should like to have taken up now.

Mr. WADE. I trust there will be time enough to pass both bills. This bill is now under consideration, and it ought not to take long, and then we can dispose of the other.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not suppose this will take any time at all.

Mr. WADE. Let us pass this and then I will help you with that. That has passed the House and my bill has not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill now before the Senate will be read.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of direct taxes within the State of West Virginia, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF COLLECTORS.

At the suggestion of Mr. MORGAN, and by unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORGAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. WILLEY.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana;

An act (S. No. 324) for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburgh;

An act (S. No. 424) to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 183) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of Virginia.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to know from the chairman of the Committee on Territories what evidence the committee had before them with regard to the present condition of this Territory and its capacity to sustain a State government.

Mr. WADE. I do not desire to enter into a discussion—but I will say that the committee had before them first the constitution of the State of Nebraska, which they examined and found a very liberal and a very good constitution, analogous to most of the constitutions of the States, indeed almost a copy of the constitutions of many of the western States. There is nothing in it to which any gentleman here would object except that clause which restricts the franchise to white persons. That question I do not propose to discuss, because no new light can possibly be thrown upon it. Those who are resolved that that shall be an objection to the admission of a State will, I suppose, remain of that opinion, whatever may be said. I defy any man to throw any new light on that subject; every one's mind is made up on it.

As to the Territory itself it is in a very excellent condition; the people are prosperous and happy, I believe; they have an excellent climate and soil. It is one of the best Territories in the Union.

Mr. SUMNER. How large a population?

Mr. WADE. I am assured by gentlemen who have been there and know all about it that the population cannot now be less than sixty thousand. I have a certificate from the Secretary of the Territory showing the number of votes given at the last election, which was on the ratification of the constitution; and the whole number of votes, as appears by the abstract of votes filed in the secretary's office, was 8,084. This is a very large Territory with a people scattered over a very large compass, so that they do not find it convenient to turn out and vote as they do in more thickly populated communities where the polls are not so far off and where the roads are facile and good. For that reason when you come to estimate the number of inhabitants from the number of voters in these western Territories a large allowance should be made on that account. I suppose, as a general thing, there are about six inhabitants to a voter, on the average. I am informed by the Delegate from Nebraska that there is no question that there were 1,500 voters in the Territory who did not appear at the polls. He has no doubt of that. From all the light I can get on the subject—and that is the judgment of all with whom I have conversed—there cannot be less than sixty thousand inhabitants there. The Territory is settling up with unprecedented rapidity; settlers are going in there very fast, as I am informed and believe. There are one hundred and fifty-five miles of railroad in it, of course giving great facilities for the occupation and settlement of the Territory; and the number of voters denotes a population as large as most of the Territories we have admitted as States.

I do not suppose that any extended argument need be made on this subject, because when a Territory is ripe for admission as a State, when the people think themselves capable of carrying on a State government, when they feel that they would like to have the control of their own affairs in their own hands, it has been the policy of the Government to grant them that privilege. I never knew more than one case, and that the case of Colorado, where Congress set themselves up as the guardians of a people who had deliberately made up their judgment that they had sufficient population and ability to carry on a State government. A Territory is always an incumbrance to the General Government; it is attended with a good deal of expense; and to relieve the General Government of that burden is a point of some importance; and certainly when the intelligent people of the United States residing in a Territory anywhere have deliberately made up their minds that they are wealthy enough and numerous enough to set up for themselves, their decision ought to be respected. It is like the case of a family. When younger members in good standing believe themselves capable of taking care of themselves, it is for the interest of the whole concern to permit them to do so. These people have formed a very good constitution; they are able to conduct their own affairs; and I have no doubt that they will be one of the most prosperous States immediately if you pass this bill.

Now, sir, if I were to talk two hours I could throw no more light on the subject, and in view of the little time there is left to us I do not wish to talk. I will say no more, unless some gentleman desires to ask a question that I may or may not be prepared to answer.

Mr. JOHNSON. What was the majority for the constitution?

Mr. WADE. About one hundred and fifty, I think. I see no reason why Nebraska should not be admitted as a State.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very sorry to occupy the attention of the Senate even for one minute. I certainly, however, shall be very brief. The Senator from Ohio tells us that the majority of the people in favor of the State government was about one hundred and fifty. Sir, it is by such a slender, slim majority out of eight thousand voters that you are now called to invest this Territory with the powers and prerogatives of a State. I think the smallness of that majority is an argument against any action on your part; but if you go behind that small majority and look at the number of voters, it seems to me that the argument still increases, for the Senator tells us there were but eight thousand voters. Sir, the question is, will you invest those eight thousand voters with the same powers and prerogatives in this Chamber which are now enjoyed by New York and Pennsylvania and other States of this Union. I think the argument on that head is unanswerable. It would be unreasonable for you to invest them with those powers and prerogatives at this time.

But, sir, I am free to confess that with me the prevailing consideration is that this State does not present itself with a constitution republican in form, and on that question I challenge the deliberate judgment of my excellent friend, the Senator from Ohio, who is now trying to introduce this Territory into the Union as a State. I challenge that distinguished Senator to show that a constitution which on its face disqualifies citizens on account of color and disfranchises them can be republican in form. Sir, I say it is not a republican government, and I am sorry that my distinguished friend lends his countenance on this occasion to a government of such a character. I wish that my friend could lift himself to the argument that such a government cannot be republican in form, and must not be welcomed as such on this floor.

But I forbear entering into the argument. On other occasions, again and again, I have gone over the argument. Senators, I know, have made up their minds. Each must judge for himself. It is not without pain and trouble that I find that I am constrained to differ from valued friends and associates about me, with whom I am always proud to agree; but I cannot recognize a constitution like that as republican in form. Believing as I do, it is my duty to oppose the recognition of this Territory as a State just so long as I can. I hope, sir, that the motion of the Senator will not prevail.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I will at this time interpose a motion which I think ought to be acceptable to all Senators. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report as to the population of the Territory and whether the constitution of the State has been adopted by a fair vote of the people. It is known, I presume, to all Senators that the validity of this election has been disputed; and that question ought to be settled before we admit the State. It is disputed by the local authorities, as I understand, or among the local authorities; it is disputed by the people of the Territory. This measure comes before us just at the close of the session when it is impossible to make this investigation. If Nebraska is entitled to admission as a State, it is not important that she be admitted now, for the reason that her Senators and Representatives could not participate in legislation except for a single day. The time for adjournment is fixed at twenty-three hours from this time. If it were early in the session and it were important that she should be represented upon this floor, the question would be somewhat different; but as we adjourn to-morrow it is not important that she be admitted to-day, and no Senator, as I think, ought to ask the admission of a State when the integrity of the election itself is disputed. From what I have heard about it, I do not believe the election was a fair one. I am told that votes were rejected which ought to have been counted. I am told that in some localities votes were received that ought not to have been received. When this allegation was made in respect to the elections in Kansas it was thought proper to investigate the subject, to investigate it very thoroughly. There was no haste to bring in the State then by the Senator from Ohio over those averments. Now, sir, when the charge is made that the election has not been a fair one, the motion I make is a reasonable one that this bill and all the papers connected with it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to inquire into these two matters, the population of the Territory and the question whether the vote upon the adoption of the constitution was a fair one.

Mr. WADE. I hope that this motion will not prevail. It is a very extraordinary motion for any gentleman to make. This matter has been before one committee that I am bound to believe was competent to decide all there was involved; at all events competent enough to decide that there is no evidence to the contrary of their finding. It is very easy for any gentleman to oppose the admission of a State, and to get up and say there is something unfair about it. I never have heard of it. The gentleman says he has heard somewhere that there is some dispute about the votes here. There is nothing in the papers that indicates that. The Governor of the Territory says that the election was held, that the people voted upon this question, and he tells the number of votes they gave and the majority that was found in favor of the constitution, and he does not intimate anywhere what the gentleman has alluded to, that there was anything unfair about it, anything wrong about it, and I never heard it until now; but upon his mere statement that he has heard somewhere some vague rumor, he proposes that this State may be postponed and kept out of the Union ad libitum. He says it is not very important that they be admitted now because the session is near the close. Can the Senator tell me how soon an extra session will be called on some great occasion that may arise? Is it not well to have Senators all the year round, whether you are in session or not, ready to be called upon whenever the exigency may arise to call for their counsel? Who ever heard of such a motion as this, to postpone such a measure because a Senator has somewhere heard—he does not tell us where or how—that there was something unfair in the voting in this Territory, when here, under the seal of the officers of the government, we have the constitution, we have the votes, we have everything that enables us at any time to bring a State into the Union? I do not think it well to debate this any more, for I do not suppose on the bare motion of a Senator, without showing any reason, the bill will be referred to any committee.

In the next place, as for the Senator from Massachusetts, he challenges me to show that this constitution is republican in form. Well, sir, it is republican in form, but is not that kind of republicanism that I approve of. If I had my way about it nobody would be excluded from the franchise that was a male citizen of proper age, let his color be what it would. That would be the color of republicanism that I should like the best; but to deny that under the Constitution of the United States this constitution is republican in form is to deny that we have a republic at all, for when the Government was formed I believe there was not more than one State at all events that was republican in form unless this is republican in form. It is republican in form and also in substance, for I do not suppose (and I am informed that there are not) that there are fifty colored persons in the whole Territory; but they ought to vote if there was but one. I grant you that. So it has been in the State from which I come, and in the States from which most of us come. They all have the right of suffrage, but their not having that right now ought not to be an impediment in the way of this whole people having anything to do with conducting their own affairs, nor does it conduce to bring near the time when everybody will consent that every person of proper age and proper mind shall be entitled to vote. It does not conduce to that end to postpone these measures in this way. I know full well that the Senate has voted for a constitutional amendment fixing forever the status of the southern States and all States not permitting colored people to vote except by the consent of their State, just as this is. It does not look to making that compulsory on them by the Government of the United States, but leaves it to the States to say who shall be their voters, giving them some inducement to do justice to all men. I know that inducement is having its effect and will very soon work out that problem which the Senator from Massachusetts is so desirous to solve now; and he is not more desirous nor eager for that time to come than I am. But, sir, it is all futile to say that when every new State has been admitted with a constitution in this particular like the one before us, we shall now declare that this State shall be kept at arm's ends because it has done just as every other State has done heretofore; for no new State has yet knocked at our doors with a constitution admitting colored people to the franchise—not one. Why make an exception of this? I want universal, impartial suffrage; I want a great many other things in this constitution that I do not see here, and I hope the time will come when they will be fixed according to my standard of what they ought to be; but then I am not their judge. They must judge of these matters for themselves. The State constitution is republican in form, but it is not as perfectly so, as far as suffrage is concerned, as I wish it was; but it is just as good as its neighbors are now.

The State of Massachusetts is a little forward on this subject. I am glad of it. New England, I believe, has generally got over this color-phobia, which is fast vanishing away everywhere. No; Connecticut has not; she stands as firmly as any State in the Union upon that discrimination. I am sorry for it, but I think she will outgrow it very soon.

But, however, I will not argue these old, dry questions over again. We all understand them, and it is in vain now at this time of day to make a discrimination against this State because she has done like every other State that has come into the Union, with a constitution precisely the same as every other had, and not at all different in this respect. Therefore I hope without further delay that it will be the judgment of the Senate that she should be admitted. Here are her Senators, gentlemen of the greatest reputation, able to represent her on this floor with ability and to the advantage of the people of the State, knocking at your doors, ready to take a part in the Government and all that interests them; and why should we keep them out? I know some gentlemen who are very eager apparently to keep this State out would be very willing to take in other States, more doubtful in character than this, with any constitution they might get up. I do not go on that principle. I feel a little impartial; but if there is any partiality on my mind it is for the State that has never erred, never made a misstep, which is all erect, up to the very high-water mark of modern improvements in government. Let her in; and if you have other States that are lagging behind, the moment you can make it safe for us that they shall be represented I am with you. But this State has never in her progress from a Territory to a

State been hostile to the glorious old flag of the country; she never raised an impious arm against the General Government; she comes here as a legitimate daughter of the Republic, now arrived at age and claiming her participation in the management of affairs, and I say let her in without further parley.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator asks, when was a motion such as I have submitted made upon a mere rumor? I say such a motion was made just yesterday when the credentials of a Senator were laid upon the table. Senators stated that upon rumor they had heard that that Senator had occupied a position which excluded him from the Senate, and upon that rumor and statement the Senator himself, I believe, said that the credentials ought to go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WADE. I said nothing about it one way or the other.

Mr. HENDRICKS. By a citizen of Nebraska I was told this morning that there were such frauds in this election that it was entitled to no respect from honorable men.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Just at this point I would like to inquire of the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Ohio, whether the election that took place on the adoption of the constitution was under the provisions of the enabling act while the enabling act was still in force or was at some voluntary election which took place afterward. I do not know what the fact is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On the motion which I submitted I did not intend to discuss the merits at all except to present to the Senate the question that I thought ought to be investigated by a committee. Now, I understand the fact to be that this constitution never was adopted by a convention under the enabling act at all, but it is a constitution presented to the people by the Legislature of the Territory, and that it does not come here at all under the enabling act; but I did not choose to discuss that now.

I say that I have been told by a citizen of the Territory that there were frauds in the election. Senators will recollect that no one pretends that this constitution was adopted by any considerable majority, perhaps about one hundred. According to the papers it was about one hundred.

Mr. WADE. About one hundred. I have the certificate here.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Where thousands are voting either way, as the Senator says, a vote sufficient to indicate a population, as he thinks, of sixty thousand, where thousands are voting upon either side and there is but one hundred majority upon the grave question whether a State government shall be fastened upon the people with a constitution of a peculiar form, and the avowment is made by a citizen of the Territory and by the public journals of the country that that election is tainted with fraud, the Senator says that it ought not to be investigated; at least that the question has been before a committee competent to investigate it. I do not question that; but does the Senator say that he has investigated it? Does the Senator say that he has looked at all into that question? On the contrary, he says he has found no occasion to investigate it.

Mr. WADE. The first time I have ever heard there was any trouble about that election was from the Senator this morning, and he does not give us authority for it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A Senator near by me says it is notorious. I have seen it in the newspapers, and this morning it was stated to me by a citizen of the State, quite as strong an avowment as was made yesterday when the Senate thought it proper to send the credentials of a Senator to a committee. Now, I submit, I believe that there were frauds in the election from what I am told. I have no doubt of it from what I have been told.

Mr. POMEROY. What election?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The election adopting the constitution. Now, here is one hundred between the parties, a very small majority; and is it unreasonable to ask that that question be investigated?

I am perfectly willing to say that the Senator's own committee shall investigate it. I am not particular about that. All we want is a fair investigation; and I know if he undertook it, he would give it that sort of an investigation; but here at the close of the session, when there is no injury done to the State by that course, we ask simply that it be referred to a committee.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I have heard nothing yet but rumor, and that of the weakest character; and the Senator from Indiana tries to give point and weight to rumor in this matter because, he says, rumor was alluded to yesterday on the question of the reference of certain credentials, and he insinuates that I said something then about rumor. Sir, I made no speech on that subject, and I did not cast my vote in that case upon any mere rumor; nor did I understand the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who spoke on that subject, and who probably stated the views of a majority, to proceed upon the mere idea of rumor. So far from it, I understood him to say distinctly that if there was only a rumor he would not proceed on it or ground any action upon it. He said that he was at one time prepared to vote against the reference of those credentials because the objection seemed to be based upon nothing but rumor; but he had been relieved of that by the fact that gentlemen who were the friends and advocates of the admission of that applicant, acting apparently as counsel by his side, admitted the fact that he had presided in a court hostile to the General Government, and had, of course, taken an oath to support a hostile government. That stood admitted; it was the basis of the argument of the friends of the gentleman applying for admission, and that being the case, I understood the Senator from Maine to insist that what was originally a mere rumor had become a part of the record by the admission of the advocate on the other side, and therefore he acted upon that admission. So, then, we did not act on rumors yesterday. We pay no more regard to them in our legislative proceedings than would a court in judicial proceedings.

Does the Senator suppose that he is to impeach the integrity of the people of a Territory upon the bare breath of scandal that he has heard from the mouths of men or from party newspapers? Do we act upon that here in Congress? I take it no Senator's mind is influenced by any such stuff. That is not the basis of our action. Now, what have we authentic? We have the certificate of the authorized officers of the Territory whose business it is to certify the facts to us, and there is not a word or a breath to impeach it. Who shall rise here and by his mere breath blow away these substantial, authentic documents by saying there are rumors of fraud? But, then, if there is not any fraud, it is said, the smallness of the majority is another great reason. I supposed that we were a Government of majorities; that when the majority had determined a question, that question was determined, whether it was important or otherwise. Sir, many of the most important questions that ever came before this nation, nay, sir, questions which have fixed the character of our institutions for ages, have been decided by one single vote. If we had only had one vote more on one occasion in the old Continental Congress we should have escaped entirely from this terrible controversy that we have had over the subject of black and white, slave or free. If New Jersey had been there, if one member from New Jersey had been there, who would have voted in the direction of freedom, we should have been saved much trouble. His bare absence, one vote, fixed the status of the Government and entailed upon us all the evils we have had. Will a Democrat rise here and tell me "You have got a majority of one hundred, but what is that on a great question?" Sir, the standing of any of us on this floor would be determined by a much less vote than that. No question is so weighty in this nation, no question is so unimportant in this nation, but what it must be settled by a majority of even one. Why, then, tell me upon a great question "You must have a certain majority?" How great? It must be in proportion to the importance of the question!

Mr. HENDRICKS. I intimated no such thing. The argument I made shall stand exactly as I made it. I said that in the vote that was cast it is not pretended there was more than one hundred of a majority; and that when there is so small a majority and there is the avowment that there was fraud, it is proper to inquire into it. If there were majorities of thousands, or hundreds even, and the fraud was but trifling, as charged, then it would not be important to inquire into it; but where fraud is charged and the majority upon the adoption of the constitution is small, it ought to be investigated.

Mr. WADE. How plain a tale can put all this down. First of all, is there anybody from this State protesting against its adoption? Is there a single petition or protest against it? Is there any man certifying in an authentic form that there is anything wrong about the election? The representative of that people in the other House is anxious that the Territory shall be admitted as a State, and he speaks by authority for that people as their representative as the Senator speaks for the people of Indiana. We have the official certificates of the proper officers; and against all this a Senator rises and tells us that there are rumors and statements in newspapers that there is something unfair. I will not argue such a question before the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Ohio one question, because I am entirely without information as to the facts: whether this election took place under the enabling act or whether it was a subsequent election after the enabling act had expired. I wish to know the fact.

Mr. WADE. The enabling act was passed in 1864 enabling the people of the Territory of Nebraska to assemble themselves together to form a State government; but there was no time fixed that I remember. Then their Legislature met and passed an act upon that subject, undoubtedly under the authority of the enabling act of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have you the act of the Territorial Legislature?

Mr. WADE. I have not got it here. It is in my committee-room. I remember that the enabling act was passed in 1864, about the same time that the Colorado act was passed. The people of Colorado met and voted against a State organization the first time; but the next time they met they voted in favor of it; and it was argued here that because of the first vote the enabling act was functus officio; but the reply was conclusive, as I thought, that by passing an enabling act authorizing the people of a Territory to form a State government we commit ourselves to receive them whenever they do accept the invitation and form a State government. Whenever they accept the conditions of the enabling act and present themselves for admission I see no reason why they should be excluded; and they may do it as well at one time as at another.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the honorable Senator will allow me, as I have now before me the enabling act of Nebraska, I will read the third section of it. That section of the act of Congress provides:

"That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said Territory shall be qualified to be elected; and they are hereby authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a convention, under such rules and regulations as the Governor of said Territory may prescribe, and also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such constitution as may be formed by said convention, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe."

What I desired to know was whether they did choose a convention, whether that convention submitted a constitution, and whether that constitution was voted upon by the people in pursuance of this act, or whether the Legislative Assembly of their own accord undertook to submit a constitution to the people. I wish to know the fact, for I confess I am ignorant as to it.

Mr. WADE. The enabling act authorized them to meet at such time as the Governor should prescribe, and form a constitution. I have a certificate of the Governor in these words:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, OMAHA, July 3, 1866.

I hereby certify that at an election held in pursuance of an act passed by the Legislature of Nebraska, approved February 9, 1866, authorizing the people to vote for or against the adoption of a State constitution for the State of Nebraska, the vote for the constitution was 3,938, and the vote against the constitution was 3,839, being a majority of 100 votes in favor of the constitution.

Given under my hand and seal the 3d day of July, 1866. ALVIN SANDERS, Governor of Nebraska.

And this is countersigned by the secretary of the Territory.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It seems from that certificate that the election was not held under the enabling act. The enabling act provided for the choosing of a convention under such rules as the Governor should prescribe. It did not provide that the Legislative Assembly of Nebraska should submit a constitution to the people, but that a convention chosen under the act of Congress should submit a constitution, and that election should determine the question whether the people adopted the constitution or not.

The difficulty in a case like this is that where a constitution is formed in this irregular way, without any authority of Congress, the election held is a mere voluntary affair altogether outside of the law; and if frauds are committed, if false voting is perpetrated, or if perjury is committed at the polls, no man can be punished anywhere than if it was a mere political meeting. It is like holding a caucus. It is more formal, to be sure, when they undertake to submit it under the authority of the Legislature of the Territory; but the honorable Senator from Ohio will not contend that any man could be convicted for perjury for swearing falsely at such an election; no man could be punished for filling the ballot-boxes improperly. And why? Because the Legislature of the Territory had no power to order any such election until they were first authorized by Congress to do so, because in Congress under the Constitution is the legislative power which controls this matter. It is not in the Territory, because we have not delegated to the Territory any such powers as that. In this point of view it is a material circumstance that the majority was only one hundred. With such a small majority at an election where there was no law to prevent frauds being perpetrated, how can we say and feel assured that the people of the Territory of Nebraska have shown that they want a State organization?

Mr. President, I was anxious to learn what the fact was on that subject, whether they had proceeded under the enabling act or whether they had proceeded under some voluntary act of the Legislative Assembly, and it seems they proceeded without the authority of the enabling act, under the voluntary act of the Assembly.

I suggest to the honorable Senator from Indiana—his motion is to refer this bill back to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire—that he make a different motion. In reference to the admission of Territories as States into the Union, I never have known in the history of the Senate that such a question was ever referred to any other committee than the Committee on Territories; and, therefore, I hope the honorable Senator will change his motion. I do not believe it should be taken from the Committee on Territories to be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, because the Committee on Territories have always had the consideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is entirely satisfactory to me, and I modify my motion in that way. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WADE. There certainly is a kind of opposition made to the admission of this State that I did not contemplate, and as long as I have been on this Committee on Territories I never have known so many technicalities interposed to such a measure. What are the technical difficulties in the way of these people getting into the Union? Gentlemen have become very critical and very nice, and they scrutinize these proceedings very much as they would an indictment if a man was indicted for murder. They scrutinize it in the same way.

First we passed an enabling act whereby we left it in the discretion of the Governor of Nebraska to assemble the people there together, and to form a constitution at his discretion. They met. Now, what should he have done? They say he should not have assembled the Legislature at all; that was a bad way of doing the business. He brought the Legislature together. They prescribed the mode of taking the sense of the people upon this subject; and in their law they went on to provide the way and manner in which the people should vote upon the subject of the constitution. They made a constitution, they submitted it to the people, and the certificate shows that they voted upon it; the vote is given; and now all that can be said against it is that the vote was not as large as gentlemen think it ought to be upon an important subject; and they insinuate that this action was not under the enabling act. What is the presumption? We enabled them to go forward and make a constitution, authorizing the Governor to perform the business ad libitum, for we did not restrict him as to time, place, circumstance, or manner; we left all to him. He went on and he submitted the question to a vote. A constitution was made; it was submitted to the people by a vote; they adopted it; and yet it is said they did not act under the enabling act. The people had the constitution before them; it was duly published; everybody knew what it was; the election was held upon its adoption, and the Governor certifies to us the result of that election; and now for the technicality. Do not gentlemen know that States have been admitted into this Union without any enabling act? Was there any when Michigan came in? Have not gentlemen read the elaborate and able opinion of the Attorney General, Mr. Butler, upon that subject at the time, in which he came to the conclusion; and the President and Congress sustained him throughout, that an enabling act was not essential, that we might take a constitution that a people had made of their own will and in their own way, and if they had made a constitution that was satisfactory to them, Congress could approve of it as well after it was made as enable them to go forward and make it beforehand? It makes no difference, not but what this was made and designed to be made in accordance with our enabling act; but if it were otherwise here is a plain, fair constitution submitted to that people, the certificate of the Governor as to the votes they gave, and nothing except the ghost of a rumor to show that it was not fairly done; and now what shall we do? Shall we defeat the will of these people who have sent their Senators here to represent them by the assent and approval of the whole community that voted for their constitution? You hear no remonstrance, nothing from the Territory of Nebraska, but you hear it from Indiana. Indiana is afraid that the people of Nebraska are going to suffer somehow. The people of Nebraska are not apprehensive about that. Here are her Senators, able men; there is a Representative in the other House already, prompt, and eager to second the votes of the majority that ratified this constitution; and yet gentlemen from other States become the guardians of these people and think they have made some mistake there and ought not to have voted for their constitution, or it was somehow not submitted to them properly. They do not say so.

I do not wish to continue this talk about referring this bill back for us to investigate whether there is fraud in the election or not, upon no suspicion of any sort except that a gentleman says he has heard or read in some paper that there was some fraud. I hope we shall have a vote and I hope we shall admit the State.

Mr. POMEROY. Nebraska has been a Territory for twelve years. The organic act passed with the act organizing the Territory of Kansas, which is now a State. Nebraska was delayed a good while from the fact that the emigration to Nebraska was not equal to what it was to Kansas; and not until they commenced the construction of the Pacific railroad and a large impetus was given to emigration, and a large amount of property came there for taxation, did the people feel that they could consistently take upon themselves the duties and burdens of a State government; but early this year, although the enabling act was passed some years ago, they commenced, in the regular, ordinary way, to form a State constitution. I confess that I never heard a word about frauds in the election from any citizen of Nebraska, and I learn that there are no frauds charged in any of the papers excepting frauds charged upon those who tried to defeat the constitution.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator will allow me, before he goes into the question of frauds in the election, to ask him a question of fact. He stated just now that the people of Nebraska proceeded under this act regularly to form a State constitution. I desire to get at the facts. I observe that the enabling act required that they should have a convention and that that convention should be held in 1864, and that on the second Tuesday of October, 1864, the constitution should be submitted for the ratification of the people. Did they do that or did they not?

Mr. POMEROY. I understand they did not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This act fixed that day for the election.

Mr. POMEROY. Since the Pacific railroad was located there they have believed they could institute a State government. Then they thought they could sustain a State government, and then, according to the spirit of the act, but not in the exact time fixed by it, they went on and formed this constitution.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Did they hold a convention in 1864?

Mr. POMEROY. I am not certain.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If they did, did they vote on the constitution?

Mr. POMEROY. I am not certain. I know there was no general sentiment among the people in favor of it until the last year or so; but since the adoption of the constitution the friends whom I have in Nebraska in great numbers have written and urged the acceptance of this constitution by the Government. Indeed, I do not know that there is a party there opposed to it. All that I have learned is that there were some men holding office, as there were in Colorado, who expected that their occupation would be gone if Nebraska could not be continued as a Territory, and they have kept up a little party, and there is a charge of fraud raised. Whether there is any truth in it or not I do not know, but it is traceable to those who were opposing the constitution, and I have not seen an insinuation of that sort against those who advocated the adoption of the constitution. I have been a citizen of a Territory long enough to know that men who get offices under the General Government that expire when the Territory becomes a State oppose a State government, and they will hold on to a territorial government as long as they possibly can, and they will get up a party and they will try to control the elections. They are the very men who control the elections, because they are in public office; they have some patronage and they have some money; and the very men who oppose the organization of a State government are generally the appointees of the Administration, those who would be likely to lose their offices if the Territory became a State.

Now, I say that if any Territory has been well prepared and is worthy of admission into this Union as a State it is Nebraska. She did not go through all the discipline that my State went through; but she has had enough of it. She is ready to throw it off; she is ready to pass out from under this General Government of the United States into a national American government of her own. If there is anything the American people like, it is their own government. The General Government may be ever so good, the territorial government may be ever so kind, yet if it is not a government of the people it never satisfies them. This American idea runs through the hearts of our citizens everywhere in all the States. Put a dozen men down in a Territory and they will go to work and form a State government so as to have a government of their own. They will always want to get a government of their own. It is always a most offensive thing to have Governors appointed, judges appointed, officers to rule over them appointed from some distant State, generally from the East, who know as little about the West as if they had never been there, and yet they have gone down there and tried to administer government. The most unpopular and most unfortunate class of people that go into a new Territory are eastern men when they suddenly get an appointment and go West. The people want to throw off that kind of government and have a government of their own.

The people of Nebraska have proceeded, I say, in the spirit of the act; they have a reasonable amount of population; they are wealthy; they are willing to support a State government. I say it is time they did it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, one of the leading objections to the bill now before the Senate, insisted upon by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin is, that there was no law for holding the election under which the members of the convention that framed this Nebraska constitution were elected. I am not so sure about that. I understand the facts to be that by the enabling act of 1864 the inhabitants of Nebraska were authorized to form a State constitution and submit it to a general election to be held in October, 1864. Undoubtedly the legal efficacy of the act of 1864 expired from and after the second Tuesday in October of that year, because it was on that Tuesday that there was to be held an election to ratify the constitution in case the people should have formed one before that day. But, sir, the convention which was actually called, if I understand it rightly, was authorized to be called by a territorial statute. Was not that the case?

Mr. WADE. I have now learned exactly how the whole of it was.

Mr. HOWARD. I think if the Senator from Ohio will look at his certificate, he will see that the title of the territorial act is recited.

Mr. WADE. I can state now precisely how it was because I have learned it from one of the Senators; I could not get it all from the papers. The convention met under the enabling act, but they failed to form a constitution; the Legislature then met, passed a law referring directly to the enabling act and conforming to it, framed a constitution, and by that act submitted it to the people. That is the constitution that is before us. The people voted upon the constitution, and the result of their voting is certified by the Governor to us. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the constitution was framed by a convention or by the Legislature.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that the constitution now presented to us was framed by the Territorial Legislature.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. And afterward, in pursuance of a territorial statute, submitted to the voters of the Territory for ratification or rejection, and there was no formal popular convention. I believe such to be the state of the case. I do not conceive that this is any objection. The whole proceeding for the formation of the State constitution took place under and by the authority of the Territorial Legislature; they prescribed the rules of proceeding; they submitted the instrument which was the work of their own hands, and a very wise and excellent one I believe, to the consideration of the people, and the people adopted it as their form of government by a respectable majority. I am not able exactly to deny the power of a territorial Legislature to pass an enabling act for the purpose of taking the sense of the people of the Territory upon the question of forming a State government. I have too high a precedent before me to dispute the validity of such legislation. The people of my State, while a Territory, through their Territorial Legislature, passed a similar enabling act, and in 1835 called a convention which framed a constitution of government which was afterward adopted by a vote of the people. I never heard it alleged there that this territorial statute was invalid, and that therefore if an elector at the polls had committed perjury he could not be punished for it under the subsequent State laws or under the territorial laws. Sir, I deny such a proposition. I insist that such an act of legislation by a territorial government calling an election and imposing penalties for the crime of perjury in voting upon such a question is a valid statute, and that the crime would be properly cognizable and punishable by the territorial court, or by the State court after the Territory should have changed its territorial condition and become a State; so that I do not admit that there is any validity whatever in the objection which is urged against this bill by the Senator from Wisconsin, that there was no legal sanction, no legal protection in the holding of the election for the ratification of the constitution. I think, sir, a voter who should swear falsely in getting in his vote under that territorial act would be justly, legally punishable. I have not any doubt of it, and I think you will find that the courts, if this question has ever been litigated there, will have held precisely in that way.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the honorable Senator will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, there are two facts in connection with this question which I have been authorized by a gentleman to state on his responsibility—Mr. J. L. Gibbs. One fact is this, and it is a fact which I did not know myself; perhaps other gentlemen of the Senate knew it by information: that in 1864, under the enabling act, a constitution was submitted to the people of Nebraska and voted down.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that to have been the fact.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And the further fact that on the present vote upon the State constitution there were two companies of soldiers in the State belonging to Iowa that happened to be upon service in Nebraska, who voted for Governor Stone in Iowa last fall, and who upon this vote in Nebraska voted on this constitutional question, and immediately on their being mustered out went to their homes in Iowa—men who were not residents of Nebraska at all. These are facts which he authorizes me to state and for which he says the affidavits of the captains of the companies can be given. And now, sir, my point is this: that where an election is held—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should be glad to know what Iowa regiment it is.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Two companies.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What Iowa regiment?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know the number of the regiment.

Mr. HOWARD. I yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin for an explanation, and not for debate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I simply say that it seems to me that where the election has been held, not under the enabling act but outside of the enabling act, and where such facts are alleged, it ought certainly to be inquired into by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HOWARD. I was speaking of the effect of the territorial statute under which the constitution of Nebraska was submitted for ratification by the people, and was endeavoring to show that the crime of perjury committed under that act would in all enlightened courts be held to be a legal crime, and was cognizable and punishable by the courts of the Territory. That was the point at which I was aiming when I was interrupted by the Senator from Wisconsin. He now tells us that frauds were actually committed at that election. Whether that be the case or not, it is not possible for me to say; I have received no information on the subject except such as is presented to-day by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin; but I have this to say in that respect: if there were any illegal votes cast at that election, whether by soldiers or other persons, undoubtedly the territorial statute made some provision by which that mischief might have been, or ought to have been, remedied. There must have been constituted in some way a tribunal by which the election returns were to be certified according to law. There must have been within the Territory somewhere a board of election required by the territorial statute to pass upon the question of the legality or illegality of any votes that were thrown at that election. Can the honorable Senator from Wisconsin say that this question was never raised before that election board? That board, and that alone, was authorized to pass upon this question; and if such a fraud were committed as that which he has represented to have been committed, and for which he seems willing to vouch, I ask him, why was not the question raised before the election board and a proper decision made according to the laws of the Territory and by judicial agents authorized to entertain and decide the question? We have a right to presume, in the absence of all proof to the contrary, that every such question has been passed on, settled, and decided finally by the board of election to whom the returns were made; and it seems to me entirely too late in the day for Congress to enter into a question of that kind which ought to have been decided, and was decided if it was of sufficient importance to come before the board of election, by that board.

Now, Mr. President, for aught that appears before us the election was fair, honest, and correct. On the one hand there were some 4,000 or 3,900 voters whose votes were thrown in favor of the constitution which was submitted to them, and a number less by about 100 were thrown against the constitution. There is a clear, undisputed majority out of about 8,000 voters in that Territory in favor of the ratification of the constitution and in favor of the admission of the Territory as a State of the Union. I have seen no case freer from legal doubt than this appears to be; and so far as I have seen, so far as I know, so far as the records and papers before us now tend to show, I know of no case that is freer from fraud and false voting than this seems to have been.

There is, undoubtedly, a departure from the rule prescribed by the enabling act of 1864. The people of the Territory for some reason or other did not adopt a constitution as contemplated by that act. So far as that statute is concerned, it may be entirely disregarded—disregarded for all other purposes except this: that in the opinion of Congress, in 1864 the time had come to give to the people of that Territory the privilege and faculty of forming a State government and of coming into the Union. This pledge we voluntarily gave them two years ago. They have substantially and faithfully responded to the invitation of Congress to form a State constitution, and I hope that we shall admit them. I hope that the condition of vassalage, that inconvenient territorial condition, of which every man who has resided in a Territory any length of time will have seen great reason to complain, will now be removed, and that this intelligent, this enterprising community of pioneers will be relieved from these inconveniences and admitted to a full and complete fellowship as one of the sister States of the Union. I dislike territorial governments; it is the most degrading, it is the most inconvenient, and it is the most corrupting and embarrassing of all governments upon the face of the earth.

Mr. WADE. I rise to correct some statements that have been made here, and the facts in regard to them show how improper it is in a court of justice or a legislative body to proceed upon mere rumor. Here is the secretary of the Territory right behind me; here are gentlemen who participated in the convention, and I am informed by them that no constitution was ever framed or submitted to the people until this one was.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On that subject, perhaps, I ought to correct the statement that I made. I understood that in 1864 the people voted against the constitution. That is not so technically; but when the question of electing a convention was submitted to the people they elected delegates to the convention who when the convention assembled adjourned without framing a constitution, because the majority of them were against a State constitution. That is the precise fact.

Mr. WADE. That clears some of the brush away. I understand further that Mr. Gibbs, who has been quoted here, is a Utah man, who has not resided in the Territory of Nebraska for four years. Rumors thus derived are to be palmed off against the authentic doings of that people in a vain endeavor to defeat their deliberate action in framing a constitutional government. The idea is ridiculous and absurd. I never knew such a course resorted to before. What, sir, bring in here the chit-chat of men outside, who are perhaps interested in continuing in place public officers whose terms are about to expire if the will of that people be carried out, to gainsay the authentic doings of that people! If there was anything wrong in their proceedings, if there was any fraud in the voting, why was not the matter brought before the proper authorities there? They had their rules and regulations by which to test the question of fraud if any allegation of fraud was made. But the people there did not take it up; it is left to Mr. Gibbs, from Utah, to insinuate frauds in the election.

Mr. POMEROY. He says that these soldiers voted for Stone and then voted on this constitution. Stone's vote was last October, and this was in June. How they could have voted for Stone and upon this constitution at the same time, I do not see.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is as plain as the nose on a man's face. The laws of Iowa authorized their soldiers to vote; and the soldiers of Iowa, being in Nebraska, voted for Governor Stone, of Iowa, and when this question came up they voted on this constitution, and then, being mustered out, went right home to Iowa. These facts, Mr. Gibbs states, are sworn to by the captains of the companies.

Mr. POMEROY. Where are their affidavits?

Mr. HENDRICKS. We want an opportunity to present them; that is the object of the reference.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like very much to know from the Senator from Wisconsin what Iowa troops those were. I feel very sure that Iowa had not a soldier in Nebraska last June when this vote was taken.

Mr. WADE. I suppose Mr. Gibbs, of Utah, knew more about it than you did. [Laughter.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not think there was an Iowa regiment or company there; and I should like to know what companies are alluded to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I cannot tell the name or number of the company or regiment; but I say that upon this statement of facts the question should be examined by the Committee on Territories. If the Senate appointed a committee to examine into the subject witnesses could be examined and the whole particulars given.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not believe there was an Iowa regiment or company in Nebraska last June.

Mr. POMEROY. The seventh regiment of Iowa volunteers were out there last fall, but they were all mustered out over six months ago. That was the only Iowa regiment that was in Nebraska.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does the Senator from Kansas know when they were mustered out, precisely? Does he know where they were in Nebraska when they were mustered out—in what part of Nebraska?

Mr. POMEROY. My colleague, [Mr. Ross,] who is very familiar with the facts, says they were mustered out over six months ago.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Long before this election.

Mr. WADE. The Governor of the State of Iowa ought to know something about the troops of that State; and I think his statement here is as authentic as that of Mr. Gibbs, of Utah, or anybody else. But where is the evidence that a soldier from Iowa or anywhere else voted at the polls? There is no such proof. Do the people of Nebraska complain that they were defrauded? Not a man of them. Why do they not contest it? Why do they leave gentlemen from Wisconsin and from Indiana to interfere in that of which they do not complain? Why did they send here certificates that the election was fair, when gentlemen here get Mr. Gibbs, from Utah, to say there was some fraud mixed up in it? The thing is so ridiculous that I do not feel warranted in arguing upon such stuff. Talk not to me about Gibbs and other men having said this, that, and the other. I know where they get it from; the expiring voices of those gentlemen who, if we do our duty and give effect to the will of that people, will lose their hold upon public office. Things from such sources are brought in and retailed here as authentic statements that need answering and want investigation before committees. What would you investigate? The people of Nebraska have made no complaint. If you refer it to our committee we shall have nothing to act upon, unless we take up what the Senator from Indiana says somebody told him, or he saw in a newspaper, or what Mr. Gibbs talked about. Now, every gentleman here knows, the authentic papers show, that this was a fair election. Here is a good constitution, republican in form, in the usual form, submitted to the people fairly, and by them deliberately ratified. The result is certified to us by the Governor; the representatives of that people say it is all fair and right. Nobody complains except the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Wisconsin. I hope we shall take the vote and admit the State.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Since I was on the floor before, I have learned more of the particulars of this matter from Captain Lowry, of the first Nebraska regiment. Companies I and F, of the first Nebraska regiment, were raised in Iowa, soldiers of Iowa, and were stationed at Fort Kearney, and on a commission from the State of Iowa, voted for Governor Stone at Fort Kearney last year. And these same soldiers of Iowa voted on this question of the adoption of the State constitution in Nebraska, and they were not mustered out of the service and paid until the 1st of July this year. These are the facts for which Captain Lowry, a captain of the regiment, vouches; and there is no doubt about the truth of them; and I hold myself responsible for the truth of them. And on these facts I insist that this Committee on Territories, or some other committee of this body, shall investigate the facts as to the validity of this election by which it is pretended that this constitution has been adopted by the people of Nebraska.

Mr. President, this whole election has been but a voluntary election; it was not under any legal authority at all. I know there is the form of a law passed by the Legislative Assembly of Nebraska; but that Legislative Assembly of Nebraska had no more power to authorize the formation of a constitution to be submitted to the people of that Territory than the State of Iowa had to do the same thing for them, because their power is derived—I speak of it in a legal point of view—from the Congress of the United States under the enabling act.

But, Mr. President, I admit what the Senator from Ohio says, that if it was satisfactorily shown that the mass of the people, or a large portion of the people, or a decided majority of the people, were in favor of a constitution, and that they were sufficient in numbers to maintain a State government, I would not stand on a technicality for a moment; but when the question is to put a constitution upon them by what is called a majority of one hundred votes, when it is alleged, as I state upon the authority which I gave, that in voting on the adoption of this constitution these soldiers of Iowa were called in to vote upon it, I insist that it ought to be examined.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to inquire of him if he is informed what number of votes were cast by those parties, and which way they voted? Because if we go into an investigation it might be important to know whether their vote had any effect upon the result or not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have had no time to go into all this detail. After I make one statement of facts in relation to it gentlemen ask me a question—what was done in that particular? How do I know when I was not there? I have had no time to go and hunt up witnesses.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps the Senator did not understand me.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose they voted for the constitution; but still I will not vouch for that until I get further information.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I asked if the Senator understood whether their vote would affect the result one way or the other. Has he any general understanding on that?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suppose it would; and yet I state to the Senator most frankly that I have not examined the case sufficiently to say. I will not vouch for that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was there a regiment there?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No; two companies of the first Nebraska regiment, raised in Iowa, consisting of Iowa troops, stationed at Fort Kearney, in Nebraska Territory, and they were not mustered out of the service until just the beginning of the present month. Last fall those same men voted for Stone as Governor of Iowa on a commission sent by the State of Iowa for the purpose of taking their votes; and when this constitution was submitted they voted on it in Nebraska, and are now mustered out and paid and have gone home to Iowa.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the matter of admitting a new State is one of a good deal of importance, and the question whether any new State should be admitted or not ought certainly to be investigated by a committee. There has been no such investigation in relation to the admission of Nebraska. The honorable Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, four days ago "asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in" a bill; "which was read twice, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed." I never heard that there was to be an application for the admission of Nebraska as a State into the Union until four days ago, when the honorable Senator from Ohio asked and obtained leave to bring in the bill now under consideration. It was referred to the Committee on Territories, of which committee I am a member. Since this reference that committee has never held a session that I have been informed of. The committee have never taken the subject under consideration. According to my understanding the committee has never been convened for the purpose of considering whether this State should be admitted into the Union or not. The day before yesterday my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, came to my seat and remarked to me that he wished to report a bill to admit Nebraska as a State into the Union, and asked my consent that he should do so. Well, I told him that I would have no objection to his reporting the bill, but that I should not pledge myself to its support; on the contrary, for reasons that I assigned when the enabling act was passed, being then upon the Committee on Territories, I was opposed to the bill; but I had no objection to its being reported.

But, Mr. President, at that time I did not know that there was any difficulty in relation to the election. I supposed that it was all regular, that the election had been held in conformity to the law of Congress, and that it was free from fraud. I was not advised of any objection whatever to the admission of the State to arise on the passage of the bill now under consideration. If I had been of course I should have required the honorable Senator who is chairman of that committee to convene the committee for the purpose of taking the matter into consideration, and he, no doubt, would have done it very promptly. I have no question about that. He has acted very fairly, so far as I am concerned, in this matter; as much so as I could desire; but I think the facts revealed at this time show not only the importance but the necessity of an investigation of this whole subject by the Committee on Territories, or some other committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Ohio himself said he had not heard of any of these things, and of course he did not think it necessary to investigate them.

Mr. WADE. I never heard a word about them until I heard it here in the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt if the honorable Senator had heard it he would have convened the committee.

Mr. WADE. If I heard it in an authentic shape.

Mr. DAVIS. And he would not have asked me, I have no doubt, to give my informal consent to his reporting that bill against which there was such objection, he having knowledge of it. I have no idea he would have done that. Under the circumstances, I think the subject ought to be referred back to that committee, or that it ought to go to some other committee, to investigate the question whether Nebraska should now be admitted as a State into the Union or not.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to make a single remark in regard to this allegation about our Iowa soldiers voting in Nebraska. I was perfectly confident when the Senator from Wisconsin said before that two companies of an Iowa regiment had voted there that he was in error; because we had no Iowa regiment or part of a regiment in Nebraska at that time. It now turns out that the allegation is that certain men from Iowa forming companies in a Nebraska regiment voted there. In the commencement of the war the Iowa troops could not get into the field as fast as they wanted to, and there were some men who went from Iowa and entered the first Nebraska regiment, forming wholly or partially two companies. I do not know whether they were all made up of Iowa men or not. That was in 1861. The term of enlistment was for three years. All of those men who could have been in the first Nebraska regiment in June, 1866, must have been such of them as reenlisted as veterans. Now, counting that the whole of them originally were from Iowa, then deducting the number who died from disease, the number mustered out, the number killed in battle, and those who suffered from other casualties, and then the number of them that did not reenlist as veterans, and you may have some idea of the number of the original men enlisted in Iowa in 1861, remaining in 1866. I am satisfied it amounts to nothing on the vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have seen a number of very strong statements in the newspapers regarding the recent election in Nebraska, but I have not examined them with care, and am not, therefore, able to state to the Senate the particular points made. I think, however, that one of the allegations made against the election was that a number of unqualified Indians had voted. At all events, I was sufficiently impressed by seeing those statements in a number of newspapers, and repeated, to be convinced that the election held in that Territory required examination, required investigation; and I took it for granted that whenever the subject came up in the Senate, if it came up at all, we should have some definite information to enable us to form an opinion with regard to the fairness of the election and the consequent validity of the constitution alleged to have been adopted. But, sir, that election is recent, and this bill is brought in within four days of the end of the session without any previous notice or knowledge of members of Congress, of the people of the Territory, or of the people of the country; and now we are hurried to a vote upon it this morning without any information, without a possibility of any information except such as we can pick up of a fragmentary character during the progress of the discussion. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] seems to be unprovided with full information upon the subjects that are involved in this debate. He has a statement made by the secretary of the Territory and dated within a day or two, a certificate about the number of votes given at the election, a certificate given here in the city of Washington. Then you have a general certificate of the Governor of the Territory that a certain number of votes were cast on the constitution; and that is all the information we have. The Committee on Territories have never met and considered the subject; they have never made an investigation. In an informal manner there was an agreement among the members that the chairman might report this bill, and he brings it in here. These are the facts relating to the introduction of this measure, and there is a general impression upon the minds of members who have spoken in the debate that this election requires investigation, requires some examination. Yet, sir, strange to say, a motion to refer the subject to the Judiciary Committee, for the simple purpose of inquiring into it, is resisted, and resisted, too, when there is no practical objection to such a present disposition of the subject, because these members are not required here to assist us in the enactment of laws; their services will not be required during the vacation between the present and the next session of Congress; and unquestionably before that next session full and complete information can be obtained by the intelligent committee which we have organized for such purposes, and they can inform us promptly on our reassembling how the facts really stand, and we can then vote upon the question of admission and do justice to both the people of the Territory and to the people of the United States whom we represent.

It seems to me that the argument is decisive, is conclusive, in favor of the pending motion which has been submitted by the Senator from Indiana. But, sir, as it seems that the immediate admission of this Territory as a State is to be insisted upon, and we are to be driven to a determination upon the direct question, if the Senator from Ohio can attain his object, I will go on and submit some further remarks.

It seems by this recent certificate given at Washington by the secretary of the Territory, that at the election on the 2d of June of the present year the number of votes given for Representative in Congress from Nebraska, was 8,034. The vote on the constitution at the same time stood as follows: in favor of the constitution 8,938, against the constitution 3,833, showing an apparent majority of 100, and a total vote of 7,776.

How large a population in that Territory does that vote indicate? We may refer, upon this point, to the case of Colorado which was before us at the present session. In Colorado the vote in 1861 amounted to about 10,000, and that same year a census of the inhabitants of the Territory was taken showing the whole number to be 25,000. In the case, then, of Colorado, the population of the Territory was two and a half times as great as the number of voters; when the vote was 10,000 the population was only 25,000.

Now, sir, we have in the case of Nebraska a total number of votes amounting to 8,000; yet it would be inaccurate to draw a strict analogy between these two cases, because in Colorado the population was made up of miners, and in Nebraska there is an agricultural population. Therefore you cannot make the same calculation; but suppose that you assume that there are five times as many inhabitants in the Territory as there were voters at this election, that would only give you a population of forty thousand for this Territory, and I take it for granted that that is the utmost extent to which you can carry the number. Judged by this vote, taken on the 2d of June, the number of inhabitants in the Territory of Nebraska cannot exceed forty thousand, and it is very possible that it may fall somewhat short of that, because we know the general rule to be that in new Territories and in new countries the relative population between males and females is different from what it is in settled communities.

Mr. YATES. Will the Senator allow me? I am informed by the secretary of the Territory that a census was taken in last March a year ago, and the population then was forty-one thousand, and that since that time the population has rapidly increased, so that it is now some sixty thousand. I am also informed by one of the United States judges of the Territory that that is the fact.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If there has been a recent census of the population in that Territory, it was proper, it was in fact required, that it should be produced here before us that we might judge of the fact of numbers. We cannot take verbal statements on a subject of this kind, but according to this statement the population was then only forty-one thousand; and we have nothing to guide us in coming to a conclusion that the population is now greater except the opinions of gentlemen who are no doubt somewhat influenced by their desire that we shall admit this State as a member of the Union. I remember that when the enabling act in the case of Colorado was passed we were told here that that Territory contained sixty thousand inhabitants and that it was rapidly increasing. I think the minimum was put at sixty thousand; it might be, it was said, considerably greater, but it was at least that. That was the representation under which we passed the enabling act to permit the people of Colorado to form for themselves a State constitution; and the Delegate from that Territory was quoted as the authority for that statement; and yet it appeared afterward, when we came to an ascertainment of the fact, that the population at that very time could not have exceeded thirty thousand and probably did not much exceed twenty thousand. Now, I have learned by my experience in the Senate to place very little dependence upon these vague, indefinite, general, sweeping, and nevertheless most positive statements about the number of people in a Territory. There is no safety in proceeding upon questions of this kind without a census or some other specific and legal ascertainment of the fact which we have not here. We have nothing except the statement that there was a census sixteen months ago which showed that the population was about forty thousand; nothing in the world beside that except mere opinions of gentlemen that the population has increased since. But the conclusion to be drawn from the number of votes polled in June of the present year is that the population remains about what it was when the alleged census was taken.

There is another consideration to be mentioned in this connection. Take the case of New Mexico. I believe as far back as 1860 the population was seventy thousand or upward; it has increased since that time, and we have recently accounts of mining interests growing up in that Territory. The last estimate I heard was that the population of New Mexico at this time amounts to between ninety thousand and one hundred thousand, probably a population two or two and a half times as great as that of Nebraska; yet, sir, the Senator from Ohio does not introduce an enabling act for New Mexico; the Senator from Ohio does not propose that that Territory shall be admitted into this Union as a State. Is this equal treatment? You are to admit a Territory into the Union as a State with forty thousand or fifty thousand inhabitants, and you make no legal provision whatever for the admission of a Territory into the Union which contains probably ninety thousand. Is not this an odious policy? Is it not unequal? Will it not subject our legislation to just and severe criticism; to the imputation that we do not treat our Territories in the same manner, that we admit them on principles of partiality instead of principles of equal and even-handed justice? If there were no other consideration opposed to this measure, I should hesitate in voting for the admission of Nebraska as a State into the Union upon this distinct ground.

Mr. President, we are at a new point in our history upon the question of admitting States into the Union and we have also very troublesome questions upon the restoration of former and existing States of this Union. It is right that we should proceed with caution and with care; that we should examine carefully the ground upon which we stand, that we shall be certain that we adopt and act upon a policy which will exist in the future, which will continue, which will be permanent, and which will be salutary. And will not one rule of future action, and a proper rule of future action, be this: that a State shall not be admitted into the Union until it has an adequate number of inhabitants to authorize it to have one member in the House of Representatives under the ratio which may exist at the time? That rule has been frequently talked about. There seems to be a general assent that it would be a reasonable and a proper rule, that it would be salutary in its consequences, that it would prevent much of difficulty and debate in connection with the organization of Territories into States and their admission into the Union. According to the best information which we have here the Territory of Nebraska has less than one half the number of inhabitants necessary for a member of Congress. Even if you estimate that it has sixty thousand inhabitants, it has only one half the number requisite to elect a member in the House of Representatives, but according to the statistics which we have before us the population must be much less than that.

I conclude, then, by saying (I had no intention of addressing the Senate at such length) that I believe that upon the particular facts which pertain to this case, and also upon the principles of general policy which should obtain in the admission of States, Nebraska ought not now by our votes to be admitted as a State into this Union; but if we are to entertain this subject at all, if we are to proceed with it and to determine it upon its merits, independent of the considerations which I have suggested, nothing can be clearer than that we should have an investigation, that we should understand how the truth is, that we should not incur the peril of admitting a State into the Union when a majority of the qualified electors of that State have actually voted against it, that we should admit a State upon a return which is assailed, and assailed strongly, both in this Chamber and in the public press of the country. And let me say to the Senator from Ohio that upon questions of this kind in parliamentary proceedings we are not to require judicial evidence, we are not to demand specific proof to put us upon investigation. The old parliamentary rule is that common report is a sufficient ground for parliamentary action. We have that constantly quoted to us in the proceedings of the British Government, and it is a rule of good sense upon which all legislative bodies must proceed. When we are morally assured from statements made to us, whether by the press or by individuals, that an election which has been held to organize a new State is of doubtful validity or of doubtful fairness, according to parliamentary practice and according to principles of reason we are bound to investigate, and we are not to wait here until there is a regular indictment drawn up and the names of witnesses given and the specific particulars of their evidence reduced to form, and all this produced here. That may be well enough in courts, but it is impossible in legislative bodies.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen;

A bill (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 131) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this occasion to lay before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant, a statement of fines, penalties, and forfeitures returned to the Treasury Department by the collector of the district of Vermont, and the surveyor of the port at Louisville, Kentucky. The document was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. POLAND. I rise, Mr. President, to a question of privilege. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of Hon. David T. Patterson, Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, with instructions to report whether Mr. Patterson is legally qualified to hold the office of United States Senator from that State, have had the same under consideration and submit a report, with a resolution accompanying it. I may say that in reference to the facts embraced in the report the committee are entirely unanimous. As to the conclusion, the legal result, there is some difference of opinion among the committee. I ask that the report be read and the resolution considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read if there be no objection.

Mr. WADE. I hope it will be printed. I do not care about its being read.

Mr. SUMNER. We want to hear it. It is very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, no objection being made.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of Hon. David T. Patterson, Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, with instructions to report whether said Patterson is legally qualified to hold the office of United States Senator from said State, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report as follows:

The only question in relation to the qualifications of Mr. Patterson, or his right to hold his seat in the Senate, arises from the fact of his having held the office of circuit judge in the State of Tennessee after that State had passed an ordinance of secession and become a member of the confederacy.

Circuit judges in Tennessee are elected by the people of the several circuits, and hold their offices for the term of eight years.

Judge Patterson was elected judge in one of the circuits in Eastern Tennessee in May, 1861, and his term of office had not expired when the State passed the ordinance of secession. The constitution of the State of Tennessee remained the same after the secession of the State as before, and there was no change made in the form of the State government, or in their judicial system. A large majority of the people of East Tennessee were ardently devoted to the Union, and deemed it very important for their interest and that of the Union cause that the civil offices in that section of the State should be filled with Union men.

Judge Patterson was a firm, avowed, and influential Union man, and he was urgently pressed by the Union men of that circuit to run as a candidate for reelection as circuit judge, and he finally, though reluctantly, consented to do so. The opposing candidate was an avowed secessionist, and the issue in the election was between Union and secession. The election was held in May, 1862, and Judge Patterson was elected over his rebel competitor by a large majority. At the same election most of the local offices in that section were filled by the election of Union men. At that time it was believed by the Union men of East Tennessee that they would soon be relieved from rebel military rule by the arrival of Union forces; and they desired also to retain the civil power in their own hands. In this expectation they were disappointed, and soon rebel bands were scattered through that region, and the Union people were subjected to great hardships and cruel oppression. When Judge Patterson was thus reelected judge, he did not suppose he would be commissioned by the Governor of the State, who was a secessionist; but after some considerable delay a commission was sent to him, with peremptory orders to take the oath. On the receipt of his commission and order to take the oath Judge Patterson delayed and hesitated, and consulted other leading Union men as to the proper course for him to take. They advised and urged him to take the oath; that he could thereby afford protection to some extent to Union men against acts of lawless violence on the part of the rebels, and that if he did not accept the office and take the oath the office would be filled by a rebel, and they would then be oppressed by the civil as well as the military power of the rebels. Judge Patterson yielded to their urgency and arguments, and went before a magistrate and took the oath which the Tennessee Legislature had prescribed, which, in substance, was that he would support the constitution of Tennessee and the constitution of the confederate States. Judge Patterson declared at the time to the magistrate that he owed no allegiance to the confederate government and that he did not consider that part of the oath as binding him at all. At this time there were rebel troops in the neighborhood, and Judge Patterson had good reason to believe that his refusal to take the oath would subject him to arrest and imprisonment, if not worse treatment; but we do not find that he was actuated at all by personal considerations, but acted solely upon the motive that would thereby afford some aid and protection to the Union people, and also prevent the office from falling into hands that would use it to oppress them.

East Tennessee at this time was in a very disturbed and distracted condition. The country was full of bands of armed rebels, and lawless violence held sway. Business was nearly suspended, and no civil business was done in the courts. Judge Patterson held a few terms of court in counties where he could organize grand juries of Union men, and in this way did something toward preserving peace and order in the community. No other business was done by him as judge after his election in 1862.

During all this time Judge Patterson was an open, avowed, and devoted adherent to the Union. He was in constant communication with the officers of the Federal troops nearest that vicinity, and obtained and furnished to them information as to the movements of the rebels. He aided in concealing Union men, and in facilitating their escape to the Union lines, when they generally entered the Union service. He aided the Union people and the Union cause in every way open to him, and too numerous for detail. By these means he became amenable to the hostility of the secessionists, and was subjected to great difficulty and danger. He was several times arrested and held for some time in custody. At times he was obliged to conceal himself for safety, and spend nights in out-buildings and in the woods to avoid their vengeance.

In September, 1863, the Federal troops reached Knoxville, and Judge Patterson succeeded in escaping with his family to that place, and did not return to his home until after the close of the rebellion.

As before stated, the constitution and election laws and judicial system of Tennessee remained the same after the secession of the State as before, and Judge Patterson was elected judge the last time under the same State constitution and laws as existed at his first election, and no law was enforced by him as judge except such as were in force before the secession of the State.

The committee are all satisfied that, during the entire rebellion, Judge Patterson was an earnest, firm, and devoted Union man, and suffered severely in support of his principles. In accepting the office of judge, and taking the official oath, he did not intend any hostility to the authority or Government of the United States, nor did he intend to acknowledge any allegiance to or any friendship for the confederate government, but acted throughout with a sincere desire to benefit and preserve the Union and the Government of the United States. He always denied the authority of the confederate government over him, and feels an entire willingness and ability to take the oath required upon his admission to a seat in the Senate. The committee recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. David T. Patterson is duly qualified and entitled to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. SUMNER. Can that be considered to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As a question of privilege the Chair thinks it can; it is before the Senate to be disposed of by a majority of the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is proper, being upon this committee, that I should state that I have been unable to agree with the resolution which has been reported by the committee. The reading of the report was commenced before I came in; but I presume the facts are correctly stated. I am satisfied of the loyalty of Mr. Patterson, and of his having been a Union man during the troubles when he was within the rebel lines; but, sir, laws operate generally, and it will sometimes happen that in the operation of a law an individual case cannot be provided for. We have a statute which requires a certain oath to be taken. I will read what that oath is:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God."

That is the oath prescribed by law that every person appointed to any office of honor, trust, or profit must take before entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office. According to the testimony before the Committee on the Judiciary, I see nothing in that oath that Mr. Patterson cannot subscribe to except those two lines, "that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States." Now, sir, what are the admitted facts? Mr. Patterson himself very frankly and openly states the facts. They are stated, I believe, in the report. The facts are admitted unquestionably to be these: after Tennessee had adopted an ordinance of secession, her Legislature having adopted it and submitted it to the people, and it having been ratified by a large popular vote, while that State was completely under the control of persons in hostility to the Government of the United States, when troops were being raised throughout the State, while the very portion of it in which Mr. Patterson resided was overrun by armed forces and persons were being conscripted into the rebel ranks, in 1862 an election for judge of the judicial circuit came on; Mr. Patterson became a candidate for judge, and he was elected. How was that election held? It was under the authority of that State, which had adopted an ordinance of secession in hostility to the United States. It matters not that the constitution of Tennessee had not been changed; its government had been subverted; the enemies of the country had taken possession of it. He was elected to this office. After being elected, a commission was sent to him by Governor Harris, notoriously known to the country as the head of the rebel government of Tennessee. He received that commission. He took the commission and went before an officer of the law, and there he subscribed the oath that he would support the constitution of the State of Tennessee and the constitution of the confederate States of America.

Now, sir, I cannot vote that he has not accepted an office under a government or a pretended government in hostility to the United States. That is what this resolution declares when it says that he is qualified to take this oath. Can you say that, Senators, on your oaths? I bring you, my fellow-Senators, to the witness stand and put you upon oath, and ask you under the solemnity of the oath you have taken, will you swear that he has not accepted an office under a government in hostility to the United States? Can you swear that? As a juror, can you render that verdict?

But, sir, what further does the law say? "I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office." It is admitted that he did exercise the functions of judge under that government of Tennessee, which was in hostility to the Government of the United States. You all know that. He held courts. He himself administered this same oath to divers persons that they would support the constitution of the confederate States of America. Now, does his motive alter the fact that Mr. Patterson did this? It alters the grade of Mr. Patterson's act so far as the morality of it is concerned; but does it alter the fact that he exercised authority under a government in hostility to the Government of the United States? There is the fact. He did do it. He did it for the purpose of protecting the loyal men. He was a loyal man himself. I concede all that, and I should be most happy to welcome Mr. Patterson as a Senator here, according to the testimony before the committee. I should be most happy to receive him as one of our associates in this body if there were no law on the subject; but the law is here. We are acting under that law. I think this is a matter that can be submitted only as to him as to his motives.

I agree to the statement of facts. I presume the facts are stated correctly, all that are stated. Perhaps all are not given in this report; but I cannot vote for the resolution. What is the effect of voting for the resolution? That notwithstanding a man has done the act, that is, has accepted an office, has exercised the duties of an office under a government in hostility to the United States, yet if in doing that his motive was good you may dispense with the law. Have you any such dispensing power? You may repeal the law. You may strike out of this oath that single sentence; and then there would be no difficulty in voting that Mr. Patterson was entitled to his seat. I should be willing to dispense with that requirement in such a case as this; but the law, as I said, operates by general rules, and while it is the law we must observe it.

It may be said that it is submitted to him to take this oath, and not to us. Suppose it is submitted to him to take this oath and not to us to take this oath, what do we propose to do? The Committee on the Judiciary, through my friend from Vermont, have reported a resolution in which they propose to vote in advance that, without his taking the oath, before he has taken it, he is entitled to be qualified. Now, suppose Mr. Patterson should refuse to take this oath; suppose he should say, "I cannot take this oath; you have voted that I am qualified, but having accepted this office, having exercised the duties of it, I cannot subscribe the oath;" what is your position? You are in the position of having voted that he could do that which he himself decides that he cannot. I do not say that he will so decide. He is of opinion that he can take this oath. Let that be left to him. I cannot say that he can take it. I confess that I do not see, under my view of the law and of the reading of it, how, if I had done what it is admitted was done in this case—there is no doubt about the facts—I could take the oath.

This is a very important question, let me say to Senators; this is the precedent you are setting. If you say to-day that a person who has admittedly accepted an office and exercised the duties of it under a government in hostility to the United States may, notwithstanding, swear that he has not done that and be admitted because his motive and object in doing it was not to injure the United States, but really to benefit them, how would you keep Alexander H. Stephens or anybody else from being admitted? Stephens just before the rebellion broke out made a speech in which he deprecated it? He may come here and say "I was vice president in the rebel confederacy; I acted for four years as vice president; I did all I could to uphold it; I made speeches in favor of it," as we know that he did, in which he urged upon the southern people to unite together and fight the Union and establish their independence, that that was their only safety. Suppose he comes here and says, "I was really opposed to this thing, and I really did this for the purpose of protecting the Union." A queer way of doing it, it is true! In his case it would be very queer; but in the case under consideration testimony was submitted to the committee; we had the testimony of a witness before us, a colonel from Tennessee; and from the testimony which was submitted to us—and it was undisputed—I was satisfied that Mr. Patterson was a Union man at that time; that he wanted to preserve the Union; and that it was urged upon him to take the office for the purpose of protecting the Union men of that country, it being known that the majority of the people in that part of the State of Tennessee were Union people.

It is an embarrassing question; it is embarrassing to me, exceedingly so, I confess; and I have not seen very clearly how to dispose of the question. I confess that when a gentleman comes here who in fact in his heart has been a Union man all the time and has done what he could to protect Union men when he was in the midst of the secession country, when he exercised the duties of his office as far as he could for their protection, although he did exercise the duties of an office under the confederacy, although he himself administered the oath to support the confederacy to other persons, I feel strongly for him. But it seems to me if we receive such a person here in this way we do away with the oath and we bring into disrepute the very law which we have placed upon the statute-book; and I ask, have we authority to do that?

I submit the question, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned. I do not know that I shall say anything further in the case; and perhaps I should not have said this much if I had been able to agree to the majority report; and had it not been that we are in the very last of the session, when we are so overburdened with labors that I found it impracticable to do so, I should have written out my views and here presented them as the views of the minority of the committee in reference to this matter. As it is, not having been able to do that, I have endeavored briefly to present the view of it which occurs to me. If other Senators can see the case differently, if Mr. Patterson can be admitted to his seat, and they are satisfied and can see their way clear to vote that he is qualified under the circumstances, the fact of his being here will gratify me as much as any person, though I cannot myself see it in that light.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Illinois if it did not appear to his mind that the committee was quite satisfied that Mr. Patterson took the office and so far as he did hold it held it for the protection of the Union men and in hostility to the confederate government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was satisfied by the testimony before the committee that he did not use this office for the benefit of the confederate government, but rather that he accepted it at the instance of the Union men with a view of trying to protect them. I think the testimony shows that.

Mr. CLARK. There is no question, I think, about the facts. The great point to be ascertained is, whether this man is now and has been all along a Union man. I think there was not a doubt or a shadow of doubt in the mind of any person who heard him or who heard the testimony before the committee, that he had been throughout a Union man, not only a Union man, but such a Union man as would put some of us to shame that we should be admitted into the Senate because we were Union men and he should be put out. When I have laid on the ground by night, night after night, for my Unionism, I may claim something for it. When I have been arrested time and again for my Unionism, I may claim something for it. When my house has been guarded night after night by rebels to prevent my escape or to prevent me going to the aid of the Union people, I may claim something for my Unionism. When I have established or aided to establish an underground railroad miles through the enemy's country and have piloted men through that country and aided them to go into the Union Army to fight rebellion, then I may claim something for my Unionism. And all this has this man done upon whose case we are now passing.

What is the objection to him? Simply this: that in 1854 he was elected a judge of the circuit court in Tennessee, when that State was loyal; he held that office all the time as a Union man until that State seceded, resisting rebellion, resisting secession in every way that he could, still remaining a Union man; and that afterward, when the term of his office expired, when the eight years were out, he was again elected, by whom? By the Union people of East Tennessee against the rebels, for the protection of the Union people. To protect them he consented to hold the office. And is such a man to be refused admission to the Senate because he risked himself, he risked his life, he risked his family, he risked his property for the protection of Union men, when after he was elected and took the office he did no one act that ever can be proved, or as anybody pretends, to aid the rebellion, but held the office in opposition to rebellion, in opposition to secession, in hostility to the confederacy, claiming that he held it under the old State government, true to the Union, and in no other way?

Mr. President, the object of the oath is to prevent rebels and secessionists from coming into the Senate, not to exclude Union men like the Senator-elect from Tennessee; and if he can take the oath, as I understand him to say he can, because he did not hold that office under the rebel government, never claimed so to hold it, always said he rejected their authority and held it under the old State government for the protection of the Union men, I, for one, say that he is entitled to his seat. I will let him settle that question. I will pass upon his acts, upon the testimony of his being a Union man; and if I find him to be a Union man, and he says, "I have been so far a Union man that I can cheerfully take the oath," I am willing to give my vote that he shall take his seat.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. David T. Patterson is duly qualified and entitled to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to say one word on this subject. The immediate question before us is, if I understand it, the adoption of the resolution which has just been read, which declares that this gentleman is duly qualified to act as a Senator of the United States from the State of Tennessee. Whether he is duly qualified must depend among other things upon this: whether he has ever "attempted to exercise the functions of any office, whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States." It seems to me that there can be but one answer given to this question. It is in proof, if I understand the report properly, from the admissions of the applicant himself before the Judiciary Committee of this body, that after the State of Tennessee as a political community had passed a solemn ordinance of secession from the United States, after, as such community, she was engaged in a bloody rebellion against the United States, this gentleman was elected by a popular vote one of the circuit judges of the State of Tennessee; that a commission was made out for him by the Executive of the State and transmitted to him, and he was called upon to take an oath as one of the qualifications to the exercising of the functions of that judgeship, that he would support the constitution of the State of Tennessee and also the constitution of the confederate States of America. It is very true the report alleges that when the commission was transmitted to him, it was accompanied by a peremptory order of the Executive of Tennessee upon him to take this oath at once. I have yet to learn what authority the Executive of any State in this Union has or ever had to transmit a "peremptory order" to a person elected to an office, requiring or constraining him in any way to take the oath of office. I ask the honorable gentleman from Vermont, who made this report, what was to be the penalty of an omission on the part of Judge Patterson to take the oath required.

Mr. POLAND. He would probably have been hung.

Mr. HOWARD. He would probably have been hung, says the honorable Senator. I will not accept "probably" in such a case as this. I desire to know whether there was any law on the statute-book of Tennessee or anything in its constitution requiring Judge Patterson or any other judge thus elected to take the oath of office. No, sir; I apprehend, indeed, I can assert with confidence, that there was no such law. The Governor of the State had no authority whatever to make such a "peremptory order;" and so far as the evidence is concerned here, so far as it goes, it does not show that he was in the slightest peril at that moment; it does not show that he was under any species of duress, either by threats or actual imprisonment or constraint of any kind whatever. For aught that appears before us he took that oath as willingly, as intelligently, and as understandingly as he ever took any oath in his life, as much so as when we take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States as members of this body.

Mr. CLARK. Permit me to say it did not so appear to the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask the committee to state what was the danger under which he was laboring and what had he to stand in fear of.

Mr. CLARK. The rebel bayonets that were about him all the time.

Mr. HOWARD. Was there a military force of rebels there ready to enforce this pretended "peremptory order?"

Mr. CLARK. There was a rebel military force about him.

Mr. HOWARD. The committee say no such thing in their report. That is a most important item, let me say, if it be a fact that he was under the coercion of bayonets in case of a refusal. It is a most important fact to be stated in this report, and still the committee have omitted entirely to say anything about it.

But, sir, what I have said respecting the oath and the coercion has really nothing to do with the question now before the Senate. The resolution upon which we are called upon to vote declares that this gentleman is duly qualified to take his seat here. He was confessedly an officer of the State of Tennessee; Tennessee was a member of the rebel confederacy; it had its fifteen, its twenty, perhaps its thirty thousand men in the rebel ranks making war against the Government of the United States; it had its entire quota of representatives in the rebel congress; it had its two senators in the rebel congress; and to all intents and purposes the State of Tennessee was in hostility to the Government of the United States. Now, under what authority was it that this commission issued? Under the authority of Tennessee. Was it any other authority? No, sir; but the authority of Tennessee, and that authority alone, was the one under which he was required to act by that commission.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me at this time, as I find there may be a little objection to the form of the resolution, I will move to amend the committee's resolution.

Mr. HOWARD. I shall get through my remarks in a moment, and then I shall be very happy to oblige the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK. Very well.

Mr. HOWARD. It was that authority, and that alone, under which he accepted this judicial commission and under which he acted as a judicial officer; and the oath required by the act of 1862 declares that he shall not be a civil officer of the United States or a Senator or a Representative in Congress unless it be true, and he shall swear to that truth, that he had not exercised the functions of any office whatever under any authority in hostility to the United States. With such a state of facts before me, facts completely undisputed and indisputable, how can I vote upon this resolution that this gentleman is duly qualified, according to the oath of 1862 and the Constitution of the United States, to take his seat as a member of this body? However great may be my regard for this gentleman—and I certainly admire his course and his conduct as a Union man, so far as I am acquainted with it—I cannot, I will not, vote a lie upon my oath in this Senate.

Now, sir, as to the applicant himself, I certainly entertain in regard to him none but the most kindly feelings. I wish the facts were otherwise than they are. I should be very happy indeed to give my vote for his admission here; but I never can do that until the statute which I have read from and which I regard as obligatory upon my conscience here, shall be so modified as to enable me to vote truthfully upon this proposition. We made the law. Let us not be the first to break it. Let us at least every hazard to ourselves personally, and at whatever inconvenience to this excellent gentleman who is now before us, set an example to the country for whom and over whom we are legislating, that we will be the first to obey the injunctions of the law.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the resolution of the committee by striking out all after the word "resolved" and inserting—

That Hon. David T. Patterson, upon taking the oath required by the Constitution and laws, be admitted to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. SUMNER. I call for the yeas and nays. Mr. TRUMBULL. There is one way, I think, in which we probably might vote unanimously upon this matter, and probably settle it in an hour; and that would be this: we have passed a constitutional amendment and submitted it to the people, in which is reserved to Congress the right, by a two-thirds vote, to dispense with the requirements made in that constitutional amendment. Now, I should be willing, acting in the spirit of that—

Mr. JOHNSON and others. That is not adopted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We adopted it so far as Congress is concerned. I know it is not binding, and I did not mean to state it in that view; but I say, acting in the spirit of that, I would be willing—and I should think it would be much more agreeable to Mr. Patterson, though I do not know; I cannot speak for him—to adopt a joint resolution (I think we might adopt it unanimously, I trust we could,) declaring that these words, "I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted, to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority hostile to the United States," be suspended in the case of Mr. Patterson, elected a Senator from the State of Tennessee to the Senate of the United States, so that he might take the rest of the oath and be sworn in. That would preserve the law, and would do violence to no one. I presume the Senate would pass it unanimously. I do not know how others feel.

Mr. JOHNSON. The only objection to that is that you cannot get it through. There is not the slightest chance of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we can.

Mr. JOHNSON. A single objection in the other House would prevent its being considered.

Mr. POMEROY. Say that those words shall be omitted in taking the oath.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was preparing a resolution that these words be omitted from the oath required in the case of Hon. David T. Patterson.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then it goes to the President.

Mr. NYE. I do not suppose he would veto it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If both Houses pass it, I do not suppose there would be any hesitation in the President signing it. I make the suggestion whether that would not leave this case where we all desire. I desire as earnestly as the Senator from Maryland to see the gentleman from Tennessee, under the state of the case that was presented to the Committee on the Judiciary, admitted to his seat, but I cannot do it in violation of the law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise merely, not to take up the time of the Senate, but to concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois. I think it is the proper plan; and let us pass a resolution, now while the subject is up, and send it to the House of Representatives. Let us see if they will pass it anyhow; and if they do not then we can consider this matter again. We shall have lost nothing anyhow by taking an hour to consider it. I think we had better do that in order to relieve the Senator himself when he comes to take the oath. That is my opinion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have not the joint resolution quite prepared. If my suggestion meets the general view of the Senate the matter can be laid aside for a moment, and I will have the resolution prepared in five minutes.

THE METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. SUMNER. I will ask the Senate, by unanimous consent, to take up three different bills which have come from the House of Representatives, which it is important should be acted upon, and with regard to which I think there will be no discussion. I move, first, to take up House bill No. 596.

Mr. NYE. We have got a subject now under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to lay aside the matter under discussion informally, and proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. CLARK. What is the object?

Mr. SUMNER. The metric system. These bills have been reported from the select committee on that subject.

Mr. CLARK. Let us proceed with the matter before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to entertain the motion, another subject being before the Senate. Is there any objection?

Mr. WADE. I believe we can now take a vote on the bill which was pending when this privileged question came up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts cannot be considered.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not take a moment.

Mr. WADE. Well; go ahead with it.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire, first, to take up House bill No. 596, then House joint resolution No. 140, and then House bill No. 597. These are three measures, all belonging to the same system, and have been carefully considered by the special committee of the Senate on the metric system of weights and measures.

Mr. WADE. If they give rise to debate I shall object.

Mr. SUMNER. There will be no debate.

Mr. CLARK. What has become of the resolution with regard to Mr. Patterson?

Mr. CONNESS. I understand that the Senator from Illinois is preparing the joint resolution and will offer it in a moment.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to its being laid aside informally for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it will be laid aside informally.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 596) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures. It provides that from and after its passage it shall be lawful throughout the United States of America to employ the weights and measures of the metric system; and no contract or dealing or pleading in any court is to be deemed invalid or liable to objection because the weights or measures expressed or referred to therein are weights or measures of the metric system. The tables in the annexed schedule are to be recognized in the constant action of contracts, and in all legal proceedings, as establishing, in terms of the weights and measures now in use in the United States, the equivalents of the weights and measures expressed therein in terms of the metric system; and the tables may be lawfully used for computing, determining, and expressing in customary weights and measures the weights and measures of the metric system.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, at another time I might be induced to go into this question at some length; but now, in these latter days of a weary session, and under these heats, I feel that I must be brief. And yet I could not pardon myself if I did not undertake, even at this time, to present a plain and simple account of the great change which is now proposed.

There is something captivating in the idea of one system of weights and measures, which shall be common to all the civilized world; so that, at least in this particular, the confusion of Babel may be overcome. Kindred to this is the idea of one system of money. And both of these ideas are, perhaps, the forerunners of that grander idea of one language for all the civilized world. Philosophy does not despair of the fulfillment of this aspiration at some distant day; but a common system of weights and measures and a common system of money are already within the sphere of actual legislation. The work has already begun, and it cannot cease until this great object is accomplished.

If the United States seem to come tardily into the circle of nations, recognizing a common system of weights and measures, I confess that I have pleasure in calling attention to the historic fact that, at a very early day, this important subject was commended to Congress. Washington in his message to the First Congress touched the key-note when he used the word "uniformity" in connection with this subject. "Uniformity," he said, "in the currency, weights, and measures of the United States is an object of great importance, and will, I am persuaded, be attended to." Then again in his message to the next Congress he went further in expressing a desire for a "standard at once invariable and universal." In these words he foreshadowed a system that should be common to the civilized world. It is for us now to recognize the standard which he thus sententiously described. All hail to a standard "invariable and universal."

I shall not occupy your time in developing the history of these efforts on the part of our Government. But I cannot forbear mentioning that Mr. Jefferson, while Secretary of State, made an elaborate report, in which he proposed to reduce "every branch to the same decimal ratio already established in coins, and thus bring the calculation of the principal affairs of life within the arithmetic of every man who can multiply and divide plain numbers." Here is an essential element in that common system which we seek to establish. This was in 1790, while France was just beginning those efforts which ended at last in the establishment of the metric system. The subject was revived at different times in Congress without definite result. President Madison, in his annual message of 1816, called attention to it in the following words:

"The great utility of a standard fixed in its nature and founded on the easy rule of decimal proportions is sufficiently obvious. It led the Government at an early stage to preparatory steps for introducing it; and a completion of the work will be a just title to the public gratitude."

Out of this recommendation originated that call of the Senate which drew forth the masterly report of John Quincy Adams on the whole subject of weights and measures, where learning, philosophy, and prophetic aspiration vie with each other. After reviewing all that had appeared in the past, and subjecting it all to a careful examination, he says of the metric system of France, which was then only an experiment:

"This system approaches to the ideal perfection of uniformity applied to weights and measures, and whether destined to succeed or doomed to fail will shed unfading glory upon the age in which it was conceived and upon the nation by which its execution was attempted and has been in part achieved."

This was in 1821, when the metric system, already invented, was still struggling for adoption in France.

This brief sketch will show how from the beginning our Government has been looking to a system which shall be common to the civilized world. And now this aspiration seems about to be fulfilled. The bills before you, which have already passed the other House, if they become a law, will be the practical commencement of the "new order."

Before proceeding to explain the proposed system, consider for one moment the necessity of a change, as illustrated by an historic glimpse at weights and measures.

Language is, of course, coeval with man as a social being. Weights and measures are hardly less early in their origin. They are essential to the operations of society, and are naturally common to all who belong to the same social circle. At the beginning each people had a system of its own; but as nations gradually intermingle and distant places are brought together by the attractions of commerce, the system of one nation becomes inadequate to the necessities of the composite body. A common system becomes important, just in proportion to the community of interests among different nations. Next to the diversity of languages, the discordant systems of weights and measures attest the insulation of nations.

The earliest measures were naturally derived from the several parts of the human body. Such was the cubit, which was the distance between the elbow and the end of the middle finger, being about twenty-two inches. Such also, were the foot, the hand, the span, the nail, and the thumb. These measures were derived from nature, and they were to be found wherever a human being existed. But they partook of the uncertainty in the proportions of the human form. When Selden, in his Table-Talk, wittily likened equity, so far as it depended on the conscience of the chancellor, to a measure which was determined by the length of the chancellor's foot, he exposed not only the uncertainty of equity, but also the uncertainty of such a measure.

Even in Greece, where art prevailed in the most beautiful forms, the famous stadium was none the less uncertain. It was the distance that Hercules could run without taking breath, which, divided by 600, gave the Grecian foot.

Our own standards, derived from England, are of an equally fanciful character. The unit of length is the barleycorn, taken from the middle of the ear and well dried. Three of these in a straight line make an inch. The unit of weight is a grain of wheat taken, like the barleycorn, from the middle of the ear and well dried. Of these, thirty-two are equal to a pennyweight. Twenty pennyweights make an ounce, and twelve ounces make a pound. The unit of capacity is derived from the weight of grains of wheat. Eight pounds of these make one gallon of wine measure.

Nor is the extreme vagueness and instability of these standards the only matter of surprise. There is no principle of science or convenience in the progression of the different series. Thus we have two pints to a quart, three scruples to a dram, four quarts to a gallon, five quarters to an ell, five and a half yards to a perch, six feet to a fathom, eight furlongs to a mile, twelve inches to a foot, sixteen ounces to a pound, twenty units to a score.

Then, as if the only ruling principle which governed the selection was variety, we have different measures bearing the same name, such as the wine pint and the dry pint, the ounce Troy and the ounce avoirdupois. Take these two last measures as illustrating the prevailing confusion. They both seem to come from France. The Troy weight is supposed to derive its name from the French town of Troyes, where a celebrated fair was once held. The term avoirdupois is French, and seems to have been part of a statute which declared how weights should be determined. But Troy and avoirdupois are different measures.

These measures, having constant differences, had accidental differences also, in different parts of England, and also in different parts of our own country. Even where the names are alike the measures are often unlike. In England the diversity was almost infinite, so that these same measures differed in different counties, and sometimes in different towns of the same county. Latterly in the United States the standard has been regulated by law, but the confusion from the measures still continues. The question naturally arises why such confusion has been allowed to continue so long without correction. The answer is easy. The triumphs of science are slow and gradual. Traditional prejudices must be overcome. Each nation is attached to its own imperfect system, as to its own language. Even though inferior to another system, it has the great advantage of being already known to the people that use it. To this constant impediment it is only proper to add the intrinsic difficulty of establishing a uniform system of weights and measures which shall satisfy the demands of civilization in scientific precision, in immediate practical applicability, and in nomenclature.

Take, for instance, the application of the decimal system, which seems at first sight simple and complete. It is unquestionably an immense improvement on the old confusion; but even here we encounter a difficulty in the circumstance, long since recognized by mathematicians, that our scale of decimal arithmetic is more the child of chance than of philosophy. It has been arbitrarily adopted simply because man has everywhere reckoned by his ten fingers. On this account it has been often called "natural." But on considering whether the number ten possesses any intrinsic excellence, convenience, or fitness as a ratio of progression, we shall be obliged to answer in the negative. It is the duplication of an odd number which can furnish, neither a square or a cube, and which cannot be halved without departing from the decimal scale. In this scale we seem to see always those early days when "wild in woods the noble savage ran," and for his arithmetic used his fingers or his toes. An octaval system, founded on the number eight, would have been better adapted to the divisions of material things. Among us the decimal system is adopted for money; but you all know that we are not able to carry it into rigid practice. Thus convenience, if not necessity, requires the half dollar, the quarter dollar, the half dime, and the three-cent piece. In fact, eight divisions to the dollar, as prevailed in Spain, are available in the business of life, more than the decimal division. The number eight is capable of an indefinite bisection. The progression beginning with 2 would proceed to 4, 8, 16, 32, 64, and so on.

The decimal scale is made easy of use by the happy system of notation borrowed from the Hindoos, which might be applied equally well to an octaval scale. But, at this time, it would be vain to propose a change in the radix of the numerical scale. The number ten is the recognized starting point, and gives its name to the scale. It only remains for us at present to follow other nations in applying it to an improved system of weights and measures.

A system of weights and measures, born of philosophy rather than of chance, is what we now seek. To this end old systems must be abandoned. A chance system cannot be universal. Science is universal. Therefore, what is produced by science may find a home everywhere. If we consider the proper elements or characteristics of such a system we shall find at least three essential conditions. First, the new system must have in itself the assurance of unvarying stability, and, to this end, it should be derived from some standard in nature by which any errors creeping into the weights and measures from time or imperfect manufacture may be corrected. Secondly, the parts should be divided decimally, as nearly as practice will warrant, in conformity with our arithmetic. Thirdly, it should be of such a character as to disturb national prejudices as little as possible.

To a common observer the difficulties of finding an unvarying standard are not readily apparent; but philosophy shows that all things in nature are undergoing a constant change, so that there would seem to be no invariable magnitude, the same in all countries and in all times, as Cicero described the great principles of Natural Law, by which a lost standard on an inaccessible island might be reproduced with mathematical certainty. There is but one magnitude in nature, which, so far as we know, approximates to these requisites. I refer, of course, to the length of the pendulum, vibrating seconds, which in our latitude is about 39.1 inches. This length, however, varies in traveling from the equator to the pole, and it also varies slightly under different meridians and the same latitude; but the law of variation has been determined with considerable accuracy. One element in this variation is the difference of temperature. Mr. Jefferson, in his report on weights and measures, proposed that we should find our standard in the pendulum. At the same time the French Government, just struggling to throw off ancestral institutions, conceived the idea of a new system of weights and measures which, founded in science, should be common to the civilized world.

The French began not only by discarding all old systems, but also by discarding a measure derived from the pendulum. They conceived the idea of measuring an arc of the meridian of the earth, and finding a new unit in a subdivision of this immense span. At the same time the National Assembly invited the co-operation of other nations, so that the system should become universal. The work proceeded. An arc of the meridian, embracing upward of nine degrees of latitude, and extending from Dunkirk, in France, to the Mediterranean near Barcelona, in Spain, was measured with the most scientific care. Some of the most illustrious names in French science were engaged in it, of whom I may mention Mechain, Delambre, Biot, and Arago, the latter just beginning his great career. The work proceeded, notwithstanding domestic convulsion and foreign war. The reign of terror at home and invasion from abroad did not arrest it. Ten years elapsed before the measurements were completed, when again other nations were invited to coöperate in the establishment of the new system.

The unit of measure adopted was one ten millionth part of the distance between the equator and the pole thus measured. It received the name of metre, from the Greek, signifying measure. A bar of platinum was carefully prepared representing this length with all possible accuracy. This bar was deposited in the archives of France as the perpetual standard. Other bars have been copied from it and distributed throughout France and in foreign countries.

There is something transcendental in the idea of this measurement of the earth in order to find a measure for daily life. It was an immense undertaking. But the conception seems to have been rather vast than practical. There is reason to believe, from later labors, that there was a serious error in the work. Thus the distance of 10,000,000 metres from the equator to the pole, established by the French observers, is too small by 935 yards, according to Bessel; by 1,410 yards, according to Puissant; and by 1,967 according to Chazallon. Sir John Herschell has also testified with the authority of his great name against the accuracy of this result. If there be an error, such as is supposed, then the meter ceases to be what it was originally called, one ten millionth part of the distance from the equator to the pole.

Even assuming that there is no error, and that the meter is precisely what it purports to be, yet it is not easy to see how the artificial standard can be corrected by a recurrence to the standard in nature. The massive work originally undertaken will not be repeated. The astronomers of France will not verify the accuracy of the bar of platinum which is the artificial standard, by another scientific enterprise, requiring years for its completion. Therefore, for all practical purposes the meter is really nothing else than a bar of platinum of a certain length preserved in the archives of France. It is not less arbitrary as a standard than the yard or foot, and it can be perpetuated in practice only by the distribution of exact copies of the original bar, which is the assumed meter.

I have entered into this explanation of the origin and character of the meter because I desire that the admirable system which is founded on it should be seen actually as it is. To my mind it gains nothing from the theory which presided at its origin. Its unit is not to be regarded as a certain portion of the distance between the equator and the pole, but as an artificial measure determined with peculiar care. Had the same or any other measure been selected, without any measurement of the earth, the metric system would not have been less beautiful or perfect.

Look now at the system. The meter, which is assumed to be one ten millionth part of the distance from the equator to the poles, is, in fact, 39½ inches or 39.37 inches in length. It is especially the unit of length, but it is also the unit from which all measures of weight and capacity, square or cubic, are derived. It is at once foundation-stone and cap-stone to the whole system. It is foundation-stone to all in the ascending series and cap-stone to all in the descending series.

The unit of measures of surface or land measures is the are, from the Latin area, and is the square of ten meters, or, in other words, a square of which each side is ten meters in length.

The unit of solid measure is the stere, from the Greek, and is the cube of a meter, or, in other words, a solid mass one meter long, one meter broad, and one meter high.

The unit of liquid measure is the liter, from the Greek, and is the cube of the tenth part of the meter, which is the decimeter, or, in other words, it is a vessel, where by interior measurement each side and the bottom are square decimeters.

The unit of weight is the gram, also derived from the Greek, and is the one thousandth part of the weight of a cubic liter of distilled water at its greatest density—this being just above the freezing point.

Such are the main elements of the metric system. But each of these has its multiple and its subdivisions. It is multiplied decimally upward and divided decimally downward. The multiples are derived from the Greek. Thus, deca, ten; hecto, hundred; kilo, thousand; and myria, ten thousand, prefixed to meter signify ten meters, one hundred meters, one thousand meters, and ten thousand meters. The subdivisions are derived from the Latin.

Thus deci, centi, milli, prefixed to meter, signify one tenth, one hundredth, and one thousandth of a meter. All this will appear in the following table:

Metric denominations and values.	Equivalents in denominations in use.
Myriameter, 10,000 meters.	6,2137 miles.
Kilometer, 1,000 meters.	.62137 mile, or 3,280 feet and 10 inches.
Hectometer, 100 meters.	328 feet and 1 inch.
Decameter, 10 meters.	39.37 inches.
METER, 1 meter.	39.37 inches.
Decimeter, 1-10 of a meter.	3.937 inches.
Centimeter, 1-100 of a meter.	.3937 inch.
Millimeter, 1-1000 of a meter.	.0394 inch.

These same prefixes may be applied in ascending and descending scales to the are, the liter, and the gram. Thus, for example, we have in the ascending scale, decagram, hectogram, kilogram, and myriagram; and in the descending scale, decigram, centigram, milligram.

In this brief space you behold the whole metric system of weights and measures. What a contrast to the anterior confusion! A boy at school can master the metric system in an afternoon. Months, if not years, are required to store away the perplexities, incongruities, and inconsistencies of the existing weights and measures; and then memory must often fail in reproducing them. The mystery of compound arithmetic is essential in the calculations which they require. All this is done away by the decimal progression, so that the first four rules of arithmetic are ample for the pupil.

If we look closely at the metric system we must confess its simplicity and symmetry. Like every creation of science, it is according to rule. Master the rule and you master the system. On this account it may be acquired by the young with comparative facility, and when once acquired it may be used with dispatch. Thus it becomes labor-saving and time-saving. I cannot hesitate to mention among its merits the nomenclature which it has adopted. A superficial criticism has objected to the Greek and Latin prefixes; but this forgets that a system intended for universal adoption must discard all local or national terms. The prefixes employed are equally intelligible in all countries. They are no more French than English or German. They are in their nature common or cosmopolitan. And in all countries they are equally suggestive in disclosing the denomination of the measure. They combine the peculiar advantages of a universal name and a definition. The name instantly suggests the measure with exquisite precision. If these words seem to be scholastic or pedantic you must bear this for the sake of their universality and defining power.

Unquestionably it is difficult for a generation to substitute a new system for that which it learned in childhood. Even in France the metric system was tardily adopted. Napoleon himself on one occasion, said impatiently to an engineer who answered his inquiry in meters—"What are meters? Tell me in toises." It was only in 1840 that the system was definitely required in the transaction of business. Since then it has been the legal system of France. Cloth is sold by the meter. Roods are measured by the kilometer. Meat is sold by the kilogram, or as it is familiarly abridged, by so many kilos.

It is generally admitted that the names are too long, although nobody has been able to suggest substitutes, unless we regard the various abridgments in that light. But no abridgment should be allowed to sacrifice that cosmopolitan character which belongs to the system. Thus in England a nomenclature has been proposed which would secure short names; but these names would be different in each language and would be entirely different from the French names. This is a mistake. The names in all languages should be identical, or so nearly alike as to be recognized at once. This may be accomplished by an abbreviated nomenclature.

For instance, we may say met, ar, lit, and gram; and, in describing the denomination, we may say in the ascending scale, dec, hec, kil, and in the descending scale dec, cen, and mil, indicating respectively 10, 100, 1000, and 1-10, 1-100, and 1-1000. Compounding these words we should have, for example, kilmet, killit, kilgram, and cenmet, centit, cengram. These abbreviations might be substantially the same in all languages. They would preserve the characteristics of the unabridged terms, so that the simple mention of the measure, even in this abridged form, would disclose the proportion which it bears to its fellow-measures. Previous measures have been represented by monosyllables; as grain, dram, gross, ounce, pound, stone, ton. Where a word is often repeated in the hurry of business it is instinctively abridged. We shall not err if we profit by this experience, and seek to reduce the new nomenclature to its smallest proportions.

Twelve words are all that are required by this system. In learning these you learn all. There are the five words designating the different units of length, surface, solid capacity, liquid capacity, and weight. Then there are the seven prefixes, being four in the ascending scale, expressing multiples or augmentations of the meter or other units, derived from the Greek; and also three in the descending scale, expressing divisions or diminutions of the meter and other units, derived from the Latin. These twelve words contain the whole system.

In closing this chapter of the unquestionable advantages of the metric system, I must not forget that it is already the received system in the majority of countries. Thus it appeared at the Statistical Congress assembled at Berlin in 1863, that it was adopted partly or entirely in Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Belgium, France, Hamburg, Hanover, Hesse, Mecklenburg, the Netherlands, Parma, Portugal, Saxony, Sardinia, Spain, Switzerland, Tuscany, the Two Sicilies, and Wurtemberg. Since then Great Britain, by an act of Parliament, has added her name to this list. The first step is taken there by making the metric system permissive, as is now proposed in the bills before Congress. The example of Great Britain is of especial importance to us, since the commercial relations between the two countries render it essential that there should be a common system of weights and measures.

The adoption of the metric system by the United States will go far to complete that circle by which this great improvement will be assured to mankind. Here is a new element of civilization which will be felt in all the concerns of life at home and abroad. It will be hardly less important than the Arabic numerals, by which the operations of arithmetic are rendered common to all nations. It will help undo that primeval confusion of which the Tower of Babel was the representative.

As the first practical step to this great end I ask the Senate to give its sanction to the bills which have already passed the other House, and which I have reported from the special committee on the metric system. By these enactments the metric system will be presented to the American people, and will become an approved instrument of commerce. It will not be forced into use, but will be left for the present to its own intrinsic merits. Meanwhile it must be taught in schools. Our arithmetics must explain it. They who have already passed a certain period of life may not adopt it; but the rising generation will embrace it and ever afterwards number it among the choicest possessions of an advanced civilization.

Mr. CRESWELL. Does the bill make the use of the system compulsory?

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no; it makes it permissive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move to take up House joint resolution No. 140.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State, to be delivered to the Governor thereof, one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system for the use of the States respectively.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUMNER. I now ask to take up House bill No. 597.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grams. It directs the Postmaster General to furnish to the post offices exchanging mails with foreign countries, and to such other offices as he shall think expedient, postal balances denominated in grams of the metric system; and, until otherwise provided by law, one half ounce avoirdupois is to be deemed and taken for postal purposes as the equivalent of fifteen grams of the metric weights and so adopted in progression; and the rates of postage are to be applied accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 812) for the relief of John W. Taylor, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) to pay Colonel Lewis F. Fix, reported it without amendment.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have now prepared the joint resolution that I desire to submit; and as it ought to go over to the House at once, and I presume there will be no objection to it, I ask for its immediate consideration. As I have written it, I will read it with the permission of the Senate:

Be it resolved, &c., That the words "that I have neither sought nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States" in the oath required by the "act to prescribe an oath of office and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862, be omitted from the oath required to be taken by Hon. David T. Patterson, a Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Senate will adopt that amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The phraseology might be mistaken. It ought to specify that this omission from the oath required to be taken is "in the case of."

Mr. TRUMBULL. The clerk can put in those words, "in the case of."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Those words ought to be put in so as to confine it to this particular case.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] has presented the same subject in a little different form, which he prefers and to which I have no objection, and I will offer it in that shape. It is as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That Hon. David T. Patterson, a Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, be admitted to his seat upon taking the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and upon taking so much of the oath prescribed by the act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862, as is not included in the following words, to wit: "that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States."

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 144) in relation to the admission of Hon. David T. Patterson to a seat in the Senate was read three times.

Mr. WADE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GRIMES] is absent by reason of sickness to-day.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 2; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, and Wade—2.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Howard, McDougall, Morrill, Ross, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, and Wright—13.

So the joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL HOOPER of Massachusetts, Mr. JOHN L. THOMAS of Maryland, and Mr. GLENNI W. SCOFIELD of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 814) for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire at Portland, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan has withdrawn his objection to the passage of the bill for the distribution of the rewards to the captors of the assassins of Mr. Lincoln, and I hope my colleague will allow that bill to be taken up.

Mr. CRESWELL. I renew the objection.

Mr. WADE. I object to anything being done, unless it is in order to do it, until a vote is taken on the admission of Nebraska. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and let us vote upon it. I object to anything displacing it unless it is a privileged question, which I cannot resist.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The pending question, I believe, is on my motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending question, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been requested, but not, as yet, ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADE. This question is a question of recommitment, and every Senator who is in favor of the admission of Nebraska will vote against this motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is a question to recommit with instructions to investigate the charge of fraud which has been pretty substantially proven here to-day. Those in favor of passing it, fraud or no fraud, adopting the analogy of the gentleman's address, will vote against the proposition to recommit.

Mr. NYE. I desire to say a single word before that question is taken. I pledge myself to be very brief. I disagree entirely with the honorable Senator from Indiana, who asserts with so much assurance that there has been presented here any evidence of fraud in this election. It is somewhat singular that the class of Senators who yesterday were so anxious to bring in a Senator from Tennessee for the reason that the State wanted representation, and who so loudly claimed that the accusation that the Senator then seeking immediate admission was unable to take oath, rested upon rumor, and rumor alone—and the Senator from Indiana was particularly severe upon that question—to-day, it being a different ox that hooks, assume that these rumors in regard to frauds in the election in Nebraska are well founded, and the Senator from Indiana tells us that the charges are well substantiated. Sir, I am at a loss to know why these objections are urged here against the admission of these new States. I cannot understand why States that come here with virgin robes, States upon whose skirts hang none of the fumes or fragrance of rebellion, should be thus criticised, thus analyzed, thus animadverted upon, before they can be admitted into this Union.

Mr. COWAN. How old is she? She is not eighteen yet.

Mr. NYE. My friend from Pennsylvania inquires how old is she. She has not seen many years as yet, but she will improve in that respect. To-day while this nation is in travail with the birth of a State, my friends from Pennsylvania and Wisconsin and Indiana are trying to prevent it. Sir, this question of the admission of new States into this Union is not a new one by any means. It is as old as the original thirteen States; and no event in our history has been hailed with more joy and gladness than the birth of a new State and the setting of a new star in the galaxy of our Union.

Now, sir, the real objection—and I desire to state it in a few words—to the admission of this State is that she has been guilty of sending here loyal men, men who have borne the burden in the heat of the day of this rebellion, men who have been scarred in the conflict. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] says they can be of no use here because we are within so few hours of an adjournment. Sir, who knows what hour there may be a call for an extra session of this Congress? Who knows but what upon the votes of these men may hang the destinies of this Republic? And yet we are gravely told by the complaisant and always quiet Senator from Pennsylvania that we are within so many hours of the close of the session with as much meekness, for which quality he is always famous, as though the close of this session was the end of this Republic. I expect that the great business of this Republic will roll on after this Senate has adjourned and after we are all dead.

But we are told by the Senator from Indiana that there are evidences of fraud. After he made his assertion I stepped back to the sofa behind me and talked with Judge Kellogg, who was the canvasser of these votes, and he says it was never claimed, and that by but one man, that more than nineteen soldiers voted; that only nineteen soldiers ever claimed to vote, and upon that there was contradictory testimony; and that the nineteen who did vote said they had taken up their residence in the Territory of Nebraska and were going to continue to reside there and do reside there. Where is the evidence of fraud? The Senator from Indiana says the majority is not large enough. Sir, a majority of one, under our institutions, is just as potent as a majority of one hundred thousand.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not like to interrupt a very elegant passage, but as the Senator is going off on to something that is very fine, I want to say to him that I did not say what he understands me to have said.

Mr. NYE. I understood the Senator to say distinctly (without any reference to fine passages) that this majority was very small, not large enough to be emphatic, in substance. Does the Senator deny that he said that?

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator undertakes to answer an argument he should answer it exactly as it was stated. I said that the reported majority of one hundred ought not to control our action here when there is an avowal of fraud; that if the charge of fraud extended to a small vote and the majority reported was large, then it would be a different case.

Mr. NYE. I submit that I have done the Senator no wrong.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not say that a majority of one vote would not be sufficient if it was established.

Mr. NYE. I have done the Senator no wrong, but I accept his amendment. I say to him in reply that a majority of one hundred is no more evidence of fraud than a majority of ten thousand. The presumption is the other way. Now, sir, I noticed on the admission of the State of Colorado, or the attempt to admit her, that these same arguments were used. We were told that the population was small and that they were not entitled even to a Representative. Sir, one thing should be borne in mind of Nebraska. To-day one of the most important works of this nation, which is progressing with wonderful rapidity, is peopling that State as Pennsylvania was never peopled; I mean in point of numbers and rapidity; and the great interest surrounding that great work, the Pacific railroad, requires at the hands of every one of us that protection which can only be given by State laws. I have had some experience both in a Territory and in a State, and as I said upon the question of admitting Colorado the laws of a Territory are insufficient to give protection in detail to the vast interests surrounding such a work.

Mr. President, the Democrats have learned to speak of Lincoln now with kindly words and express sentiments of deep sympathy at his taking off. The State which I have the honor in part to represent came into this Union under the very same law that Nebraska seeks to come in under now; she had in her constitution the same provision in regard to white voting that there is in this; and yet, sir, that great and good man hastened to admit her, and hailed her admission as an accession of some account in the then condition of the country. He not only admitted her but hastened to admit her by telegraph, and that State was in that way, and under the same law that this State seeks admission under, born into this Union and inaugurated. I should be recreant to the interests of others that had the same permission if I did not advocate the admission of Nebraska.

Now, sir, it is a well-known fact that the State of Nebraska, agricultural as she is stated to be by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BUCKALEW], is filling up with wonderful rapidity; a great national work goes through her entire borders from one end of the State to the other; and while we are legislating and before the next session of Congress convenes, that work will have reached the borders of Nebraska and penetrated into Colorado.

Mr. President, I must confess my astonishment that gentlemen on the other side who are struggling by every means to bring into this Chamber States of questionable loyalty—no, sir, not States of questionable loyalty, but States whose disloyalty is as undoubted now as it was the day they were in arms—that men moved by the great democratic principles that they profess to be moved by, should attempt to keep out the new States that are knocking at our doors for admission. I said on the admission of Colorado that the necessities of this day demanded that there should be a row of States across this continent in order to protect the great works that are now being constructed. I repeat it now. It is the necessity of the hour; it is the necessity of the time; and he who studies closely the logic of the times will see that I am correct.

My friend from Massachusetts said that he regretted his friend from Ohio could not rise to the magnitude of this question. My friend from Massachusetts will excuse me for saying that I regret that he cannot rise to the magnitude and importance of this event. I regret that in his argument and in his action he cannot let go of that old anchorage of his, upon which he has rode out so many storms, and ride upon safer anchorage in a State regularly admitted into the Union, instead of an irregular, inefficient territorial organization. He says the word "white" is in this constitution. So it is. So it was in the constitution of the State of Nevada, and yet the lamented Lincoln hesitated not a moment to admit her. The Senator says that it is not republican. Upon that question I take issue with him. It may not be, in the fullest sense, republican; but it is republican in the sense in which every State since the original thirteen has been admitted into this Union.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Except Vermont.

Mr. NYE. I am willing to except Vermont.

She votes against the admission of all these States; and I am not certain but that if the original question was up on the admission of Vermont, more perplexing questions might arise. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the honorable Senator will give way, I should like to move an executive session. It is necessary to have one. There are important nominations which should be referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. NYE. I am not going to occupy more than a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If we can have a vote, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Wisconsin had all last night to himself to fix up executive matters. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Too much to myself, I admit; but it is necessary that this business should be attended to if we expect to adjourn to-day.

Mr. NYE. Sir, the necessities of the question under consideration are not overshadowed by the necessities of the appointment of any man to office. It is a question of whether a new State shall be born into this Union; and I submit that that question is far higher and greater than the question of who shall be postmaster at Chicopee or anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, any evil that could result from the word "white" has been cured to a great extent by the civil rights bill. That bill has clothed every man with citizenship; and I agree with what was said when that civil rights bill was under consideration by the Senator from Delaware, now absent, [Mr. SAULSBURY], that the judge was yet living who would declare under it that every born citizen of this country had a right to vote. I repeat it, sir, that when that civil rights bill was passed it did away with all quibbles upon this word "white," and the man who is clothed in the habiliments of citizenship will yet be declared by the highest judicial tribunal of this country entitled to cast his vote if we never legislate another bill about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean in spite of this constitution, if it is adopted?

Mr. NYE. Yes, sir; I mean in spite of all constitutions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are in favor, then, of admitting a State with a constitution which is unconstitutional in itself, if I may use such an expression.

Mr. NYE. Does that follow?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say it does.

Mr. NYE. I think it does not. I do not so understand it, with all respect for the legal hair-splitting of my distinguished friend. Let me say in answer to the gentleman, who seems to sit down so satisfied with his inquiry to me, that the constitution of the State of Nevada provides that United States Senators shall be elected on a certain day and in a certain manner in the State of Nevada. Yesterday a bill was passed through both Houses of Congress prescribing the manner in which United States Senators shall be elected in all the States. Will the Senator from Vermont tell me whether that law will prevail in Nevada or the provision of the State constitution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will tell the Senator with great satisfaction. The Constitution of the United States confers express power upon this Congress to override all State constitutions and laws by an express grant of power on that very point. Therefore anything contained in the constitution of Nevada or any other State does not touch the question when we come to act upon it. I think that is perfectly plain to anybody.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator for his very truthful admission—I knew it before he told me—that the laws of Congress override State constitutions and laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Constitution.

Mr. NYE. Certainly. I concede to that; and so I concede and assert the other thing, that when the Supreme Court of the United States declares under the Constitution that every citizen is clothed with the right of the ballot, that overrides your State laws and constitutions; and I should like to see the Senator split upon that. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the rock on which I have split.

Mr. NYE. Now, Mr. President, if Senators around me had left me alone, I should have been through long ago; but my conscientious friend from Massachusetts, I am terribly afraid, mistakes twinges of dyspepsia for constitutional scruples. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. I never had the dyspepsia in my life.

Mr. NYE. I am glad to hear it; it is some other disease then. [Laughter.] This word "white" is the nightmare of his mind; but even his own State—a State that I honor and respect—does not let all the black people vote, nor all the white people either. It requires them to be able to read and write. My friend, being so learned, thinks that the standard of manhood. Sir, to all this squeamishness I object in toto. I can well account for the opposition coming from the other side. They do not want two Republican Senators here. If Nebraska had sent two of a different color, they would have viewed this case altogether differently. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] would not have made a labored argument against the admission of Nebraska if she had sent here two Senators to support "my policy." Sir, these doubts and these objections that are raised rest upon two things that I do not acknowledge. The one on the other side rests in a political idea, not a principle; the one on this side from a conscientious scrupulousness that ought not to exist. It would take the magnifying power of the strongest microscope on earth to scrape up a conscience so fine as should scruple on this question.

Mr. President, I insist upon it that this vote shall not be postponed, but that it shall be taken now. Every man who desires to broaden the base of this Republic, to set new stars in the national galaxy, youthful, vigorous, that have come through this war purged in the very fires of purification, should vote to admit these States; and I will say to my Democratic friends on the other side that just as fast as they will bring men here with loyal principles, backed by a loyal constituency, I will vote to take back the rebellious States though their sins be as red as scarlet.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me that the proposition of the Senator from Indiana is entirely reasonable. He has given us a glimpse of at least a possible fraud in the votes by which this Territory undertook to change itself into a State, and the excellent chairman of our committee, when interrogated on the subject, had no positive information which he could give in reply. Under the circumstances, therefore, I think we ought to send this again to the committee that the committee may give us the information which the chairman was not able to give.

But there is one point in this matter to which I have not heard attention called, and on which I should like light from the chairman of the committee. I do not understand how the constitution of Nebraska comes before us now. Has it been communicated to us by any message of the President? Has the President invited our consideration of this question? It will be remembered that the question of Colorado came before us on a special message from the President transmitting the constitution and inviting for it the consideration of Congress.

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him—

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly; I should like to have information on that point.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The President also communicated officially information in connection with his message. He gave us the particulars of the proceeding and explained how the constitution came to be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. In the case of Colorado?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. But we have no information from the Executive in the case of Nebraska. It is on that that I make my appeal to the chairman of the committee. We all know that the case of Colorado was initiated in this body on a special message of the President communicating to us the constitution and also setting forth the circumstances attending the adoption of the constitution. From that we expressly learned how the constitution was adopted. We saw the flaw in the proceedings. We had them all before us; and it was then that the Senate entered into a consideration of them. Now, we had no such information with regard to Nebraska. I should like to know how these papers come before us. What evidence have we on this subject? Certainly there is none that has been laid before us officially. The chairman of the committee may have papers in his drawer. He may have received by the mail communications possibly from the Governor or from other persons; but there has been no official communication made to the Senate on the subject. There is nothing official on which to base these proceedings; and yet, in the absence of anything of that nature, we are asked to drive post-haste this bill through the Senate in this last day of the session, when the honorable chairman himself is not possessed of all the information with reference to the character of this election.

There is another circumstance which, it seems to me, is an unanswerable argument for the reference of this question to a committee. I wish a committee—it may be that of the Senator from Ohio—but I wish a committee to take this whole subject into most careful consideration, to look into this question of fraud, to report to us positively the number of votes cast, the majority, and the circumstances attending the election, and otherwise to give us official information on the whole subject. At present we have no official information. All this, it seems to me, is an unanswerable argument for the reference.

Mr. WADE. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, because I know very well where all the opposition comes from, and I know very well why it comes from the quarter that it does. The Senator from Massachusetts has a certain one idea that covers the whole ground. He says the papers are not official. I will not say that the Senator is not honest in the opposition that he makes to this measure. All the opposition that he really has to it is because they put the word "white" in their constitution. If they had not done that the papers might have been official or unofficial and he would have been as strong an advocate for it as I am; but that being his real objection, he runs around into the circuit of imagination to see if he cannot drum up something as a make-weight against the admission of this State. He says we have not sufficient information; there is some terrible mystery brooding over it. Sir, I never expect to have the information that will enable me to answer all that the imagination of the enemies of this measure can conjure up. You have nothing impeaching these proceedings—not the first thing.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. Gibbs.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Gibbs has been to see me since he was spoken of, and he tells me he has ever been the strongest advocate for the admission of this State, and he says he told the Senator from Wisconsin, who averred so affirmatively, and pledged his honor for the affirmation, that he only stated what he did say upon hearsay; that he was not a party to it at all; that he only picked it up as other gentlemen pick up their rumors; and the Senator from Wisconsin pledged his honor upon that! That man was not sought by me, but he sought me and gave information that I could go on and detail to the Senate; and yet I am challenged upon it and upon all the stuff that gentlemen can conjure up here in opposition to this measure.

We are not informed, says the Senator from Massachusetts. What are we not informed of?

I have no information about what gentlemen's imaginations may conjure up with regard to fraud. I aver there is no proof of any fraud, not even a reasonable suspicion of fraud; and the man who would disparage the character of a dog upon the information or the rumors that are invoked here would not be worthy to sit in a judgment seat anywhere. What do you base it on? You say there is no information about this. What information to the contrary do you suppose you have? Tell me where you will get it. Why do you want to send to a committee the mere breath of man, that may be blown away? and the men seek me to blow it away. I do not know who they are. You pledge your honor that the facts that you state are facts, and then your witness sends for me to tell me that he picked them up himself from rumor, and that he is the advocate of the admission of the State, and believes it to be all right. Sir, that is the sort of stuff that I have had to combat here, that has been invoked to overcome the testimony which has been regarded in the whole history of this Government as all-sufficient for the admission of a State: the certified facts of the officers of the Government in charge of these records; and that is to be blown away, not by the people of Nebraska, for I challenge, in my turn, the gentlemen to come forward and say that any man who has any interest in this question ever alleged a single word in opposition to what I seek, the admission of this State. No, sir; your rumors come from the outside, and they are poured into the ears of gentlemen from other States, who volunteer here to be the guardians of the people of Nebraska. They have not asked you to be their guardians. No man stands here from Nebraska to oppose this measure; but the opposition comes from distant Indiana and from Wisconsin and some other places that the Nebraska people never heard of, and these rumors are dug up to prevent our doing what a majority there want to have done. That is all the substance there is in all that you have said. Why, then, should it be sent again before a committee? Sir, it is a mere figment of the imagination, the stuff that dreams are made of, and nothing else.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Ohio, in his present remarks and in his remarks on a former occasion, seemed to speak of the gentleman upon whose authority I made my statement as if he were a gentleman from Utah. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. WADE. His name was Gibbs, was it not?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. His name was Gibbs. He has lived in Nebraska since 1854. He was Speaker of the House in Nebraska in 1857. It is true he was appointed marshal of the Territory of Utah by Mr. Lincoln, but his term has expired, and he has returned and now resides in Nebraska, at Nebraska City, and knows all about the facts; and I say to the honorable Senator that he is a reliable gentleman.

Mr. WADE. I am not impeaching Mr. Gibbs at all. I believe he told me the truth when he said that the people of Nebraska were in favor of this measure, and that he had also been an advocate for it himself, and was now. He told me so to-day. He hunted me out to tell me so. I did not know him before. You invoke him as a witness against this admission, that it is all tainted with fraud, and you pledge your honor that the facts you state are facts, when he says to me that he picked them up from other sources!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The gentleman for whom I pledged my honor was a captain of one of the companies of the first Nebraska regiment, who stated to me that two of the companies of that regiment were raised in Iowa, and the soldiers of those companies voted in favor of this constitution while they were in the Territory of Nebraska; that those same soldiers voted, on a commission from Iowa, for Governor Stone at Fort Kearney, in Nebraska; that subsequent to this voting they have been mustered out and have gone home to Iowa where they reside. I say that for his statement, stated to me upon his own knowledge, I do vouch for his honor as a man and a soldier.

Mr. WADE. I am not going to impeach the honor of any gentleman's testimony as introduced here, because I know nothing of him. I only know that I am treading in an illegitimate path when I even attempt to repel before this enlightened Senate such insinuations. I know this Senate is composed of legal gentlemen who know how much weight to attach to these rumors, coming generally from sources interested or without any authority at all. I know you will attach no importance to them, and I feel that I am trespassing upon the indulgence of the Senate while I stand here to repel such charges. I know there is not a Senator here who will act upon the mere insinuation that there is fraud.

But the Senator from Massachusetts, says that the documents to which I appealed are all illegitimate because they do not come through that most loved source of his, the President of the United States. If they had only come through that pure fountain, he would have been satisfied in a moment; he never would have got up from his seat nor raised his voice; but he says, why on earth, if this thing is pure and legitimate, did it not come from the President of the United States? Then I would have been satisfied. Sir, pure as he is, he had no business with this matter at all. They sent to the chairman of the Committee on Territories a certified transcript of their proceedings and I presented it to the Senate, and the Senate referred it to our committee. Is not that authentic? Do you want the President to back it?

Mr. SUMNER. I would rather have your backing than his.

Mr. WADE. Well, sir, you have my backing, but you dispute that. Now, sir, I have said enough. The people of Nebraska do not ask nor need the counsel of gentlemen from other States. With all the power in their hands to detect fraud, with all the power to protest before this body that they are not satisfied with the votes cast, not a single man from Nebraska has made his protest upon this record.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Upon this point, which the Senator has so often repeated, that I am volunteering to be the counsel of the people of Nebraska, I have only to say that I stand here as a Senator representing one of the States of the United States, and I suppose that the United States and all the States have an interest in the question as to whom we admit into the Union, and whether we shall admit additional representatives into this Chamber to take part in our deliberations. We have just as much interest in the question as they have, and I have a right to speak as a Senator upon it.

Mr. POMEROY, (to Mr. WADE.) Let us vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN, (in his seat.) WADE has made five speeches on this subject already.

Mr. WADE. Well, sir, I have been challenged with five hundred as groundless as they are numerous. I have not grumbled at other people, and I have not occupied one hour in this Senate where other gentlemen have occupied days. I have had strong convictions upon a great many questions that have passed through here on the records and been voted upon, and I have waited to hear the intelligent arguments of gentlemen a great while when I have had strong convictions that those arguments, perhaps, were not as well founded as they ought to be, but I generally contented myself with voting, as the Senator from Maine knows. I am very rarely provoked or moved to do anything more than attest my sense of any question by the vote that I give; but on this question I have been met from all sides with the merest rumors and figments of the imagination thrown in here against the stubborn facts that have been sent to us as the foundation of our action, and I would have been recreant to the people of Nebraska if I had not stood forth to vindicate their character against this imputation of fraud without evidence. The people of Nebraska ask no such advocacy as the Senator from Wisconsin has offered, and I therefore say that the gentleman is a volunteer, because this is partly at least a mere local question; and although he has a right to vote upon it and a right to argue it, he has no right to bring in mere rumors unsupported by fact in order to postpone these people from participating in this Government when it is their interest to do so. Now, sir, I do hope that we shall have a vote.

Several SENATORS. Question! question!

Mr. WILSON. If Senators are ready to vote I will not insist upon it; but, otherwise, I want to take up a little Army resolution that should be acted upon at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories, with instructions to inquire into the number of the population of the Territory and the fairness of the vote adopting the constitution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Fowler, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Nye, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Grimes, Morrill, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, and Wright—10.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I send an amendment to the Chair to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to take up a little resolution in regard to the Army, which it is important should pass. I do not see any prospect of getting rid of this question, and I have been waiting for two hours to call up the resolution.

Mr. WADE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made the resolution cannot be entertained. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to add at the end of section two the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect except upon the fundamental condition that within the State there shall be no denial of the elective franchise or of any other right on account of color or race; but all persons shall be equal before the law; and the people of the Territory shall by a majority of the voters therein, at such place and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Governor thereof, declare their assent to this fundamental condition; and the Governor shall transmit to the President of the United States an authentic statement of such assent whenever the same shall be given, upon the receipt whereof, he shall, by proclamation, announce the fact; whereupon, without any further proceedings on the part of Congress, this act shall take effect.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 5, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Edmunds, Fessenden, Morgan, Poland, and Sumner—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Howe, Morrill, Saulsbury, and Wright—11.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Fowler, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Riddle, and Sumner—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Grimes, Morrill, Saulsbury, and Wright—8.

So the bill was passed.

RELIEF OF PORTLAND SUFFERERS.

The bill (H. R. No. 814) for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire at Portland, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have that bill taken up and acted upon now. It is very short, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all goods, wares, and merchandise, which may be sent from places without the limits of the United States as gratuitous contributions to the relief of the sufferers by the fire which occurred at Portland, Maine, July 4, 1866, shall, when imported at the port of Portland, and consigned to the proper authority for distribution, be admitted free of duty. It also provides that there shall be allowed and paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, on all materials actually used in buildings erected on the ground burned over by the fire, a drawback of the imported duties paid on them, if the materials shall be imported at the port of Portland during the term of one year from and after July 5, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUTY ON IMPORTED WOOL.

The bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE and others. Let it lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be laid on the table if there be no objection.

STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up House joint resolution No 197. It is a little matter that will take no time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is that?

Mr. HENDRICKS. The title of it is "A joint resolution authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln."

Mr. FESSENDEN. As this is the last day of the session, and we shall probably have to stay here all night, I hope we shall have a recess, and the time has now arrived for that purpose.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the resolution named by the Senator from Indiana will not be taken up.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to call up a resolution in regard to the Army, and have it passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My motion is to take up House joint resolution No. 197.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is undoubtedly a matter that will be pretty thoroughly debated, and if gentlemen are willing to stay here and lose their dinners in order to debate it, very well.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope it will not be taken up. Can the motion be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order.

Mr. SUMNER. I will ask if it has been referred to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it has not been.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senate will decide the question by a vote. They can do it in that way as well as in any other.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Indiana so as to take up a resolution relating to the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not in order. The motion is not to postpone pending business to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and therefore the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in order, in the opinion of the Chair. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 20, noes 7.

RECESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the Senator to allow me to have an executive session for about five minutes, so that the messages that have been received can be referred to the appropriate committees, and then this will come up in order.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to—ayes nine, noes not counted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now renew my motion to take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 18, noes 17; and the Presiding Officer declared the motion agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You cannot have the yeas and nays after the vote is declared.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They were called for in time, if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. CRESWELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The vote had been declared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is in order for the Senator to call for the yeas and nays if he chooses to do so, but the vote had been declared. Does the Senator ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CRESWELL. I do.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wilcox, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cresswell, Davis, Hendricks, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Ross, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Yates—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Grimes, Johnson, Morrill, Saulsbury, and Wright—10.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

PROMOTION OF WOUNDED NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. GRIMES] has been obliged to leave on account of illness, and he has asked me to report back for him from that committee, and to call up House bill No. 667, to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes, which I am sure will meet the assent of every Senator. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CONNESS. There is unfinished business.

Mr. ANTHONY. This will take but a moment. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. CONNESS. With the understanding that the unfinished business shall lie over informally, I will not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is all I ask; that it be laid aside informally to take up this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside by common consent instead of losing its place, if there be no objection. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider House bill No. 667. It provides that the provision of section four of the act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862, requiring that no officer in the naval service shall be promoted to a higher grade upon the active list until he has been examined by a board of naval surgeons and pronounced physically qualified to perform all his duties at sea, shall not be construed to apply to and exclude from the promotion to which he would otherwise be regularly entitled any officer in whose case such medical board shall report that his physical disqualification was occasioned by wounds received in the line of his duty, and that such wounds do not incapacitate him for other duties in the grade to which he shall be promoted. The rate of pay of officers of the Navy on the retired list and not on duty nor retired on furlough pay, in cases where such rate of pay has not heretofore been fixed by law, is to be one-half of the pay to which such officers would be entitled if on duty at sea. The pay of clerks of navy-yards, of clerks to commandants of navy-yards, and of clerks to naval store-keepers is increased twenty-five per cent. upon their present salaries, from the commencement of the present fiscal year. The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized in the settlement of the accounts of the disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine corps to allow, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, such credits for losses of property and funds as have occurred during the late rebellion and as shall occur hereafter, and which shall appear to them by such vouchers and testimony as they shall require to have been occasioned by accidental circumstances, or a condition of things over which the officers had no control and for which they are not justly responsible.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, it was Ordered, That Augustus Hubbell have leave to withdraw his petition and other papers from the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a resolution extending the present session of Congress until half past four o'clock on Saturday, July 28, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes; and had agreed to other amendments of the Senate, with amendments, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, Mr. JAMES F. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. F. C. LE BLOND, of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, and the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill; and

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conference on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed

Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. FESSENDEN, and Mr. JOHNSON managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT BALDWIN.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 693) for the relief of Robert Baldwin, have directed me to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you ask for its present consideration?

Mr. POMEROY. I did not, but I will now do so.

Mr. WILSON. I have several reports and bills from the Committee on Military Affairs that I want a few minutes to act upon; and I would be very much obliged to the Senate if they would give me a few minutes now.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have unanimous consent to pass the bill I reported just now.

Mr. WILSON. I have got several measures which it is important to act upon.

Mr. POMEROY. The bill to which I refer merely proposes to issue a patent for a few land-warrants which were lost in the mail.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are general bills which it is very important to pass before we adjourn, and we ought to devote our time to those.

Mr. HENDERSON, [to Mr. POMEROY.] Let it be passed over for a few moments.

Mr. POMEROY. I do this at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, who feels a deep interest in the bill. The land-warrants were lost in the mail, and it is merely proposed to allow patents to issue.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desired to call up the bill, as it is of some little importance to a constituent of mine, but if gentlemen desire it I have no objection to its going over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

DR. ALEXANDER DUNBAR.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar, to report it back without amendment; and I should like to have it put on its passage. It is important to act upon it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of War to contract, on such terms as in his discretion he may think fair and reasonable, with Dr. Alexander Dunbar, for the use by the Government of his alleged discovery of a mode of treatment of the diseases of the horse's foot, and for his services for one year in instructing the farriers of the Army in such treatment; the amount agreed upon to be paid out of the fund already appropriated for the purchase of horses or general support of the Army.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO MILITIA CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred House joint resolution No. 200, to report it back without amendment; and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865. The Secretary of War is authorized by the joint resolution to settle with the proper authorities of the Territory of Colorado, for the services of the first regiment of Colorado mounted militia, called into the service of the United States on the requisition of Colonel Thomas Moonlight, in the year 1865, and for the services of any other militia forces of the Territory which were employed in the service of the United States on the call of the Governor of the Territory in the year 1864, allowing in such settlement all amounts paid by the Territory to the troops for pay, use of horses, clothing, and other proper allowances during the time when they were actually in service; and that he report the amount found to be justly due to the Territory on such account to Congress in December next.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION TO MAIMED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WILSON. I wish now to call up the bill (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to furnish to discharged soldiers of the United States, who have been disabled in the service, as well as to those not yet discharged, transportation to and from their homes and the place where they may be required to go to obtain artificial limbs provided for them under authority of law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THIRTEENTH-COLORED HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 201) for the relief of the officers of the thirteenth regiment United States colored heavy artillery, to report it back and move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, it having been incorporated into a general law.

The committee was discharged, and the joint resolution indefinitely postponed.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to state that there is a vacancy on the committee of conference on the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, in consequence of the absence of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Morrill.] I move that the Chair supply the vacancy.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Howe.

UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 142.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 142) respecting the Army of the United States. It declares all laws and parts of laws enacted since the 4th of July, 1861, increasing, reorganizing, or creating regiments, staff corps, or other organizations of the regular Army, or in any way affecting the number, rank, pay, or emoluments of the general, field, staff, and line officers and enlisted men, to be in full force and effect, and so to remain until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts what effect this brief but very important measure will have upon the pay and emoluments of officers. The purport of it is to continue in full force all the laws that have been passed by Congress since July, 1861, up to the present time.

Mr. WILSON. All the laws that are now in force. Of course it does not refer to those that have been repealed or modified.

Mr. HOWARD. My inquiry has direct reference to the pay of the officers of the Army. Has not that pay from time to time been altered in amount?

Mr. WILSON. If we had a law that paid them so much, and then passed a law fixing another price, of course the last one is the rule and not the other. This resolution refers to all existing laws. Those old laws are not existing laws.

Mr. HOWARD. Of course every subsequent act that is inconsistent with the previous act repeals or modifies the previous act. I am well aware of that. What, then, is the necessity of this enactment?

Mr. WILSON. I will tell the Senator what the necessity is.

Mr. HOWARD. That is what I want to know.

Mr. WILSON. Every staff department, I think, of the Army goes to pieces, unless we have some legislation on the subject—the Army itself, the Bureau of Military Justice, the Engineer corps, &c. We passed several laws enlarging these departments of the Army, to expire at the close of the war; and what we wish to do now is simply to preserve the Army just as it is in case we can have no general legislation, to preserve the body of the Army and the laws now in force until the next session of Congress.

Mr. CONNESS. The Army bill failing.

Mr. WILSON. If we pass the Army bill this will not be necessary; but if not, we want to take care of what we have got, and we must do it.

Mr. HOWARD. I am perfectly satisfied with that explanation, and it was that explanation that I desired.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Military Committee that his resolution, as he has drawn it, may have a much more extended operation than he explains as being desirable. It does not simply continue in force existing laws, but it gives force to all the laws, if I understand the reading of it, that we have enacted since 1861—all laws and parts of laws, whether they have been repealed heretofore or not.

Mr. WILSON. No. The resolution is simply this: all laws passed since the 4th of July, 1861, that are now in force are to be continued for a few months longer, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The words "now in force" are not in the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. If that is so I have no objection to putting them in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is very manifest that if the Senator from Massachusetts intends what he says he has got here a resolution that is very much broader. During the war we vested the President with very large authority; we increased the staff of the general officers very largely. Now, what is this resolution?

That all laws and parts of laws enacted since the 4th day of July, 1861, increasing, reorganizing, or creating regiments, staff corps, or other organizations of the regular Army, or in any way affecting the number, rank, pay, or emoluments of the general, field, staff, and line officers, and enlisted men of the same, be, and the same are hereby, declared to be in full force and effect, and so to remain until otherwise provided by law.

It reenacts every law passed since 1861. It reenacts the laws authorizing the calling out of hundreds of thousands of men. It is not a provision that the laws now in force shall be continued; it is a provision reviving all the acts that have been repealed. Certainly such a proposition as this ought not to pass.

Mr. CONNESS. The insertion of three or four words will correct it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know if this joint resolution which we are amending here in the Senate has been considered in committee.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir, it has been examined by the members of the committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly such a resolution as this reenacts every act that has been passed during the whole of this war in relation to the Army; and I should like to know if the Senate of the United States is prepared to do that.

Mr. CONNESS. In the fourth line of the resolution, after "1861," I move to insert the words "and now in force;" so that it will read:

That all laws and parts of laws enacted since the 4th day of July, 1861, and now in force, increasing, reorganizing, or creating regiments, &c.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If that amendment be inserted the laws which have expired or been repealed will not be reenacted, I suppose; but still this is a very unsafe way of legislating. It seems to me it would be a great deal better to state the laws, whatever they are, that should be continued in force; and if the Senator from Massachusetts cannot do that, then we are passing a law without knowing what we are doing. Now, I appeal to Senators, do you understand what you are reenacting?

Mr. LANE. I think I do.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The members of the Military Committee may; I do not. I should like, then, to inquire if under this resolution the authority now continues for the President of the United States to establish military courts and military commissions, and the authority to create new regiments, to reorganize the Army, to create staff corps. This is all specified here:

All laws and parts of laws enacted since the 4th day of July, 1861, increasing, reorganizing, or creating regiments, &c.

What laws have we had increasing regiments since 1861? I do not know what they are.

Mr. WILSON. We are now legislating, not for volunteers, but for the regular Army. These laws apply only to the regular Army.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then say so. The resolution does not say so.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is mistaken. We are legislating about the regular Army, and not for the volunteers.

Mr. LANE. Certainly it does say the regular Army.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir, it does not say "the regular Army." There is nothing of that kind in the resolution. It applies to the volunteers, and everything else.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is greatly mistaken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us read it. There is no use in disputing about words. The resolution is before me, and I propose to read it. [After a pause.] On reading it through, I see in the sixth line that it is limited to the "organizations of the regular Army." Those words escaped me as I first cast my eye over the resolution. Then it does not apply to the volunteer organizations, and, of course, is not so extensive as I supposed it might be; but still I do not know what the effect of it will be.

Mr. WILSON. The Senate have passed a bill covering every part of our Army, the staff, and everything else, and which corrects all this legislation, and puts it all right; but it has not passed the House of Representatives. If the Senate would like to pass that bill in lieu of the House bill, and send it to the House again—we have already passed it twice—I should be very glad to do it, and let us see whether they will take it in lieu of this. In that bill everything is set forth, every department, staff—

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the bill for the reorganization of the Army, I understand?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. We have not succeeded in passing it. This resolution is gotten up to keep the Army from going to pieces; for as soon as peace is declared, nearly every staff corps of the Army is changed by law. We legislated during the war increasing the staff corps, and providing for other matters pertaining to the Army, until the war was over. Peace has not been officially declared, and therefore they are held together; but it is important to pass this resolution. With two or three little amendments that I have, and which are absolutely necessary, I should like to have the resolution passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say a word about this resolution. It is quite evident that the Senator from Illinois did not know what he was speaking about, and he got himself unnecessarily alarmed about an imaginary difficulty. Now, the fact is that by several acts of Congress the Army has been greatly enlarged during the war. Nine regiments of infantry have been added to it, a regiment of artillery, and a regiment of cavalry. The provision of law is that these regiments shall cease to exist at the termination of the war.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator if he is not mistaken on that very point.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly not.

Mr. HOWE. My recollection is different.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly not. Unless there is some legislation the Army will go to pieces at the end of the war; it will be broken up. Now, we have failed to pass an Army bill. A committee of conference laboring at that matter have reported that they are unable to agree. We are about to adjourn. If we do adjourn these nine regiments of infantry, the regiment of artillery, the regiment of cavalry, and the staff corps must be discharged at the end of the war. I suppose it is to terminate very soon. The object of this resolution—and with the little amendment proposed by the Senator from California that object is accomplished—is to continue the existing laws in relation to the Army until we can meet again and pass an Army bill. That will be effected, undoubtedly, by this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to insert in line four the words "and now in force."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move further to amend the resolution by adding the following as additional sections:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That there shall be added to the Army four regiments of cavalry, two of which shall be composed of colored men, having the same organization as is now provided by law for cavalry regiments. And the original vacancies in the grades of first and second lieutenant shall be filled by selection from among the officers and soldiers of volunteers; and two thirds of the original vacancies in each of the grades above that of first lieutenant shall be filled by selection from among the officers of volunteers, and one third from officers of the regular Army, all of whom shall have served two years in the field during the war and have been distinguished for capacity and good conduct. And the President is hereby authorized to enlist and employ in the Territories and Indian country a force of Indians not to exceed one thousand to act as scouts, who shall receive the pay and allowances of cavalry soldiers, and be discharged whenever the necessity for their further employment is abated, or at the discretion of the department commander.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That section three of the act approved February 20, 1863, authorizing the appointment of a Solicitor of the War Department be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the Provost Marshal General's office and bureau shall be continued only so long as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days after the passage of this resolution.

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1866," shall continue in force for one year from the passage of this resolution: Provided, That no officer who is furnished with quarters in kind shall be entitled to receive the increased commutation of rations hereby authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. CLARK. I submit the following report from the second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, and I ask that it may be acted upon now, so that it may go to the House and the matter be closed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line nine, page 1, of the engrossed bill, strike out "$250" and insert in lieu thereof "three dollars," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their seventh amendment and agree to the ninth section of the bill with the following amendments: in line two of said section strike out the word "imported," and in the same line, after the word "merchandise," insert the following words: "hereafter imported," and at the end of said ninth section add the following words: "Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to long-combing or carpet wools, costing twelve cents or less per pound, unless the charges so added shall carry the cost above twelve cents per pound, in which case one cent per pound duty shall be added," and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their eighth amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line two of said amendment strike out the words "and directed;" and in line three, after the words "collection in" insert the words "any of," and the Senate agree to the same.

DANIEL CLARK,

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

E. D. MORGAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. K. MOOREHEAD,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,

C. DELANO,

Managers on the part of the House.

The committee recommend that the text of the bill be amended by striking out the word "first," in line one, page 1 of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "tenth."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference just read.

The report was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That closes the question upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, but the committee recommend a change in the text of the bill. The proposed change will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee recommend that the text of the bill be amended by striking out the word "first," in line one, page 1 of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "tenth."

Mr. JOHNSON. How will that change it?

Mr. CLARK. The effect of that is merely to put off the operation of the law until the 10th instead of the 1st. We have got so near the 1st that the committee thought we had better put it off a little longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on thus amending the text of the bill. Is there any objection to this change? It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate, in the opinion of the Chair, to make the change in the text of the bill. No objection being made, it will be understood as the unanimous will of the Senate that that alteration be made in the text of the bill.

STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WILSON. I desire now to take up—

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will now allow me to call up the unfinished business. It will occupy but a moment.

Mr. WILSON. Very well.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the unfinished business which was laid over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California calls for the unfinished business which was laid aside by common consent, and it must be taken up unless common consent is still given to its being laid aside. The unfinished business is before the Senate, being the joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. SUMNER. Before that is taken up, I wish, with the consent of the Senator, that I might be allowed to put a joint resolution on its passage.

Mr. CONNESS. This will only occupy a moment.

Mr. SUMNER. It will be debated.

Mr. CONNESS. Not if you do not debate it.

Mr. SUMNER. It must be debated.

Mr. CONNESS. Will you debate it?

Mr. SUMNER. I shall debate it.

Mr. CONNESS. Let the Senator debate it now. I shall not give way in that case.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to put a joint resolution upon its passage that will take no time.

Mr. CONNESS. That is asking too much.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask my friend from California to give way for a moment to allow me to call up—

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot give way to the Senator, after having refused another Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to contract with Miss Vinnie Ream for a life-size model and statue of the late President Abraham Lincoln, to be executed by her at a price not exceeding $10,000; one half payable on completion of the model in plaster, and the remaining half on completion of the statue in marble to his acceptance.

Mr. LANE. I move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution for the purpose of taking up the pension bills that have passed the House of Representatives. I think it quite as important to provide for the widows and orphans of our dead heroes as it is to provide for a statue of President Lincoln. Under proper circumstances I might vote for this appropriation; but I cannot consent to have it taken up, so far as my vote is concerned, to the exclusion of the bills that have already passed the House granting pensions to the widows and orphans of our dead soldiers.

Mr. CONNESS. This is a House resolution.

Mr. LANE. The bills I desire to have taken up are House bills.

Mr. CONNESS. There is time enough to pass those bills. I hope we shall get a vote on this resolution as we have now got it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, there are on your table half a dozen or more bills from the House of Representatives, some of which I have personal knowledge about, providing for pensions to the widows and orphans of your deceased officers and soldiers, where it is known that those widows and orphans are in absolute want, suffering for the common necessities of life; and the question now is, whether we shall jeopardize the passage of such bills, the passage of which we owe as a matter of justice and duty as high as any that can be imposed on man, to provide for a work of art. What is the immense necessity of hurrying this against all other things? I do hope that the Senate will return to its reason long enough to do justice before it provides for the gratification of its tastes.

Mr. CONNESS. We can have a vote on this resolution while this question is being discussed. It will not stand in the way of the pension bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It will be discussed very considerably before you pass it.

Mr. SUMNER. I am for pensions for those who have suffered for our country. Let us go forward and do justice to them before we undertake to appropriate $10,000 for a statue. I should say that if the appropriation was for a known work of art; but it is not proposed now to pay for any known work of art. We are to commission an unknown artist, of possible merit, but who has given no assurance that she can produce a work worthy of so large a sum as it is proposed to appropriate. However, I shall not now, at this stage of the question, discuss it in that aspect. If the question is proceeded with, I shall have something further to say; but I hope that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I dislike to see the antagonism of the Senators from Vermont and Massachusetts to this measure placed in what seems to me so unfair a light. They appeal to the Senate not to lay aside the pension bills for the benefit of the soldiers to consider a work of art. Nobody proposes to do it; but what is proposed to be done? The Senator from Massachusetts threatens to lay aside the pension bills by making speeches on this subject. The question is, will the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Massachusetts allow us to take a vote on this resolution? If they had done so, it would have been disposed of long ago; but the Senator from Massachusetts threatens that he will make speeches—for what? To delay the soldier from getting his pension.

Mr. SUMNER. No.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then let the Senator forbear and let us act. Vote down the proposition, if you choose. We could have voted a dozen times while these two Senators have been appealing to the Senate not to delay the soldiers' claims in order to press this matter. In other words, they say to the Senate, "Unless you take up the bills that we desire to have taken up we will postpone soldiers and everybody else by making speeches." That is all there is of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We might have passed two or three pension bills while we have been listening to the sweet eloquence of the Senator from Illinois. Now he is desirous of taking a vote. I have not attempted or threatened to occupy any time on the measure which he has so much at heart—this statute; but the Senator from Illinois is desirous of taking a vote to see which of these two measures shall first be proceeded with. I propose to give him the opportunity, and on this motion to proceed with the pension bills I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNESS. All right; let us have the yeas and nays, and I hope that the Senators, if they fail in this vote, will allow us to go on and do business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the pension bills named by the Senator from Indiana, and on this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. POMEROY. He did not name any particular bills.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. As this is to be regarded as a test vote, I hope the resolution will not be postponed.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Edmunds, Fessenden, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Fowler, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Stewart, Trumbull, and Williams—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Grimes, Hendricks, McDougall, Morrill, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Wade, Wright, and Yates—13.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grams;

A bill (H. R. No. 759) to authorize the refunding of certain taxes;

A bill (H. R. No. 809) to further regulate the printing of public documents, and the purchase of paper for the public printing;

A bill (H. R. No. 810) amendatory of section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865;

A bill (H. R. No. 814) for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire at Portland; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system.

CAIRO AND FULTON RAILROAD.

Mr. POMEROY. Before proceeding with the pension bills, I desire to call up the amendments of the House of Representatives to a Senate bill which now lies on the desk, with a view of concurring in those amendments.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 223) to extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way, and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the amendments, as follows:

Add to section one:
Provided, That all mineral lands within the limits of this grant and the grant made in section two of this act are hereby reserved to the United States: And provided further, That all property and troops of the United States shall at all times be transported over said railroad and branches at the cost, charge, and expense of the company or corporation owning or operating said road and branches, respectively, when so required by the Government of the United States.

In section two, line eight, strike out the words "selected" and "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the words "granted" and "five."

In the same section, line fifteen, page 2, strike out all after the word "railroad" to the end of the section and insert the following:

And provided further, That the lands embraced in the grant, and the grant revived by section one of this act, shall be disposed of only as follows: whenever proof shall be furnished satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior that any section of ten consecutive miles of said road and branches is completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, the said Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents for all the lands granted as aforesaid, not exceeding ten sections per mile situate opposite to and within the limits of twenty miles of the section of said road and branches thus completed; and when like proof shall be furnished that another section of ten miles of said road in said States or of the said branches, respectively, connecting with the preceding section, is completed, as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents in like manner as in case of the first completed sections; and so on from time to time until the whole is completed as herein provided, when the Secretary of the Interior shall issue patents for all the remaining lands herein granted, not exceeding the aggregate amount provided for, and located as required by sections one and two of this act: And provided further, That if one section of twenty miles of each of said railroads and branches shall not be fully constructed and completed as a first-class railroad within three years from the time this act becomes a law, and at least one section of twenty miles on each of said roads and branches in each year thereafter, and the whole of said roads and branches within ten years from the time this act shall take effect, then, in either of said cases, all the lands granted or the grant of which is revived or extended by this act, and which at the time shall be unpatented to or for the benefit of the road or company making or suffering such failure, shall revert to the United States.

Add at the end of section three, the following:
Provided further, That the provisions of this act, so far as the same relate to the Memphis and Little Rock, and the Little Rock and Fort Smith branches of said road shall not take effect until the Secretary of the Interior shall make and file a certificate in his office and the office of the secretary of state of Arkansas, stating that the companies or corporations claiming the benefit of this act in behalf of said branches have reorganized their boards of directors in a lawful manner, and after such reorganization that they have respectively rescinded all acts, resolutions, or other proceedings transferring the lands, rights, or privileges of such corporations or companies to any convention, State, or authority recognizing, acting in concert with, or under the authority of the late so-called confederate States of America.

The amendments were concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before going on with the pension bills, I will ask the permission of the Senate to give me about fifteen minutes of its time to get rid of some bills belonging to the Committee on the Judiciary. I hope the Senate will allow me to do that. They are all House bills. I have had no opportunity to report them. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me to go on now, I will give way in fifteen minutes.

Mr. LANE. I have but a very few pension bills that I want to pass now, and I cannot give way to anything else.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator has got the floor; and as he will not yield I trust that I shall be able to bring up these bills after he has concluded.

WARD B. BURNETT.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Ward B. Burnett, which is accompanied by a report.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 418) for the relief of Ward B. Burnett was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that there be paid to Ward B. Burnett the sum of $540, being the balance of pension to which he was entitled, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from the 4th of March, 1863, to the 4th of March, 1866, and which was improperly retained from him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS COLGEN.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 794.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgen. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Francis Colgen, late a private in company B, twelfth regiment Wisconsin volunteers, upon the pension-rolls of the United States, at the same rate that is allowed to soldiers or seamen who have lost the sight of both eyes in the military or naval service of the United States, subject to the biennial examination prescribed in the general pension laws, to commence on the 15th of January, 1863, the date of his discharge from the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION M. BUXTON.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Marion M. Buxton.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Marion M. Buxton, widow of James H. Buxton, late an ensign in the United States Navy, on the pension-rolls, at the rate prescribed by law for officers of his rank; the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund. In case of her death or remarriage the pension is to go to the minor child or children of James H. Buxton, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL LUCAS.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 797.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 797) granting a pension to Daniel Lucas. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Daniel Lucas, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, formerly a private of company E, third United States infantry, on the roll of invalid pensions, and pay to him monthly such a sum as he may be entitled to under the limitations and restrictions regulating the payment of pensions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUINCY A. MAY.

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Quincy A. May, of company H, eighty-third regiment of Illinois volunteers, on the list of pensioners, and pay or cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CROSWELL.

On motion of Mr. LANE, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Croswell.

The amendment was to add at the end of the bill the words, "to be paid out of the naval pension fund."

Mr. LANE. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

• CHARLES M. POTT.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. There is one more pension bill. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 194.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay or cause to be paid to Charles M. Pott, late of company K, one hundred and seventy-ninth Pennsylvania militia, now on the pension-roll, the same pension provided for persons having lost one hand in the military service of the United States, as provided in section one of an act entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions," approved June 6, 1866.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the time, and passed.

INDIAN RELATIONS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Committee on Indian Affairs have directed me to report a resolution, and as it will take but a moment to explain it, I ask that it be put on its passage at the present time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not object. He cannot understand the object of the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall object. I have stood here day after day and have not been able to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary during the whole of this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks leave to make a report. He reports a resolution from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and asks its present consideration. Objection being made the resolution lies over.

COLONEL H. C. DE AHNA.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 150.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military services.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe this resolution has been before the Committee on Military Affairs, but I am not very well acquainted with it, and I beg to inquire of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island what the grounds of this claim are.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Simply that this officer has been in the service of the United States and has never been mustered out and has not received the pay to which he was entitled. He has exercised all the duties and responsibilities of a soldier; and this is a compromise with him in relation to the amount that he shall receive; for really, as the case stands, if he is not paid the year's salary that is proposed by this resolution, the Government might be liable to pay him up to the present moment, although he has really been in the service of the United States for some time.

Mr. HOWARD. What was his rank?

Mr. SPRAGUE. A colonel of infantry. He was regularly in the service and received pay as such and was under orders as such.

Mr. HOWARD. Where was he mustered in?

Mr. SPRAGUE. His services were in the western country, in St. Louis and elsewhere.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not profess to know much about the merits of this case; but I had rather formed an opinion that there was no great merit in the claim, and I shall therefore vote against it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection to the latter part of the resolution, which proposes to muster this person out of the service of the United States. I never knew he was in the service. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island how it was that this gentleman, if he was properly and regularly mustered into the service, did not draw his pay, or if he did not draw it, how is it that he does not now draw it without an act of Congress? If there is any defect in the muster, as is sometimes the case, the party who is improperly mustered in will be refused his pay by the paymaster; but I do not understand from the Senator that that is the case here. Hence I should like to know upon what ground it is based. Is it an imperfect muster in, or in what manner does it arise?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is a very long story. The committee of the House have published a report of eight or ten pages in relation to this case. It is simply this: Colonel De Ahna was sent to the Western department, commanded at that time by General Frémont, with a view of organizing a regiment, under a commission from Governor Morton, of the State of Indiana. He exercised those duties and received his pay for a year; but in consequence of some disobedience or supposed disobedience of orders and troubles growing out of his connection with that department, he was tried by a court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed from the service. He appealed from that decision to the General-in-Chief, then General Scott, at the War Department. That sentence was reversed, and he was ordered to report to the Western department and to be assigned to the position from which he had been removed. On his arrival at the department of the West he was informed that the name of his regiment had been changed and he could not be assigned to his command. He then returned to the Department at Washington and received an order to report and to be assigned to the regiment, however it was named, or whoever was in command of it. On his reporting again to the Western department he was informed that that regiment had been mustered out of the service. He then requested permission to report himself to Washington to be assigned to active service. The President of the United States then nominated him for the position of brigadier general in the Army; but in consequence of there being already in service many brigadiers over and above the number provided by law, he was, with a large number of others, dropped, or the Senate refused to confirm him. In both cases the Senate refused to confirm him because of the action of the military department of the West. I have examined this case myself. I was somewhat of the same opinion with the Senator from Michigan for some time; but the more I have investigated it, the more I am convinced of the policy and propriety of the claim being allowed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARY PHELPS.

Mr. NESMITH. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri, to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered at the present time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Am I entitled to the floor?

Mr. WILSON. Let us have that resolution read so that we may know what it is.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I object to it, no matter what it is. I shall object to all business out of order until I can get a vote of the Senate to know whether an opportunity will be afforded to the committee of which I am the chairman to make a report of its business and to bring some bills before the Senate. I make the motion that fifteen minutes be assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, commencing at nine o'clock, to dispose of its business, and I wish to get a vote upon it. If the Senate shall vote it down, I shall have discharged my duty.

Mr. NESMITH. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to state a fact to him in regard to this resolution?

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I give way now I might be unable to get the floor again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois declines to give way, and is entitled to the floor and must not be interrupted.

BUSINESS OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that fifteen minutes be allowed to the Committee on the Judiciary, commencing at nine o'clock. I have been unable to obtain the floor to make a report from my committee for a week. I can only get the floor in opposition to something else, or to object. Now, having the floor, I wish the Senate to decide whether they will consider those bills. It is wholly immaterial to me. They are bills of public importance; they are House bills; and they ought to be passed. If the Senate will allow me fifteen minutes, commencing at nine o'clock—

Mr. JOHNSON. Make the motion, and I have no doubt the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I make that motion, that fifteen minutes, commencing at nine o'clock, be allowed to the Committee on the Judiciary to make reports and dispose of the business of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY PHELPS.

Mr. NESMITH. I now ask that the Senate proceed to consider the resolution which I reported a moment since from the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not think it will occupy five minutes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection to that. My objection before was merely to give me an opportunity to dispose of the business of my committee.

Mr. NESMITH. I now call up the joint resolution that I have named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that there be paid to Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri, the sum of $20,000, to reimburse her for expenditures made by her in raising and equipping troops for the United States in the late rebellion, and also for her expenditures made in behalf of the soldiers of the Union wounded in battle and of the orphan children of soldiers of the Union.

Mr. NESMITH. I am admonished that I have but five minutes prior to the time we are to commence on the business of the Committee on the Judiciary in which to state the facts connected with this case. I will state them as briefly as possible. Mrs. Mary Phelps is the wife of John S. Phelps, residing in southwestern Missouri, near Springfield. She was the guardian angel who took care of the wounded and the dead who were killed in the battle of Wilson's Creek. She not only recovered and buried the body of General Lyon, but buried the bodies of others who fell in that terrible conflict. She took care of the wounded soldiers at her own expense and expended her own fortune in that charitable work. She gathered up the orphan children of the soldiers of southwestern Missouri who fell in that terrible conflict. She has expended every dollar that she has been able to raise in support of these wards of the Government. She has now fifty of them on her hands. She has spent a greater amount of money in support of the children and in the expenses of attending to the sick and wounded soldiers who were the survivors of that battle than she now asks of this Congress; and I appeal to the magnanimity, the generosity, the sense of justice of every member of the Senate to make this slight appropriation to reimburse her. I will not occupy the time of the Senate in reading the immense mass of testimony which I have on this subject and the great number of letters and petitions of Union soldiers and officers in favor of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Have you examined it?

Mr. NESMITH. I have examined the papers very fully.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN F. FARNSWORTH of Illinois, Mr. NELSON TAYLOR of New York, and Mr. F. E. WOODBRIDGE of Vermont, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN A. KASSON of Iowa, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HENRY J. RAYMOND of New York, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 632) to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York; and

A bill (H. R. No. 815) supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services.

CHIPPWEAS, OTTAWAS, AND POTTAWATOMIES.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 197.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Illinois having charge of matters from the Judiciary Committee thought it was his duty to object when I moved the consideration of a certain joint resolution some time ago; but as the Senate has fixed a time for his business so that he is satisfied he can have the floor, he is willing to waive his objection and let that resolution come up now. I will simply state that it is to settle a long controversy upon terms that have been agreed upon between the Indians in Michigan and the Indians in Kansas; it is to pay from the funds of the Pottawatomie Indians $39,000 to the Indians in Michigan. The reading of the resolution will show exactly what it is.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the resolution referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin will be allowed to pass. I have had the question on my hands for ten years, and I hope it will be settled.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This resolution settles a long and troublesome controversy.

Mr. WADE. I withdraw my motion and hope gentlemen will be generous enough to give me the floor afterward.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 199.

Mr. CHANDLER. We can pass it in a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution having been reported to-day, it requires unanimous consent to consider it at this time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan, in pursuance of an agreement and compromise made with the Pottawatomie nation of Indians, so named and designated by the treaty of 1846 with the United States, the sum of $39,000, in full of all claims in favor of the Michigan Indians, either against the United States or that nation of Indians, past, present, or future, arising out of any treaty made with them or any band or confederation thereof, and the annuity now paid to them is to be restored and paid to the nation for the future. The $39,000 is to be paid out of funds of the Indians, now held in trust by the United States for the nation, drawing interest at the rate of five per cent. The payment is to be made per capita direct to heads of families, adults, and guardians of minors, as is now required by law in reference to annuities, by the proper agent of the Government.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE BUSINESS.

Several SENATORS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time having arrived when by a vote of the Senate fifteen minutes are to be devoted to business of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the place for holding the circuit court of the United States for the Rhode Island district, have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go upon the Calendar.

SUBSISTENCE CLAIMS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) to extend the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to the loyal citizens of Tennessee, to report it back and recommend its passage; and I ask that it be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 32) to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the commissioners who now are, or hereafter may be, appointed by the circuit courts of the United States to take acknowledgments of bail and affidavits, and also to take depositions in civil causes, shall and may exercise all the powers that any justice of the peace may exercise under and in virtue of the seventh section of the act passed the 20th of July, 1790, entitled "An act for the government and regulation of seamen in the merchant service."

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT AT ERIE.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 62) directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania. Besides the terms of the district court of the United States directed by law to be held at Pittsburgh and at Williamsport, for the western district of Pennsylvania, the judge of the western district is to hold two terms in every year at the city of Erie, which shall commence the first Monday of July and January in each and every year, beginning in the July or January which shall first immediately follow the passage of the act, and to be continued and adjourned from time to time, as the court may deem expedient, for the dispatch of business. In addition to the compensation allowed by law to the judge, he is to be paid the sum of $300 for his additional expenses and services.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill by striking out the words "and that in addition to the compensation allowed by law to the said judge he shall be paid the sum of $300 for his additional expenses and services."

Mr. COWAN. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I think the compensation of $300 to the judge for holding that additional court ought to be allowed. He has to travel a hundred miles to do it, and it is certainly a very meagre allowance. I think there is nothing improper in allowing him the $300 additional.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The judge undoubtedly ought to be paid $300 more salary than he is, but it would be an innovation to introduce this mode of paying him. We do not pay the other judges for traveling. Besides, the committee have reported a bill increasing the salaries of all the judges, and we had better leave this question to be settled on that bill. I think we had better not introduce the system of paying judges mileage or traveling expenses. I agree that this judge ought to have additional pay, whether he goes to Erie or not. I think the Senator had better acquiesce in the report of the committee and let us pass the bill in that shape.

Mr. COWAN. I am sensible of the mischief to which the honorable Senator alludes; but I think the only way of avoiding a greater is to allow, at least until the salary is raised, this amount for the additional expense this bill involves.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You had better let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back House bill No. 605, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 605) to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the several courts of the United States, and the several justices and judges of such courts, in addition to the authority already conferred by law, shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person may be restrained of his or her liberty in violation of the Constitution, or of any treaty or law of the United States. The person so restrained of his or her liberty may apply to either of the United States justices or judges for a writ of habeas corpus, which application shall be in writing and verified by affidavit, and shall set forth the facts concerning the detention of the party applying, in whose custody he or she is detained, and by virtue of what claim or authority, if known; and the justice or judge to whom the application shall be made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it shall appear from the petition itself that the party is not deprived of his or her liberty in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States. The writ shall be directed to the person in whose custody the party is detained, who shall make return of the writ and bring the party before the judge who granted it, and certify the true cause of the detention of such person within three days thereafter, unless such person be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles, and if beyond the distance of twenty miles and not above one hundred miles, then within ten days, and if beyond the distance of one hundred miles, then within twenty days. Upon the return of the writ of habeas corpus a day shall be set for the hearing of the cause, not exceeding five days thereafter, unless the party petitioning shall request a longer time. The petitioner may deny any of the material facts set forth in the return, or may allege any fact to show that the detention is in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States, which allegations or denials are to be made on oath. The return may be amended by leave of the court or judge before or after it is filed, as also may all suggestions made against it, that thereby the material facts may be ascertained. The court or judge is to proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case, by hearing testimony and the arguments of the parties interested; and if it shall appear that the petitioner is deprived of his or her liberty in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States, he or she shall forthwith be discharged and set at liberty. If any person or persons to whom the writ may be directed shall refuse to obey it, or shall neglect or refuse to make return, or shall make a false return thereto, in addition to the remedies already given by law, he or they shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction before any court of competent jurisdiction, be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, and by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by either, according to the nature and aggravation of the case. From the final decision of any judge, justice, or court, inferior to the circuit court, an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of the United States for the district in which the cause is heard, and from the judgment of the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States, on such terms and under such regulations and orders, as well for the custody and appearance of the person alleged to be restrained of his or her liberty, as for sending up to the appellate tribunal a transcript of the petition, writ of habeas corpus return thereto, and other proceedings, as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court, or, in default of such, as the judge hearing the cause may prescribe; and pending such proceedings or appeal, and until final judgment be rendered therein, and after final judgment of discharge in the same, any proceeding against such person so alleged to be restrained of his or her liberty in any State court, or by or under the authority of any State, for any matter or thing so heard and determined, or in process of being heard and determined, under and by virtue of such writ of habeas corpus, shall be deemed null and void.

A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity, or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the chief justice or judge or chancellor of the court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect, as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States; and the proceeding upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court may, at their discretion, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution, or remand the same to an inferior court.

This act is not to apply to the case of any person who is or may be held in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, charged with any military offense, or with having aided or abetted rebellion against the Government of the United States prior to its passage.

Mr. DAVIS. This is a very important bill; and it is a very late hour of the session to pass it. From the reading of it at the Clerk's table, I observe some provisions in it which I think very doubtful policy; and it may lead to injustice. As I gather the contents of the bill as it was read, there is a provision to prevent a person that has been discharged by a United States court upon a writ of habeas corpus from being taken again by the authority of the State courts or State laws; and the latter part of the bill suspends its operation against persons held by the military authorities of the United States, if I gathered the meaning of it aright. Now, sir, I believe that where a party has made his petition for a writ of habeas corpus and has been discharged in pursuance of the provisions of the habeas corpus act there is very greatly more danger of oppression by rearrest by the military authorities of the country than by the authorities of the States. I am not satisfied that the provisions against rearrest by the State authorities are not altogether too stringent; and I have no belief whatever that such immunity as is given to the military authorities by that bill from having persons taken under military arrest delivered from their custody, and their aggression by a writ of habeas corpus, is not altogether to that extent subversive of the constitutional liberties of the citizen.

I am sorry that I did not know the contents of this bill before by general consent and acquiescence it was agreed by the Senate to be taken up. I never would have given my sanction to such a hurried consideration of a measure so important and that is to bear so vitally upon the rights and the liberties of the people. From the way that the bill set out in its first section I had believed and hoped that it was a wise, liberal, and just provision to secure to the people of the United States their constitutional rights and liberties, but I am not satisfied that it was not an ingenious device for the purpose of making further and more effectual and grievous encroachments upon those rights and liberties. I do hope that the Senate will not pass the bill without giving further time and opportunity for its consideration. I therefore move that the bill be postponed until the first day of the next session of Congress.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is difficult to reply to the Senator from Kentucky, because I do not know that he makes any specific objection to any particular provision of the bill. It is a House bill; it was not prepared in the Senate; we considered the bill, and I am sorry that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] is not here; he examined it in committee, and is in favor of its passage. The last clause of the bill which is so obnoxious to the Senator from Kentucky, I think, is not objectionable. I will read that last clause again:

This act shall not apply to the case of any person who is or may be held in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, charged with any military offense.

Of course it would not do to take out of the control of the military the strictly military cases, whether in time of war or peace. It would not do to take a man liable to trial by court-martial away from that jurisdiction by a habeas corpus. That is all that is meant by this; and I supposed there could be no objection to that on the part of the Senator from Kentucky. His objection probably is that the military have been usurping authority that does not belong to them. I suppose that is likely the objection he would have; but this is a bill of a general character and applying to persons held in custody of the military authorities charged with a military offense.

Mr. NESMITH. Would that provision apply to any person except those in the military service?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is all.

Mr. DAVIS. I should have no objection to it if that was the construction.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The provision is:

This act shall not apply to the case of any person who is or may be held in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, charged with any military offense, or with having aided or abetted rebellion against the Government of the United States prior to the passage of this act.

It was not intended to interfere with any of those cases, such as that of Davis held in military custody now. The object of this bill is not to interfere at all with any existing condition of persons held in confinement in consequence of the rebellion.

Mr. NESMITH. Is there any objection to an amendment expressly limiting it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should have no objection; but I will state to the Senator from Kentucky, which he is probably aware of, that the habeas corpus act of 1789, to which this bill is an amendment, confines the jurisdiction of the United States courts in issuing writs of habeas corpus to persons who are held under United States laws. Now, a person might be held under a State law in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and he ought to have in such a case the benefit of the writ, and we agree that he ought to have recourse to United States courts to show that he was illegally imprisoned in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States.

I did not think there would be any objection to the bill. I received a note from one of the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives requesting me to have the bill acted upon. It was examined by the members of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. You will find it on your files. It is House bill No. 605. I do not think there is any just objection to it. I certainly should not wish to have it passed if there was. I think we examined it with sufficient care to have detected anything improper in it. It is a bill in aid of the rights of the people.

Mr. COWAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether the second section is drawn on the same principle as the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1789.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a little broader than the judiciary act. It is of a similar character.

Mr. COWAN. I am afraid that it is rather too broad. I refer to the clause giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction over "a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of such their validity."

Mr. TRUMBULL. I submit to the Senator from Pennsylvania whether, if the decision was against a right claimed under a treaty or statute or authority exercised under the Government of the United States, it would not be proper that that matter should go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. COWAN. As the law now stands, I think it is right. If you make it broader you open doors so that everybody can come into the Supreme Court. That is why I asked the question. The language of the old act is right because that has had a construction, and I think it opens the door wide enough.

Mr. DAVIS. If I understand the bill according to its letter, it is simply to legalize the course that has been pursued by the military authorities during the late war, and that has been to denominate anything a "military offense" which they chose to give that name to.

Mr. President, according to my reading of the Constitution a civilian cannot commit a military offense at all, and a civilian cannot be subjected to trial by any military tribunal without a flagrant and most dangerous infraction upon the Constitution. Now, Mr. President, according to the verbiage of this act anything which may be called a military offense is so to be treated by the courts that are authorized to issue writs of habeas corpus.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Kentucky will give way, I will say that if there is any sort of opposition to this bill I shall not press it now. I think it is a bill required by the public service; but if he is apprehensive that there is anything wrong in the bill, I will not press it to a vote this evening. I suppose it would be for the court to decide whether it was a military offense or not. I suppose that would be a judicial question.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend there is nothing in any supposed objection of the Senator, but if he insists on his opposition let the bill go over.

Mr. DAVIS. I much prefer that that course should be taken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will not resist the motion. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate. The Senator moves that it be postponed.

Mr. DAVIS. I make the motion that it be postponed until December next.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise to express the hope that the Senator from Illinois will permit the bill to lie over. It is an important measure, and we scarcely have time to consider a measure of this character now.

The motion to postpone until the next session was agreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Moore, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 27th instant, the following bills and joint resolutions:

A bill (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast;

A bill (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the Rebellion; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, disagreed to by the House, and

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the farther conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. NESMITH.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, and

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. HENDERSON, and Mr. BUCKALEW.

HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senate the Chair will present two bills which are on the table, from the House of Representatives, for the purpose of reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 815) supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONNESS. That bill need not be referred. I hope it will lie over for the present, subject to be called up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued.

The bill (H. R. No. 632) to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that bill regularly before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is regularly here; it comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it regularly before the Senate upon any question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only for formal reading; and it can have but one reading each day if there be objection.

Mr. CRESWELL. I object to the second reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second reading of the bill is objected to; it is laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, and had unanimously agreed to the change in the text of the bill as proposed by the committee.

STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope that will not be taken up.

Several SENATORS. Oh, let us vote.

Mr. SUMNER. Senators say, "Oh, let us vote." The question is about giving away $10,000.

Mr. CONNESS. Taking it up is not giving money away, I hope.

Mr. SUMNER. The question is, I say, about giving away $10,000; that is the proposition involved in this joint resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. For a statue.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says "for a statue"—an impossible statue, I say; one which cannot be made. However, I am not going to say anything on the merits now; that will come at another time if the resolution is taken up. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of taking up.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Massachusetts, who professes to be not merely an amateur but a connoisseur in art and an admirer of beautiful things and a person understanding them well, object to a proposition of this kind. Massachusetts has done much in the way of the encouragement of art in our country, and we are grateful to her for it. We are all informed that the person who makes this proposition to us is an artist; she has evinced her skill. Now, I say it is the business of a Government to adorn and beautify its public halls, to commemorate its great public men. I have had occasion to observe that as regards this particular thing she has produced the only true representative of the man, I having been more conversant with him, perhaps, than any one on this floor, showing her superior skill in art and natural genius; and I think that the Senator from Massachusetts, coming from the Athens of this Republic, "the hub of the universe," should make no objection to this proposition.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Foster, Guthrie, Howe, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Edmunds, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Riddle, and Sumner—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Morrill, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Willoy, and Wright—16.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. SUMNER. Some evenings ago, sir, I made an attempt to secure an appropriation of $10,000 in behalf of worthy public servants in one of the Departments of this Government. In presenting that case it was my duty to exhibit something of their necessities. I showed you how this money was needed to enable them to meet the expenses of living, which, as we all know, have been constantly increasing, while the value of money has been decreasing. I showed you also that they had earned this money by the work they had done. After ample discussion, running over several evenings, the Senate chose to vote down that proposition and refused to appropriate $10,000 to be distributed among public servants who, as I insisted, had earned it by faithful labor. In refusing it you acted on a sentiment of economy. It was urged that at this time the Treasury was so much drawn upon that we could not make or should not be justified in making any such appropriation, and that if it was made, then we should be obliged to make it in other cases, and there would be no end to the drain upon the Treasury. You all remember the argument on that occasion, and also the result. The proposition was voted down.

Now, sir, a proposition is brought forward to appropriate that identical sum of $10,000 to be applied to the production of a work of art. I speak of it now in the most general way. If there was any assurance that the work in question could be worthy of so large a sum, if there was any reason to imagine that the favorite who is to be the beneficiary under this resolution, was really competent to execute such a work, still, at this time and under circumstances by which we are surrounded, I might well object to its passage simply on reasons of economy; surely this argument is not out of place. I present as my first objection to this proposition the consideration of economy. Do not, sir, wastefully, inconsiderately, heedlessly give away so large a sum of money. If you are in the mood of appropriation on this scale, select some of those public servants who have been discharging their laborious duties on an inadequate compensation, and bestow it upon them. Be just before you are generous. Do that rather than become at this hour patrons of art. I hope that I do not treat this question too gravely. You treated the proposition to augment the compensation of public servants in the State Department very gravely. I but follow your example.

But, sir, there is another aspect of this question to which you will pardon me if I allude. I enter upon it with great reluctance. I am unwilling to utter a word that would bear hard upon any one, least of all upon a youthful artist where sex imposes reserve, if not on her part, at least on mine; but when a proposition like this is brought forward I am bound to meet it frankly.

Each Senator of course must act on his own judgment and the evidence before him. Each must be responsible to his own conscience for the vote that he gives. Now, sir, with the little knowledge that I have of such things, with the small opportunities that I have enjoyed of observing works of art, and with the moderate acquaintance that I have enjoyed with artists, I am bound to express my opinion that this candidate is not competent to produce the work which you propose to order. You might as well place her on the staff of General Grant, or put General Grant aside and place her on horseback in his stead. She cannot do it. She might as well contract to furnish an epic poem, or the draft of a bankrupt bill. I am pained to be constrained to say what I do, but when you press this to a vote you leave me no alternative. Admit that she may make a statue, she cannot make one that you will be justified in placing in this national Capitol. Promise is not performance, but what she has done thus far comes under the first head rather than the latter. Surely this edifice, so beautiful and interesting, should not be opened to the experiments of untried talent. Only the finished artists should be invited to its ornamentation.

Sir, I doubt if you consider enough the character of this edifice in which we are now assembled. Possessing the advantage of an incomparable situation, it is one of the first-class structures in the world. Surrounded by an amphitheater of hill, with the Potomac at its feet, it resembles the capitol in Rome, surrounded by the Alban hills, with the Tiber at its feet. But the situation is grander than that of the Roman capitol. The edifice itself is worthy of the situation. It has beauty of form and sublimity in proportions, even if it lacks originality in conception. In itself it is a work of art. It ought not to receive in the way of ornamentation anything which is not a work of art. Unhappily this rule has not always prevailed, or there would not be so few pictures and marbles about us worthy of the place they occupy. But bad pictures and ordinary marbles should warn us against adding to their number.

Pardon me if I call your attention for one moment to the few works of art in the Capitol which we might care to preserve. Beginning with the Vice President's room, which is nearest to us, we find an excellent and finished portrait of Washington by Peale. This is much less known than the familiar portrait by Stuart, but it is well worthy to be cherished. I never enter the room where it is without feeling its presence. Traversing the corridors, we find ourselves in the spacious Rotunda, where are four pictures by Trumbull, truly historic in character, in which the great scenes they portray live again before us. These pictures have a merit of their own which will always justify for them the place they now occupy. Mr. Randolph, with an ignorant levity, once characterized that which represents the signing of the Declaration of Independence as a "shin-piece." He should have known that there is probably no picture, having so many portraits, less obnoxious to such a gibe. If these pictures do not belong to the highest forms of art, they can never fail to be regarded with interest by the patriot citizen, if not by the artist. There is one other picture in the Rotunda which is not without merit; I refer to the Landing of the Pilgrims by Weir, where there is a certain beauty of color and a religious sentiment; but this picture has always seemed to me too exaggerated to be natural. Passing from the Rotunda to the Hall of the House of Representatives we stand before a picture, which, as a work of art, is perhaps the choicest of all in the Capitol. It is the portrait of La Fayette, by that consummate artist, who was one of the glories of France, Ary Scheffer. He sympathized with our institutions; and this portrait of the early friend of our country was a present from the artist to the people of the United States. Few who look at it by the side of the Speaker's chair are aware that it is the production of the rare genius which gave to art the Christus Consolator and the Francesca da Rimini.

If we turn from painting to sculpture, we shall find further reason for caution. The lesson is taught especially by that work of the Italian Persico in the front of the Capitol, called by him Columbus, who is represented with a globe in his hand, but sometimes called by others, "a man rolling nine-pins." Near to this is a remarkable group by Greenough, where the early settler is struggling with the savage, while opposite in the yard is the statue of Washington by the same artist, which has found little favor because it is nude, but which shows a great mastery of art. There also are the works of Crawford—the alto-relievo which fills the pediment over the great door of the Senate Chamber, and the statue of Liberty which looks down from the top of the dome—attesting a genius that must always command admiration. There are other statues in the building by a living artist. Then there are the bronze doors by Rogers, on which he labored long and well. They belong to a class of which there are only a few specimens in the world, and I have sometimes thought they might vie with those famous doors at Florence, which Michael Angelo said were worthy to be the doors of Paradise. Our artist has represented the whole life of Columbus in bronze, while the portraits of contemporary princes, and of the authors who have illustrated the life of the great discoverer add to the completeness of this work of art.

Now, sir, the doors of this Capitol are to open again for the reception of a work of art. It is to be a statue of our martyred President. He deserves a statue, and it should be here in Washington. But you cannot expect to have even of him more than one statue here in Washington. Such a repetition or reduplication would be out of place. It would be too much. There is one statue of Washington. There is also a statue of Jefferson. I refer to the bronze statue in front of the Executive Mansion by the French sculptor David. There is also one statue of Jackson. It is now proposed to add a statue of Lincoln. I suppose you do not contemplate two statues or three statues, but only one statue. Who now shall make that statue which shall find a place in the national Capitol? Surely whoever undertakes that work must be of ripe genius, with ample knowledge of art and of unquestioned capacity—the whole informed and inspired by a prevailing sympathy with the subject and the cause for which he lived and died. Are you satisfied that this youthful candidate, without ripeness of genius or ample knowledge of art or unquestioned capacity, and not so situated as to feel the inspiration of his life and character, should receive this remarkable trust? She has never made a statue in her life. Shall she experiment on the historic dead and place her experiment under this dome? I am unwilling. When the statue of that beloved President is set up here, where we shall look upon it daily, I wish it to be a work of art in truth and reality, where the living features shall be preserved animated by the living soul, so that we shall all hail it as the man immortal by his life, now doubly immortal through art. Anything short of this, even if it finds a transient resting-place here, will be removed whenever a correct taste asserts its just prerogatives.

Therefore, sir, for the sake of economy, that you may not heedlessly lavish the national treasure; for the sake of this Capitol, itself a work of art, that it may not have anything in the way of ornamental which is not a work of art; for the sake of our martyred President, whose statue should be by a finished artist; and for the sake of art throughout the whole country, that we may not set a bad example, I ask you not to pass this resolution. When I speak for art generally I open a tempting theme, but I forbear. Suffice it to say that art throughout the whole country must suffer if Congress crowns with its patronage anything which is not truly artistic. By such patronage you will discourage where you ought to encourage.

Mr. President, I make these remarks with sincere reluctance. I am pained to feel obliged to make them, but such an appropriation as this, engineered so vigorously, and having in its support such a concerted strength, must be met plainly and directly. Do not condemn the frankness which you compel. If you wish to bestow a charity or a gift, do it openly, without pretense of any patronage of art or homage to a deceased President. Bring forward your resolution appropriating $10,000 to this youthful candidate. This I can deal with. I can listen to your argument for charity, and I can assure you that I shall never be insensible to it. But when you propose to pay this large sum for a work of art to be placed in the national Capitol in memory of the illustrious dead, I am obliged to consider the character of the artist you select. I wish it were otherwise, but I cannot help it.

Mr. NESMITH. Mr. President, if this was a mere matter of research I should be very much inclined to defer to the judgment of the Senator from Massachusetts, but as it is not, and as it requires no great learning, no particular devotion to reading to discover what is an exact imitation of nature, I claim that my judgment on such a subject is as good as his own. My mind has never been perverted by the extensive reading which the Senator from Massachusetts has had, or by that vast amount of lore in which he is so accomplished, but I claim to be equally as good a judge as he is of any mere matter of art which is an imitation of a natural object.

The first objection that the Senator from Massachusetts presented to this appropriation was on the ground of economy. Sir, it is the first time I ever knew that Senator seized with a costiveness of economy. [Laughter.] It was only last night that we listened to his long diatribes here when four different times he called for the yeas and nays upon excessive appropriations to those who are already overpaid, and now he talks about the squandering of the public funds. Sir, there are no public servants in this country but those who are already overpaid, and he objects to this young artist—this young scion of the West, from the same land from which Lincoln came—a young person who manifests intuitive genius, and who is able to copy the works of nature without having perused the immense tomes and the grand volumes of which the Senator may boast—a person who was born and raised in the wilds of the West, and who is able to copy its great works.

Sir, the Senator might have raised the same objection to Mr. Lincoln, that he was not qualified for the Presidency because his reading had not been as extensive as that of the Senator, or because he had lived among rude and uncultivated society. I claim for this young lady, sprung from a poor family, struggling with misfortune and adversity, that she has developed such natural genius that her talents in this direction should be fostered and cultivated in preference to our giving this work to any foreigner. The Senator from Massachusetts has pandered so long to European aristocracy that he cannot speak of anything that originates in America with common respect. He even refers to our bronze doors which were cast in Munich, and to everything else of foreign production, and he gives no credit to native genius. What did he not speak of Powers? Why did he not speak of our great American artists? Why is he constantly referring us to Europe?

If this young lady and the works which she has produced had been brought to his notice by some near-sighted, frog-eating Frenchman, with a pair of green spectacles on his nose, the Senator would have said that she was deserving of commendation. If she could have spoken three or four different languages that nobody else could have understood, or, perhaps, that neither she nor the Senator could understand, he would vote her $50,000. [Laughter.] He is a great patron of art, but not a patron of domestic art. He is a patron of foreign art; he is a patron of those who copy and ape European aristocracy, and he does not propose to patronize or encourage the genius which grows up in our own great country, particularly in the wilds of the West.

Here is a young girl of poor parentage, struggling with misfortune, her father a mere clerk in a Department here; and by a casualty, on being introduced into a studio, she manifests great taste and great powers of art, and in the short experience which she has had she has developed wonderful powers in that line. But the Senator from Massachusetts, with all his learning and all his foreign tastes, is unable to appreciate anything of that sort.

Sir, I venture to predict that this young lady will rise to an eminence in the arts, that her works will yet decorate this Capitol, notwithstanding the opposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, who, when she has achieved success, will be among the first to sing paeans to her praise, and I was about to say that his children—but I will take that back, as he has none to speak of, [laughter]—would be among those who would praise her works and would cast a mantle over the proceedings of their recreant father who had refused to recognize native genius and native art. But, sir, as the Senator has remained a bachelor so long, that is a contingency which is not at all likely to occur. [Laughter.]

I say, then, there is nothing in the objection on the score of economy. This young lady deserves to be encouraged. I venture to say that the works she has already produced, which are on exhibition in this Capitol, and particularly the bust of Mr. Lincoln, are unequalled. I challenge the Senator from Massachusetts to produce one of the foreign artists, of whom he boasts so much, who can produce the equal of that bust. I do not pretend to enter into any competition with the Senator from Massachusetts on the subject of books, but when it comes to matters of natural taste and to forming a judgment in regard to the imitations of natural objects, I assume that my judgment is equal to his. I can tell the height of a mountain, the length of a river, or the meanderings of a trail as well as he can, and I say that my judgment upon those subjects is equal to his. I deprecate his panegyrics upon foreign artists in derogation of those raised in our own country, and particularly those of the great West.

Mr. SUMNER. Where have I said anything in praise of a foreign artist in depreciation of the artists of our own country? I have alluded with praise to the artists of our own country.

Mr. NESMITH. I heard nothing of that. I heard the Senator speak with particular reference to that door which was cast in Munich.

Mr. SUMNER. Which is by a western artist, Mr. Rogers, reared in the West. I give him praise for what he has done.

Mr. NESMITH. It was not cast in the West; it was cast in a foreign country, at Munich. Why could not that door have been made in the United States? I ask the Senator that question. Why should it be necessary to go to a foreign country, even if we produced the genius to mold the door, to produce the model from which it was cast? Why was it necessary to send an order to a foreign country for the production of the door itself? In mechanics and in the arts we are as far advanced as the countries of Europe, and I apprehend there is no reason, except it be the desire to gratify a morbid taste, why we should go to the old countries for these things. I appeal to Senators on this floor, to those who have natural taste, to those who have an eye for beauty, as I admit the Senator from Massachusetts has not, to support this young lady in her efforts to produce what will be a magnificent statue of Mr. Lincoln.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, I dislike much the term "charity" that is used by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is a word of offense when spoken on such an occasion and about such business—offense to the person who is the subject of our business. This is not charity. It has been the custom of all cultivated States, from old antiquity, through the middle ages, and to the present day, to cultivate high art illustrating their own people and institutions, and to encourage their own home artists. Where high genius is found, it has been the office of great States to cultivate the development of that genius. Did it not require the wealth and power of princes to develop the genius of Michael Angelo, and Titian, and Guido? It was so in past times; it has been so in our time; and we have undertaken to maintain the policy of a great State and to cultivate art, among other things. The Emperor of Russia gets the first artist there is in Europe to paint his battle-fields and takes him up to St. Petersburg. The Emperor of France competes with him. All the States of Europe pursue the same policy; and for what? To illustrate their national history and their national qualities; and they have particularly encouraged historical paintings; indeed, a great picture is a history; so is a great statue a history.

It is the policy of this Government, a great Government, to cultivate the same talents in our own country. I am confident that this young lady possesses genius. She has exhibited it. Her bust of Mr. Lincoln is the only one that does justice to him. There are plenty of them about; we have seen hundreds of them, but hers is the only one that has reproduced Mr. Lincoln as he lived. She has had the genius to do it; and it requires genius to do it; and young genius is just as good as old genius, and sometimes a little better. I believe Napoleon was a genius when he was young; Alexander died when he was young; and a great many other people accomplished great results when they were boys and girls. Pitt when a mere boy, twenty-four years of age, was Prime Minister of England. The idea that because a person is young and has not attended the schools of Germany and France he or she is not fitted for a work of this kind is a false notion. On yonder wall [pointing in the direction of the painting of the storming of Chapultepec on the wall leading to the gentlemen's gallery] is a picture painted by a man who never took a lesson in drawing, who never took a lesson in penciling. He sat alongside of me as a boy at school on the banks of the North river; and he is now acknowledged to be the best battle painter there is in the world.

Several Senators. Who is he?

Mr. McDOUGALL. James Walker, the best battle painter now living, who painted the storming of Chapultepec on yonder wall. Though he never had a drawing-lesson, he drew and painted admirably when he was a boy. These things come by the force of innate consciousness and by the power of giving expression to that innate consciousness. This young lady is undoubtedly a lady of marked genius; and she has proved, so far as the bust is concerned, that she has produced the best likeness of Lincoln of any person that has attempted it. I have the right to say so, because I was perhaps better acquainted with Mr. Lincoln in his life-time than any gentleman on this floor; he was a companion of mine many years ago, with whom I was long familiar. I have not been satisfied with any attempt to reproduce his features till I saw the bust produced by this lady. She has achieved a success, showing that she has true genius; and if she is young, the better for her. In five years more she will be as great a genius as she ever will be, no matter how long she may live. "Whom the gods love die young."

Mr. CONNESS. There are one or two aspects of this case as presented by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that I do not feel like letting pass without remark. When this subject was called up heretofore in the Senate that Senator rose in his place and offered, not what is regarded as legitimate parliamentary opposition, but he joined in a cry to consider the pension bills. "Consider the pension bills; do not turn your backs to the widows and orphans of this war and vote away the public money for nothing." "Consider the pension bills," said the Senator. Well, Mr. President, the pension bills have been considered, and the measure is called up again, and the Senator, the great Senator from Massachusetts, rises in his place and begins an opposition to this measure by arraigning the Senate; arraigning me and every other Senator here. How, sir? He reminds us that last evening and the evening before he presented an application here in behalf of worthy public servants and that we refused to make the appropriation, and that the appropriation that he asked for was equal in amount to the appropriation that we were now about to make in the most wasteful manner. Now, Mr. President, the English of all this is, that the Senator from Massachusetts, in his capacity of chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has endeavored to ingraft upon both appropriation bills, the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and then upon the deficiency bill, a proposition to pay the clerks in the State Department an extra sum for their services and we refused to agree to it. The Senator did not state truly—he will pardon me for using that word—why the Senate refused to accept his proposition. It was because the proposition was sought to be ingrafted upon the appropriation bills, and because Senators could not—no matter how they might concede that the clerical force of the State Department deserved an increase of compensation—vote it without at the same time accepting a like proposition for the clerical force of the War Department, of the Navy Department, and of the Treasury Department. Why, sir, a committee of clerks from the War Department came here and called upon me within the last two days half of whom were on crutches. Their appeal was hard to be resisted. If a bill should be introduced into Congress to provide additional compensation for those men I should vote for it with the greatest possible pleasure, but we could not ingraft it upon appropriation bills. The Senators having charge of those bills reminded us again and again that to load them down was to destroy and lose them; and this was the reason why the Senator's proposition was not received by the Senate, which in candor the Senator should have stated.

But he passes from that argument of the Senate to a very elegant presentation of art, and he makes that picture look really beautiful and elegant in our view; for what purpose? For the cruel purpose of making a contrast with this young lady who comes before us that we may patronize her; for the purpose of denouncing this appropriation as being made to an unworthy person, to one not an artist, as a charity. Sir, the great Senator did himself but little credit, in my opinion; when he arraigned this poor girl before this great forum and denounced this measure as an act of charity. If it were so, his great heart should have called upon him to have covered it with his mantle, and not uncovered it here in this public presence. It was not becoming, in my humble judgment.

Again, Mr. President, the Senator should concede something to his colleagues in this body. No member of this body, I apprehend, is more proud than I am when I can agree with the Senator and support him in his views and measures; and I am very happy to say on this occasion that I generally can agree with the Senator; but the Senator owes in return for those agreements, in comity, that we shall not be arraigned here by him and accused of a spirit of wastefulness simply because we cannot agree with the Senator. Mr. President, why should he denounce in advance and condemn this girl because she asks that her efforts in art shall be patronized? How does he know that she cannot produce a statue? How can he tell? The money to be spent had better be thrown away if so, and the Senator have waited before he pronounced his great condemnation against the early and difficult efforts of one endeavoring to rise and progress in so difficult a path.

We were reminded by the Senator that we had better be just before we are generous. Well, Mr. President, it is well to be just. Justice is a great attribute; and so is generosity. I fear that in the name of justice all of us enact our greatest cruelties. I fear it is so. I can say for myself that whenever I am enabled to take a retrospective glance at my life and look down the path that I have come by, there is nothing along it that shines out to me so beautifully as the little generous acts that my recollection enables me to see as having been done. I would not blot them out if I were called upon, as between them and all the other acts of my life.

We are here acting in a public capacity. We each, I apprehend, endeavor to do our duty. I believe we do it; but I would not exchange, as I said before, those little acts that the world forgets, that ourselves forget (as we should very often mostly) for all else put together. And my idea of the great Senator from Massachusetts (by which name I am very proud to call him and which is so well deserved) is that he is never so great as when he rises and speaks in behalf of generosity, of humanity, when he exhibits to us the intellect and the affections in that happy commingling that is the sweetest and the most beautiful rule of human life and action.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I think about the best thing we could do would be to proceed to the vote upon this question. I will remark, however, that I am not liable to the objection which the Senator from Massachusetts offers to the advocates of this bill. I have stood by him from first to last and voted for his proposition repeatedly to increase the salaries of the clerks of the State Department and of the clerks of the various Departments of the Government; but is the fact that that measure has failed a reason why we should not do justice to another measure?

Sir, I am here to say that I shall vote for this proposition with the most delightful pleasure. I think I knew Mr. Lincoln as well as any member of the Senate; I remember his features well; and I think that the artist whose claims are now before the Senate has had as fine a conception, and in the bust she has made has given an exact likeness of Mr. Lincoln. I have known her a long time. I was introduced to her by friends from her home in the far West. I know her high character as a young lady; but not only that, she is a young lady of extraordinary merit. In a very short time, in a very few years, she has established a reputation known to us all. She has taken the busts and likenesses of Senators and Representatives and has succeeded with most admirable effect; and when I consider her extraordinary merit, when I consider that she is a young artist, that she is an American artist, and that she has displayed remarkable genius, I almost feel that the Senator from Massachusetts is a barbarian [laughter] of the highest order in attacking this young lady.

Mr. President, I believe that she will succeed in this work and that she will establish a reputation for herself; and as I believe it is our duty to preserve the features of the great benefactors of our country, I do hope that we shall pass this measure and pass it cheerfully.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I rise to correct a mistake which I made a short time ago. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. YATES] was quite as conversant with the late President, if not more so than myself, and is as good a judge of the perfection of the work done by this young lady artist.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, this is not a question whether the clerks in the State Department shall be paid an additional compensation; nor is it a question of the generosity of the Government of the United States. The question of generosity does not arise at all. There is no doubt that there is a disposition on the part of the Senate, and probably will be on the part of the House, to order the making of a statue of President Lincoln.

Mr. WADE. It has already passed the House.

Mr. HOWARD. I think such a measure will meet the entire concurrence of the American people, certainly of that portion of them who are loyal and who have been loyal, and especially that numerous and magnificent party who elected him to office and who sustained him through his arduous and difficult Administration. If we are to have a statue of Mr. Lincoln—and surely no President since Washington is more deserving of that honor—it becomes a mere matter of business, a simple business transaction, as to whom we shall employ to execute the work. Shall we seek out and employ an artist who is known to possess high talent, one in whom we have confidence, and as to the result of whose labors there is no doubt and no risk; or shall we, as prudent business men, intrust this task to a person who is not known as a high and distinguished artist and who we have not much reason to suppose will or ever can become eminent as a sculptor? It is simply, as I said before, a question of business. If it were for you or me to contract for the making of a statue for a deceased friend, what should we do, supposing we had the means for the execution of one worthy of our friend? Should we take any such risk as gentlemen urge us to take upon this occasion? Should we not be sure to apply to and employ a person who was undoubtedly competent to execute the task. Sir, we should. We should run no risk whatever, if we could avoid it; and that is precisely this case. I know, perhaps, as much of the ability of the young lady to whom it is proposed to give this job as most members of this body. I have met her frequently, as other members of this body have done, and surely she has shown no lack of that peculiar talent known commonly as "lobbying" in pressing forward her enterprise and bringing it to the attention of Senators. I have seen her models of Mr. Lincoln; I have seen and examined the one, especially, to which reference is most frequently had; and although I do not pretend to be a connoisseur in this kind of art, I am prepared to say that I never was satisfied with that model. To me it is monotonous and without meaning and without spirit. I may be entirely mistaken on account of my want of skill and judgment in such matters; but according to my ideas the model is an imperfect model, failing in expression, failing in life, failing in very many qualities which I should expect in a first-rate model.

Now, sir, I am willing to vote the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of securing a good statue of Abraham Lincoln; but I am not willing to vote that sum or any other sum to this person and take the risk of an entire failure in the end. If this country in its history has ever produced a statesman, and a great man deserving to be memorialized in its annals, not only upon the page of history but in the works of art, it is Abraham Lincoln. And, sir, it is our duty, if we undertake to carry forward this work and secure a statue of that great man, to do it in the best manner possible, and to employ the most skillful artist in our own country or even abroad, if it shall turn out upon inquiry that we have not an artist of competency among ourselves; and I expect, I confess, having in view the youth and inexperience of Miss Ream, and I will go further, and say, having in view her sex, I shall expect a complete failure in the execution of this work. I would as soon think of a lady writing the Iliad of Homer; I should as soon think of placing at the head of an army a woman for the conduct of a great campaign.

Mr. COWAN. They have done both.

Mr. HOWARD. It has not been their general history.

Mr. McDOUGALL. They have done it.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir. I would as soon expect from the pen of a woman the Paradise Lost or any other great work of genius which has honored our race.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Did you ever read the Fragments of Sappho?

Mr. HOWARD. I have read the Fragments of Sappho.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What do you say about that?

Mr. HOWARD. That certainly does not prove that Sappho was capable of writing Homer's Iliad.

Mr. McDOUGALL. She exceeds Homer in many respects.

Mr. HOWARD. In many respects—in erotic expressions she certainly exceeds Homer. Whether the proposed work in the present case would have a similar merit I cannot say.

But, sir, without trifling on the subject, and without meaning to say a word in disparagement of this young lady, whom I suppose to be a young lady of genius, I insist that we are taking a great risk in intrusting the execution of this work to her. Let us employ a Powers, let us employ somebody from whom we have a right to expect, from what he has already done, a complete and creditable execution of a statue of Lincoln and not turn it into the hands of a person who, after the exercise of all her genius and all her powers, may miserably fail in the end and we be ashamed of the appropriation which we are about to make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see on looking at the resolution that it, by accident no doubt, fails to provide that the model for which the first $5,000 is to be paid shall be completed to the acceptance of any official, as the statue is required to be, and therefore I move to amend by inserting after the word "placed" in the eighth line, the words "to his acceptance," so that the completion of the plaster model shall be to the acceptance of the Secretary of the Interior upon which the $5,000 is to be paid, just as the completion of the marble statue is to be to his acceptance.

Mr. WADE. I hope not.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is proposed to go into the market and make a bargain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall be glad to have gentlemen state frankly whether they intend to pay this $5,000 for a mere experiment, whether it be successful or satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior or not. I have understood from the course of this debate that this young lady is entitled to be trusted and to be contracted with, in the language of the resolution, as a person of established reputation, whose reputation justifies there being intrusted to her this important work which engages all our reputation and is to be put on exhibition as being produced through our instrumentality. Now, if it be intended that this is to be merely an experiment, and is frankly so said, then we shall understand it. If, on the contrary, it be what it purports to be, the arrangement of a business transaction by contract with this young lady, then it is just to her as well as to us to provide that this model shall be completed to the satisfaction of the party who is to contract with her.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust the amendment will not be adopted, and I think it ought not to be adopted. If I was drafting the resolution I should not put in these words. It will be seen by reading the resolution that it provides that a contract shall be made with this lady "for a life-size model and statue of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, to be executed by her at a price not exceeding $10,000; one half payable on completion of the model in plaster, and the remaining half on completion of the statue in marble to his acceptance." It is intended, I suppose, by the Congress of the United States, if they pass this resolution, that she shall be paid at any rate $5,000 for the effort. I suppose that is intended. It is not expected that she is to go on and devote her time for years, perhaps, to preparing this for nothing. Congress has that confidence in directing the contract to be made with her, from the knowledge they have of her talent, to agree that they will pay $5,000 for making this effort, and if she completes it to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior she is to have ten thousand. I do not presume that it is the intention of Congress, certainly it is not mine, to require her to go on and make this statue and run the hazard of being paid or not. She can do that without coming to Congress. What is the object of coming to Congress at all? Let her proceed and make a statue and give her time to it for years at her own expense; if it is one that pleases us we will buy it afterward. I think it would be mockery to pass a resolution of that kind. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not insist upon any such amendment.

Besides, the resolution has passed the House of Representatives; we have certainly spent time enough upon it; there is manifestly a disposition in the Senate to pass it, and I trust we will come to a vote and dispose of this matter and let us then pass to some other business which we must do; the hours are now few between this and the time of adjournment. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall come to a vote when fair and just debate is finished upon this resolution, and probably not before. The Senator from Illinois states, with the frankness which is characteristic of him, and which I thank him for, that he does not intend that this shall be other than a mere gratuitous experiment so far as the model goes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I stated no such thing, without meaning to contradict the Senator rudely. I did not say that I intended it should be nothing more than an experiment. I said that the Congress, in authorizing a contract to be made with this lady, had sufficient evidence from the knowledge they had of her ability to be willing to pay that much for her services in preparing this model, and if she makes it to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, when the whole work is done, we pay the whole of it. That is what I stated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the gentleman is through with his interpolation I will go on. The language which the Senator used was "to pay her for the effort." I called "effort" "experiment." The difference is not worth occupying much of our fast-running sands of time to discuss; and, as I said before, he states with frankness that this $5,000 for the model is not to depend on whether that model is fit to be set up anywhere or not; but the very language which the honorable Senator used with frankness and fairness—and I hope he will not get heated about it this night—was "to pay her for the effort;" and he says it never was heard of, or words to that effect, that we should interpolate into a contract such a clause as this which I have suggested. Do we contract for the building of our navies, for any of the works of art that are found in the Rotunda, or elsewhere about this Capitol, except providing that some public officer shall be the party who shall judge as to the fair completion of the contract within its fair spirit so as to entitle the contractor to his recompense? I think not. I will not occupy time in discussing that question—as to whether the works which we contract for or authorize our servants to contract for are to be thrown upon us without the judgment of anybody in deciding whether they are fitly performed or are not. Now, sir, the issue is fairly presented, whether it is the intention of this Congress to pay $5,000 for this mere experiment or whether this artist is willing to take the risk upon her side of completing the model to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior in order to entitle her to the compensation for it. I therefore insist upon the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There should be but little question about this in the choice of artists when the three Senators from Illinois concur in their judgment. I see the Senator from Illinois there, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] and one here, [Mr. YATES,] and I am from Illinois myself, the companions of the deceased President for long years, well qualified to judge as to how he has been developed in the model that has been exhibited. That any artist should be called upon or required to go and manipulate and labor six months without a promise of recompense would be something unheard of. Twenty-five thousand dollars we voted last session for a picture to Powell. He is to paint a picture, and all the limitation is that the design is controlled by a committee. When he paints his picture he is entitled to his money. Would a young man go and dare employ a year or two or three years of his labor upon a particular work without the assurance of exact compensation? A Government cannot afford to ask that; and to ask it would be an outrage.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator will excuse me while I refer to the resolution authorizing Powell to make a painting.

Mr. WADE. We do not care anything about Powell now.

Mr. CONNESS. Excuse me now, if you please. Last year Congress passed a joint resolution in these words:

"That the Joint Committee on the Library be, and they are hereby, directed to enter into a contract with William H. Powell, of the State of Ohio, to paint a picture for the United States, to be placed at the head of one of the grand staircases in the Capitol, illustrative of some naval victory; the particular subject of the painting to be agreed on by the committee and the artist: Provided, That the entire expense of said picture shall not exceed the sum of $25,000, and $2,000 shall be paid to said William H. Powell in advance, to enable him to prepare for the work, the remainder of said installments at intervals of not less than one year, the last installment to be retained until the picture is completed and put up."

There was no such condition in that case as is now proposed, and I apprehend there never was in any such resolution.

Mr. HOWE. I will say that we have recently made a contract with Dr. Stone to execute a statue of Alexander Hamilton in marble. We pay him one fourth in advance, one fourth, I think, when the model is completed in plaster, one fourth when it is completed in Europe, and the balance when it is delivered at the Capitol.

Mr. SUMNER. I think this amendment had better be adopted. It is only a reasonable precaution in a case like the present. The Senator from Wisconsin alluded to a contract with Mr. Stone. He is a sculptor whose works are at the very doors of the Senate Chamber. The committee who employed him must have been perfectly aware of his character. When they entered into a contract with him, there was no element of chance; they knew precisely what they were contracting for; but in the present case there is nothing but chance, if there be not the certainty of failure.

Mr. CONNESS. How was it in the case of Mr. Powell?

Mr. SUMNER. I am speaking of the present case. One at a time, if you please. The person that you now propose to contract with, notoriously has never made a statue. All who have the most moderate acquaintance with art know that it is one thing to make a bust, and quite another thing to make a statue. One may make a bust, and yet be entirely unable to make a statue; just as one may write a poem in the corner of a newspaper, and not be able to produce an epic. A statue is one of the highest forms of art. There have been very few artists competent to make a statue. There is as yet but one instance that I can recall of a woman successful in such an undertaking. But the eminent person to whom I refer had shown a peculiar genius early in life, had enjoyed peculiar opportunities of culture, and had vindicated her title as artist before she attempted this difficult task. Conversing, as I often have, with sculptors, I remember how they always dwell upon the difficulty of such a work. It is no small labor to set a man on his legs, with proper drapery and accessories, in stone or in bronze. Not many have been able to do it, and all these have had in advance experience in art. Now, there is no such experience here. This candidate is notoriously without it. There is no reason to suppose that she can succeed. Therefore, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is wise when he proposes that before the nation pays $5,000 on account, it shall have some assurance that the work is not absolutely a failure. Voltaire was in the habit of exclaiming, in a coarse Italian saying, that "a woman cannot produce a tragedy." You have already seen that. I do not venture on the remark that a woman cannot produce a statue; but I am sure that, in the present case, you ought to take every reasonable precaution.

Sir, I did not intend when I rose to say anything except directly upon the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, but as I am on the floor perhaps I may be pardoned if I advert for one moment—

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question for information?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. It is whether he supposes that by the examination of a plaster model he could get any assurance that the work in marble would be satisfactory.

Mr. SUMNER. Obviously, for the chief work of the artist is in the model. When this is finished the work is more than half done. What remains requires mechanical skill rather than genius. In Italy, where there are accomplished workmen in marble, the artist leaves his model in their hands, contenting himself with a few finishing touches. Sometimes he does not touch the marble.

I was about to say, when interrupted, that I hoped to be pardoned if I adverted for one moment to the onslaught which has been made upon what I have already said in this debate. I do not understand it. I do not know why Senators have given such rein to the passion for personality. I made no criticism on any Senator and no allusion, even, to any Senator. I addressed myself directly to the question and endeavored to treat it with all the reserve consistent with a proper frankness. Senators, one after another, have attacked me personally. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] seemed to riot in this business. The Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] from whom I had reason to expect something better, caught the spirit of the other Pacific Senator. Sir, there was nothing in what I said to justify such an attack. But I will not proceed in the comments which their speeches invite. I turn away from them. There was, however, one remark of the Senator from Oregon to which I will refer. He complained that I was unwilling to patronize native art, and that I had dwelt on the productions of foreign artists.

I am at a loss for the motive of this singular misrepresentation. Let the Senator quote a sentence or a word which fell from me in disparagement of native art. He cannot. I know the art of my country too well and think of it with too much of patriotic pride. I alluded to only one foreign artist, and he was that sympathetic and gifted Frenchman who has endowed the Capitol with the portrait of Lafayette. The other artists that I praised were all of my own country. There was Peale, of Philadelphia, to whom we are indebted for the portrait of Washington. There was Trumbull, the companion of Washington, and one of his military staff, who, on coming out of the war of independence, gave himself to painting and produced these works which I pronounced the chief ornament of the Rotunda. There also was Greenough, the earliest American sculptor, and, until Story took the chisel, unquestionably the most accomplished of all in the list of American sculptors. He was a scholar, versed in the languages of antiquity and modern times, who studied the art which he practiced in the literature of every tongue. Of him I never fail to speak in praise. There was Crawford, an American sculptor, born in New York, and my own intimate personal friend, whose early triumphs I witnessed and enjoyed. He was a true genius; versatile, fertile, bold. His short life was crowned by the honors of his profession, and he was hailed at home and abroad as a great sculptor. How can I speak of him except with admiration and personal attachment. I alluded also to Rogers, an American artist from the West; yes, sir, from the West—

Mr. HOWARD. Who was educated in Michigan.

Mr. SUMNER. And, as the Senator says, educated in Michigan, who has given to this Capitol and to his country those bronze doors, which I did not hesitate to compare with the immortal work of Ghiberti in the Baptistery of Florence. These, sir, were the artists to whom I referred, and such was the spirit in which I spoke. How, then, can any Senator undertake to say that I had praised foreign artists at the expense of the artists of my own country? The remark, permit me to say, is absolutely without foundation.

It is because I would not have the art of my own country suffer, and because I would have its honors follow merit, that I oppose the largess you propose. If you really wish to rear a statue of our martyred President, select one of the acknowledged sculptors of your own country. Do not go to a foreigner, and do not go to the unknown. There are sculptors born among us and already famous. Take one of them. There is Powers, an artist of rarest skill with the chisel; of exquisite finish; perhaps with less of variety and versatility than some other artists; perhaps with less of originality, but having in himself many and peculiar characteristics as a remarkable artist. Summon him to the work. He has been tried. In making a contract with him you know in advance that you will have a statue not unworthy of the appropriation you are about to make, or of the place where it is to stand.

There also is another sculptor of our country, whom I should name first of all if I were called to express freely my unbiased choice; I mean Story. He is the son of the great jurist, and began life with his father's mantle resting upon him. His works of jurisprudence are quoted daily in your courts. He is also a man of letters. His contributions to literature and poetry are in your libraries. To these he now adds unquestioned triumphs as a sculptor. In the great Exhibition of Europe his Cleopatra and his Saul have been recognized as equal to the best of our time, and, in the opinion of many, as better than the best. He brings to sculpture not only the genius of an artist, but scholarship, literature, study, and talent of every kind. Summon him to the work. Let his name be associated with the Capitol by a statue which I am sure will be an honor to our country.

I might mention other sculptors of our country. My friend who sits beside me, the distinguished Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] very properly reminds me of the sculptor who has done so much honor to his own State. Palmer has a beautiful genius, which he has cultivated for many years with sedulous care. He has experience. The seal of success has been set upon his works. Let him make your statue. There is still another artist, whose home is New York, whom I would not forget; I refer to Brown, the author of the equestrian statue of Washington in New York. Of all the equestrian statues in our country that is incomparably the best. It need not shrink from comparison with equestrian statues in the Old World. The talent that could seat the great chief so easily in that bronze saddle ought to find a welcome in this Capitol. There are yet other sculptors that I might name; but I confine my enumeration to those who have done something more than give promise of excellence. And now you turn from all this native talent, which has done so much and become so famous, to offer a difficult and honorable duty to an untried person, whose friends can claim for her nothing more than the promise of such excellence in sculpture as is consistent with the condition of her sex. Sir, I will not say anything more.

Mr. COWAN. I have come to the conclusion to vote for this resolution, and I have also come to the conclusion that this young lady, whoever she may be, is unquestionably a person of great genius; it may not be exactly in the line of sculpture, but certainly she is in that of agitation. She is occupying the talents of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, the honorable Senator from Vermont, the honorable Senator from Michigan, the honorable Senators from California, the honorable Senator from Oregon, the honorable Senator from Illinois, and several others, and has shaken and agitated this Chamber to its very center. Certainly it is no ordinary girl that can do this. [Laughter.]

I shall vote for this resolution, Mr. President, because I understand that this little child of genius has struggled up amid poverty and difficulty to this great result through the medium of her statuary. I must confess I do not know much about statuary myself. Modern statuary, I think, would be about as well made by the tailor and the shoemaker, all except the head, as by anybody else. [Laughter.] Ancient nude statuary required an exact knowledge of anatomy and of the human form in the natural state. How it is proposed to have this statue of Mr. Lincoln I am not advised. Whether it is to be draped with a Roman toga, or with a white jacket and black coat and blue pantaloons, I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADE. Perhaps with a cannon ball in his hand.

Mr. COWAN. Perhaps so. And I may here remark, in regard to that group which has been criticised, that I think that is the largest Columbus and the smallest globe I ever saw in juxtaposition. [Laughter.] The squaw is a lusty-looking wench. I do not know whether it is a good representation of a squaw or not, for I never saw many of them. In regard to the other group, I should like to ask my friend from Massachusetts if he ever saw so large a stump grow out of the belly of a dog as is there represented. [Laughter.]

Now, I think this young lady has given evidence of remarkable genius and remarkable perseverance in the way of her particular calling; and the best evidence this Congress has of it is the extraordinary excitement which she creates among the connoisseurs here. I am for patronizing native genius. I do not want any more Paradise Losts sold for five guineas. I do not want the Iliads of Homer to go down again to posterity without anybody knowing who made them, and having six or seven cities competing for the honor of giving birth to the author. If the statuary of the Capitol is in bad taste let us improve it; and I do not know any other way than to employ this young lady, who manifests such extraordinary ability, to try her hand upon it; and I am rather inclined to think, from the few specimens I have seen of her work, that she will do it. She has not made a very handsome bust of Mr. Lincoln, but that was not her fault; it was Mr. Lincoln's, because he was not a very handsome man. [Laughter.] He was a great and good man; but she could not be expected to make an Adonis of him; and I am rather inclined to think, after all, that that is the fault which has been attributed to her bust of Mr. Lincoln. My honorable friend from Michigan, in whose classic taste I have great confidence, and of whose classic learning I am assured, says that it lacks life and spirit. I think I may appeal to my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. YATES] and my friend from California, [Mr. McDOUGALL,] who will say that that is the very height of art in this young female artist in making these busts, because it was a remarkable fact that, of all the men living who perhaps had more humor in him than any one else, Mr. Lincoln was a man of the saddest face on earth. If it be true that she caught that peculiar expression of the man and put it into the bust, and his friends recognize that as a characteristic of that particular bust, that is the highest evidence of her genius.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion to vote for this resolution; and I do it from the considerations which I have mentioned; and I think they will justify me in it. I have the highest respect for the opinions of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] upon all classical subjects, and particularly upon those which relate to most of the fine arts; but in statuary I propose to follow the lead of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] who I think is infinitely superior. [Laughter.] I have always done so, and as it was a good lead I have come to the conclusion to follow it all the way through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it due to the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] that I should explain to him the fact that there is no parallel whatever between the case cited by him in the joint resolution of last year and the one now under consideration. That is what may be called an open order. It is not to be a painting which is to have fidelity to any specific truth, or to be a representation of any specific person or thing. We only appeal to the genius of the artist to produce that of which his genius is capable and nothing more—an illustration which is created in his brain representing an event in history. In this instance we appeal to fidelity to truth, to an exact representation of a recent person; and we ask, therefore, for a work which shall not only be true to art, but which shall be true to the truth of history and to the truth of personality in every particular. No statue of Lincoln ought ever to have a place in this Capitol that does not represent him as he was. I do not say that this young lady cannot form that; that is not the question; but I do say that the experience and knowledge and taste of the Senator from California ought to have taught him not to cite as a precedent for this resolution and against my amendment, the fact that at some previous time we have given an open order to an artist to produce a purely ideal work. That is all I have to say.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. With the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, it seems to me no one ought to object to the passage of this resolution.

Several SENATORS. We do not want the amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. We do not want to send the resolution back to the House.

Several SENATORS. No amendment; let us vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Senators speak with surprise of my favoring the amendment. The amendment is simply this: that when the genius of this young artist shall have produced the model, so that the Secretary of the Interior can see it, then he can determine whether to go on and have the statue made or not. That is the sensible mode of disposing of this matter. I feel as much interest in this young artist as any Senator on this floor. I desire to encourage her. She is a child of Wisconsin, born in the State of Wisconsin. This amendment gives her an opportunity to produce the model, and then in case it is produced to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior the order will be made for the work. That is the sensible way of dealing with this question.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not the pleasure of any acquaintance with this young artist; but I have seen some specimens of her work, I will say of her genius. I do not profess to be a connoisseur in works of sculpture or any of the fine arts; but it has been my fortune to see some of the earlier works of some of the most celebrated American artists in the line of sculpture, and I think that the specimens which this young lady has given us evidence about as high gifts and as much genius in that line as any I have seen. This young lady has presented her specimens of art to the observation of the Senate and of Congress. She has fairly exhibited to them what she can produce in that line; and it is for Congress to take her upon trust, after having seen what she can achieve in this way, to the extent I think of $5,000 for the model. I was indisposed at first to vote for this resolution; but I am satisfied from the discussion that I ought to do it. I am satisfied that she has given sufficient evidence as an artist of high endowment and genius in this respect to authorize us to do it. In addition to that I am impelled by the universal claims of womanhood to do so in consideration of the manner in which she has been assailed on the present occasion; and impelled by these considerations I shall give a hearty and a cordial support to the measure.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to have the pending amendment reported.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line eight, after the word "plaster" to insert "to his acceptance;" so that the resolution will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to contract with Miss Vinnie Ream for a life-size model and statue of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, to be executed by her at a price not exceeding $10,000; one half payable on completion of the model in plaster to his acceptance, and the remaining half on completion of the statue in marble to his acceptance.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that amendment will be adopted. I desire Senators to recollect one thing connected with this matter, and it is a very plain one: It is this: this artist, whatever may be her genius or want of genius, has never made a marble statue. Where is the member of this body that can deny that statement? Shall we employ an artist to perform such a work as this—a statue which we are expected to put in the Capitol, one worthy of its great subject and of the nation itself—who has never even made a statue? In the common transactions of life, in ordinary business, what would such a step as this be called? I will not characterize it further than merely to state the fact. I cannot vote for a measure like this to employ an artist who has had absolutely no experience in making statues.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this question. Let us see who are going to give the money away.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPRAGUE (when his name was called) said: I have paired off with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH,] who is necessarily engaged on a committee of conference. Otherwise I should vote for the amendment and against the resolution, and he would vote against the amendment and for the resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Doolittle, Edmunds, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Ramsey, and Sumner—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Cresswell, Davis, Foster, Guthrie, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Willey, Wilson, and Wright—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is very evident that a majority of the Senate are determined to pass this resolution, and there is no use in making further opposition to it. Let us come to a vote upon it. ["Vote!" "Vote!"] After that I want to move an executive session.

Mr. SUMNER. Move it now.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, I will not do it now. The Senate evidently want to come to a vote on this question, and I will not interfere. ["Question!" "Question!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as debate terminates.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Cresswell, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Fowler, Guthrie, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Edmunds, Howard, Kirkwood,

Lane, Morgan, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Willey—9.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Morrill, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the joint resolution was passed.

ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now move an executive session.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a report.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will yield for that purpose, if my motion will be considered as pending.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage; and I hope that the Senate will proceed to its consideration at once.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope we shall take that bill into present consideration.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There are objections to that bill, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, it cannot be considered at the present time.

PROVISIONAL COURT IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. POLAND. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 468, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary without any amendment, and will take but a moment. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This is all subject to my motion for an executive session, I presume. If that bill will take but a moment while the galleries are being cleared, I will not object; but I want to have an order now for an executive session, and then Senators can pass these little matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we may be allowed to act on one or two little bills.

Mr. POLAND. The bill I desire to take up will not interfere with the executive session.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I make the motion for an executive session. It is necessary that certain papers be referred. After we go into executive session, the doors can be considered open from time to time to consider these other matters, and in that way we can dispose of much of this business that must be done and at the same time go on with the executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has withdrawn his objection, as I understand, to the consideration of House bill No. 801, just reported by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will be withdrawn for me.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There is objection to that award bill.

Mr. POLAND. I believe I had the floor on moving to take up House bill No. 468.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion for an executive session was made while the President pro tempore was in the Chair.

Mr. POLAND. I think no motion was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the motion was pending when the President pro tempore called the present occupant to the Chair. If that be not the case, the Senator from Vermont is entitled to the Chair.

Mr. POLAND. The Senator from Wisconsin gave notice that he would make the motion. I hope this bill will be taken up. We could have passed it in half the time that has been taken in discussing the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont having the floor, unless he yielded it to the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Wisconsin could not make the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLARK. He made the motion before the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] made his report.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I made the motion for an executive session; and by unanimous consent, while the galleries were being cleared, preliminary to final action, some one asked permission to take up a little bill, and it was done informally, but subject, as I supposed, to the motion I had made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If such be the state of facts, the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is in order. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

Mr. POLAND. While the galleries are being cleared, I ask that the doors may be considered open in order to take up the bill I have named.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana. It proposes to transfer all suits, causes, prosecutions, and proceedings in the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana, with its records to the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana; and all suits, causes, prosecutions, and proceedings so transferred are to be proceeded with in that court and tried and determined, and process and judgment issued and executed therein in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been commenced originally in the district court; but any suit or proceeding so transferred, of which the circuit court could take jurisdiction under the laws of the United States is, in like manner to be heard and determined in the circuit court.

In case suits or proceedings are pending in the provisional court which could not have been instituted in the circuit or district court, the record is to remain in the district court without further action therein. All judgments, orders, decrees, and decisions of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana, relating to the causes transferred to the district court of the eastern district of Louisiana, or to the circuit court held in the district, are at once to become the judgments, orders, decrees, and decisions of the district court, or the circuit court, unless they are inconsistent with the rules and proceedings thereof; and may be enforced, pleaded, and proved, as the judgments, orders, decrees, or decisions of the district court or the circuit court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL LEWIS F. FIX.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope that by general consent the doors will be considered open and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) for the relief of Colonel Lewis F. Fix. It is a very small matter, but it is very important to him that it should pass.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let the executive messages be read and referred, and then I will consent.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It will take but a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Very well; I will not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now I insist on the executive session.

The Senate (at twelve o'clock and twenty minutes) proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and the doors were reopened at twenty minutes before two o'clock a. m., Saturday, July 28.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 816) for the relief of Rebecca J. Sheppard, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 400, to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, recommend that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out, including the words inserted by the House, all after the words "deputy collector," in line nine, page 2 of the bill, down to and including the word "customs," in the fourteenth line, same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "at the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, and to each of the general appraisers of local customs of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $3,000 per annum. To each of the deputy naval officers and the deputy surveyors at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $2,500; and to each of the custom-house weighers at the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $2,000 per annum, out of the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs: Provided, That the additional compensation of twenty-five per cent., as now provided by law, shall be continued to officers, as aforesaid, at the port of San Francisco;" and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM T. WILLEY,
SAMUEL HOOPER,
JOHN L. THOMAS,
GLENNI W. SCOFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 791) being "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, numbered six, eight, eleven, twenty, twenty-one, and thirty, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered sixteen and twenty-six.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered seventeen, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: insert in the second line of said amendment, after the word "expenses," the word "actually," and in the sixth and seventh lines of said amendment strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out all after the word "dollars," in line four, to the end of the section.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered twenty-eight, and agree to the same.

C. R. BUCKALEW,
JOHN A. KASSON,
H. J. RAYMOND,
SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will give us some statement of the points.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can do that by taking up the bill and examining it.

Mr. CONNESS. A brief statement is all I desire.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose there is no information wanted in regard to the amendments to which the House agree. We recede from our sixteenth amendment, which was an appropriation of $40,000 to pay the indebtedness for the Indian service in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington. We recede from the twenty-sixth amendment, which was an appropriation of $600 for compensation to a clerk engaged in the sale of internal revenue stamps in California. We recede from the twenty-eighth amendment, which related to the payment of sums due to marshals and others for taking the census in the South. The twenty-seventh amendment is arranged so as to meet the provision of the bill in regard to allowances to our clerks, &c.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following Senate bills without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 43) to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians; and

A bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a report from the committee of conference on the civil or miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 16, 19, 32, 33, 48, 49, and 55, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered 4, 14, 15, 17, 24, 25, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the ninth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their amendment to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their amendment to the fifty-second amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: at the end of said amendment add the following: "And provided further, That the pay of the Speaker shall be $8,000 per annum."

That the House recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out the words following: "for the continuation of the work on the north portico of the Patent Office building, $50,000;" and also recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out as follows: on page 7, line eight, from the word "for" down to and including the word "dollars" in line fourteen, with an amendment as follows: insert last clause strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty," and the Senate agree to the same, and also to so much of the amendment of the House to the said twenty-second amendment as proposes to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line two, on page 7, down to and including the word "necessary," in line eight on the same page.

That the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment numbered fifty-four, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: in line two, after the word "clerks," insert "committee clerks;" in line three, after the words "messengers and," insert "all;" in same line, after the word "Senate," insert "and House of Representatives, and to the Globe and official reporters of each House, and the stenographer of the House, and to the Capitol police, and the three superintendents of public gardens and their clerks and assistants."

JOHN SHERMAN,
W. P. FESSENDEN,
REVERDY JOHNSON,
THADDEUS STEVENS,
F. C. LE BLOND,

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course, from the mere reading of the skeleton report Senators will not understand what has been done, but I desire to state what has been done with the amendments.

The Senate recede from the amendment with regard to the alteration of the Senate Chamber; the House were decidedly against it. The Senate recede from the appropriation of a million and a half for the levees in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, the House having by a very decided vote committed themselves against it, and the conferees on the part of the House being decidedly opposed to it. The Senate also recede from some minor amendments.

The House recede from their disagreement to the amendment in regard to Dr. Baxter's report, and adopt it. They have also agreed to the action of the Senate as to certain light-houses and some Indian treaties. They have also agreed to the St. Paul custom-house, but the amount is reduced to $50,000. The amendment increasing the pay of midshipmen by allowing them a ration per day is concurred in.

In regard to the question of the compensation of members, I may say that the House took us by surprise. The vote of the House was so very decided against that amendment to-day that I supposed nothing was left for us but to abandon the amendment, which the Senate conferees were prepared to do, but the House conferees receded from their disagreement, and therefore the amendment was concurred in and it stands in the bill just as we sent it to the House. There was no action on that question on the part of the conferees of the Senate except simply to obey the action of the Senate. The House conferees relieved us from all trouble on that point.

The Senate amendment proposing an allowance of twenty per cent. to the employes of the Senate was amended so as to include the employes of the House of Representatives in the same percentage, and the provisions inserted by the House in the deficiency bill on that subject were as a matter of course abandoned, so that the employes of the House and Senate each get twenty per cent. additional. It is extended also to the reporters of the Globe in both Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it include the Capitol police?

Mr. SUMNER. And the clerks of the committees?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, all the employes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And the reporters also in our House as well as in the other?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes sir. The House

recede from the proposed increase of compensation to the clerks, &c., in the Departments.

As for the bounty bill tacked on by the House, —the only remaining question that I have not mentioned—the House recede from that and the bill stands without any provision on that subject.

I have now, I believe, stated pretty much all the points involved.

Mr. WADE. I cannot consent that this bill shall go out in the shape it is in. That the bounty to the soldiers shall be entirely stricken off and that our own compensation shall be increased will be a reproach to this Congress that we cannot stand. Here was this great army looking to us for some relief, for some equalization of their bounties; and when they see that we had under consideration in one bill a proposition to make them some compensation and also a proposition to increase our own pay, and that the result is that we totally abandon them while we nearly double our own salary, the result among the people will be to sink the party that has done it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Both parties have done it.

Mr. WADE. Both parties have done it; but we are in the majority, and are justly responsible and will be held responsible for all that is done.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say to my colleague that the Senate conferees felt just as keenly as he can, or as any one can, that position; and we were prepared and went into the conference-room prepared to abandon the amendment in regard to our pay. I stated before distinctly, as I wished the whole matter perfectly understood, that we proposed to abandon it, but the House conferees left us no ground to stand upon. They withdrew their disagreement, and that was the end of the contest, though it so happened that a majority of the House conferees had voted against the increase of compensation in the House.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio whether a committee of conference representing the Senate is not bound to stand by the Senate's vote in favor of what they have done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already stated that we could not do otherwise than as we have done; but after conversation with many Senators who had voted for this increase of compensation, in view of the large vote in the House against it, we should have been justified in withdrawing the proposition; but the House conferees would not allow us to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the House conferees behaved much better in relation to that point than the Senate conferees did. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADE. I am not investigating the conduct of the committee of conference. They no doubt have done all they could, and as well as they knew how to do it; but looking at this bill, taking the two propositions to which I have called attention in juxtaposition, the result is so invidious that no man can defend this action, no man can go out among the people to discuss political questions and look an honest congregation in the face and say he stands by the proceedings on this bill. I should like to receive this money, as well as anybody else; and I would do almost anything that was honest to get money; but I cannot do it in this way. We must in some way get rid of the position in which we are now placed. We must at all events give up our own increase of pay, which will be some consolation to the soldiers; but if we double or nearly double our own pay while we refuse to do anything to equalize the soldiers' bounties, I fear that it will be the last of us, and it ought to be.

Mr. YATES. I concur entirely with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] This course in relation to the equalization of bounties will be astounding to the country. From the Northwest I have information by numerous letters that the effect will be to overwhelm the party which commits itself to such a course. I speak not of the proposed increase in the pay of members; I think that is right. I can stand by that as an independent proposition; but if we fail to equalize bounties the effect will be to reduce our majority in the next Congress, and reduce it so materially that we shall not have the power. That is my honest conviction; and if we act in this way, I believe we ought not to have the power. I think the equalization of bounties is demanded; it is an act of justice to the soldiers; and I do hope that Congress will not adjourn till an equalization is secured. I would be in favor of extending the time of adjournment in order that we might give consideration to that matter. I feel sure that in the north-western States we cannot sustain ourselves upon any such proposition as that now presented to the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. As to the matter of congressional salaries I can speak without the slightest embarrassment, because by the amendment on that subject my compensation is reduced about $2,000 a year by cutting down the mileage. I think the bill ought to pass, and I do not think anybody will complain of this Congress for paying themselves $5,000 a year. I do not think any man is fit to be in Congress who cannot earn that amount elsewhere. I believe the people are willing to pay and desirous to pay what it costs an economical man to live. If you pay less than that you must necessarily have here one of two classes of men; you must either have men in Congress who are willing to become dependent upon others, which will destroy their usefulness, or you must have rich men. You must reserve these places for the rich or give them to the unworthy. There are many of our best men who cannot afford to spend their time here unless they get enough to support them. The people do not want men of moderate means excluded from Congress. They are willing that members of Congress shall have what it costs them to live here.

As to the bounty question, I have simply this to say: the country should know that the finances are not in such a condition that we can equalize the bounties this year without disarranging the whole system. The Secretary of the Treasury has so assured me. Besides, we have not yet had a bill that did equalize the bounties. It has not been matured. There is plenty of time in the future for such a measure. I believe it is better to give what we have to give away in the shape of increased pensions to those who have been wounded. That is more immediately necessary. I do not think any great harm will come from a failure to pass a bounty bill at this session. The soldiers will not distrust the Union party that has endeavored to do so much for them, and is willing to do all that the finances of the country will permit, and is anxious to accomplish the grand result as early as possible. They will not distrust the Union party, but will trust it, believing that justice will ultimately be done as soon as the finances will permit. The benefit of an equalization of bounties goes to well men; men who can get along; can manage to live, at any rate, until we meet next year, when justice will be done. We have not been able to obtain sufficient facts upon which to adjust the bounties so that every man shall be served alike; and rather than have a crude measure passed, I believe the people would prefer to wait until we prepare a thorough and complete bill and do full justice.

Mr. WILSON. I am decidedly opposed to concurring in this report. I believe that there are six or seven hundred thousand men who enlisted from the 19th of April, 1861, to the 17th of October, 1863, who received a bounty of $100, and no more, who think the Government ought to equalize their bounties with those of others, or at least give them some additional compensation. They believed so in the field when they saw new recruits come into service by their side with seven or eight hundred dollars bounty. These veterans who enlisted from the loftiest motives, and who were to receive the small pittance of $100, believed the country would do them justice. It was so understood in the Army, so talked of among officers. And now I believe that by this Congress, or over this Congress, the equalization or the increase of bounties will be carried. I am opposed to concurring in this report without making an effort to secure to the men who enlisted for a bounty of $100 some consideration. I believe it to be right. I believe it to be highly expedient.

Now, sir, a word in regard to the increase of our own compensation. I voted for it. I voted for it because I thought in itself it was right. I think so now. I have been here twelve years, and if I should die to-night I would not leave enough to buy me a pine coffin. I believe this increase is right in itself, and ought to be made. But I cannot vote to increase the compensation of members of Congress and at the same time vote to strike off the bounties which the House has put upon the bill for our veteran soldiers. I do not believe it to be wise or expedient to do so.

I am somewhat surprised at the statement made here to-night that a portion of the conference committee representing the Senate were ready to strike off the increase of compensation of members of Congress, and that portion of the committee representing a House which had unanimously, with only three exceptions, voted against this increase, insisted upon keeping it in the bill. That is a strange mode of proceeding; it is a discreditable mode of proceeding, and the country will so pronounce it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I rise to a question of order. I submit that it is not in order for a gentleman here to comment upon the proceedings of the other House.

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to say anything that is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY.) The Chair apprehends that remarks reflecting on the other House are not in order.

Mr. WILSON. Sir, if I have made any such remarks, I withdraw them. I do not wish to say anything out of order; but my opinion of such action remains unchanged.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he desire to reduce in the next Congress the number of Union men?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir, I do not; just the contrary; but I think I see the Treasury Department of the Government, although there are $200,000,000 in the Treasury, using all its power and influence to defeat any bounty bill, and I notice that the new friends and allies of the Secretary of the Treasury are meeting in every county and congressional district and wherever they can assemble together, and denouncing Congress for not equalizing bounties. I see these things; I know their effect; I wish to put Congress right now. When the storm comes, if it shall come, I do not mean that any one shall say that I did not do all in my power to avert it. It is plain to my mind that at any rate if we defeat any bounty bill we should not give increased compensation to any of the employés of this Government or to ourselves. Let the country understand, let the men who fought our battles understand, that it was the condition of the Treasury which would not permit us to increase our own compensation or the compensation of our employés, or to pay them any additional bounty. There would be reason and justice in that, and as I have no doubt of the patriotism of the soldiers of the country, I believe they would look at things as they are. If anybody supposes that if the defenders of the country see us increase our own compensation and the compensation of the employés of this Government while we do nothing for them, it will have no effect in this country, he is very much mistaken. Justice to the men who enlisted from the 19th of April, 1861, to the 17th of October, 1863, for the bounty of $100 and no more, demands that we should give them at least an additional bounty of $100. Refuse to concur in this report which rejects the Senate bill for the equalization of bounties put on it by the vote of the House, appoint another committee, and then the matter may be adjusted by the adoption of a plan I have provided and placed in the hands of a member of the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The ground upon which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts opposes the acceptance of this report is to me a little singular. It is that in two cases the decision of the conference has been in accordance with the votes of the Senate. The Senate voted by a very decided majority, aided by the Senator's own vote, to increase the compensation of members of Congress. The Senate voted by an almost equally decided vote not to pass the bounty measure which he offered as an amendment to this bill. The committee of conference now report on both those points precisely what the Senate wished, judging by their votes, and now the Senator says he cannot vote for the conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. And he voted for this bill on its passage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, he voted for the bill on its passage through the Senate in just the shape in both these respects that it is now. The Senator's position looks to me a little singular; he places himself in an odd kind of attitude. I have been in the habit of thinking that when a man had his own way he ought to be satisfied.

Mr. WILSON. I have not had it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senate has had its own way in both instances; the decision of the conference committee is exactly in accordance with the votes of the Senate. The Senate conferees were under orders to accomplish these very results, if we could. They have both been accomplished in accordance with very decided votes of the Senate; and now gentlemen say "We cannot agree to the acceptance of the report." I think the committee of conference have a right to claim the support of the majority of the Senate, by whose orders they acted and in accordance with whose wishes the report has been drawn up and submitted.

With regard to these matters I did not intend and do not think it desirable to have any dispute. I have often said what was my rule of action: if I made a mistake in the transaction of business I generally kept it to myself as long as I could and let other people find it out; when they found it out it would be time enough for me to defend myself and to explain why I did what I did, or to apologize for it. But the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] as good politicians, excellent party men, having the good of all at heart, think it advisable to notify the country that there has been a very great mistake and to call upon the country to visit it upon them and their friends by turning them out of office! I think they might just as well have waited a little while, at any rate. I believe it is the substance of an old Arabian maxim that I have seen somewhere, "If your friend commits a fault, cover it with your mantle." But the doctrine of my two friends seems to be in regard to their friends in the Senate and in Congress, if they commit an error blazon it to the world, make the most of it, and invite everybody to punish them accordingly. It is most admirable sense, admirable management! Now, sir, I think as the thing was done and it cannot be helped—

Mr. WILSON. It is not done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then it might have been opposed in different terms, in my judgment. I do not agree with the Senators. I think that the passage of the bounty bill at this session would have been most decidedly an error, and a gross one, for two or three reasons. In the first place, no such bill was devised until the last moment, when we had no time to consider it, and then it was sprung upon an appropriation bill. Again, no bill has been devised that was in any way an equalization or could have been made an equalization of bounties that would not have created as much dissatisfaction and as much grumbling through the country as it would create satisfaction. None has been devised in either House. Another thing: the one that was rejected by the Senate, and which the House adopted as an amendment to this bill, is one that would take out of the Treasury certainly not less than $350,000,000.

Mr. WILSON. Oh, no; I know better.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator does not know better. Very good calculators and very good judges place it higher.

Mr. WILSON. General Brice estimated it at $250,000,000 and Mr. Brodhead about the same.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But that is a great deal too much to take out of the Treasury in the present state of things.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not there to take.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We should have to borrow the money and increase our national debt. If the thing is to be done it should be accurately done, carefully done, done upon correct principles, those that will be satisfactory after it is done, and not a helter-skelter, higgledy-piggledy arrangement that no one can understand the effect of, except that it does not equalize anything.

That is one reason why I think no such measure should be adopted, at this session at least. Besides, I think that before any such great measure is adopted somebody else should be heard from besides those interested in it, the soldiers themselves. I think that nothing will be lost by inquiring of our constituents—and when I say "our constituents," I do not mean the soldiers alone, but I mean all our constituents—and finding out what public opinion really is on this subject. My own notion is that public opinion is not so decided as gentlemen suppose, when you get out of the influence of those who have been soldiers themselves; and I do not look upon it as a matter of principle that with the present heavy national debt upon us we should increase it by this large amount for this purpose, without very great deliberation and without an understanding of what we are doing, and unless it be in answer to a very decided call of the people, and not of mere soldiers' and sailors' conventions held for the purpose of accomplishing the object.

Another reason in my mind is, that it is not the payment of a debt. All our debts in that direction have been paid; it is strictly a bounty, a gift, nothing more nor less, and as a gift it will amount to the very large sum stated. Not being a debt to be paid, but being a gift, a very serious question arises whether it would be a sensible or even a popular measure after it was done. You may give to the soldiers $100 apiece if you please, make them a present of that much; it lasts but a few days, they have the pleasure it confers for a short time; but the taxation endures for years and years; and it would not be long in my judgment before those who were instrumental in thus enlarging the debt would be held to quite as severe an account as will now be those who refuse to make this gift; and there is time to make it hereafter if the people call for it and will sustain it. These are my opinions, and I express them in answer to what has been said in regard to the effect of a defeat of a measure of this kind.

I did not vote for the increase of our own pay, for the simple reason that, in my judgment, it was better to defer action upon that subject; but a majority of the Senate overruled me. I agree most fully that the compensation of members of Congress, considering their position, considering their expenses, considering what they have to do from year to year, and what they have to bear, is the most miserable compensation paid to any officers of the Government or any persons connected with it that I know of. I have felt it for years. I have borne it because I chose to bear it. There are others, perhaps, not so well able to bear it as I am. The Senate decided that it was proper to increase the compensation. It is not for me to quarrel with the decision of the Senate on that or any other subject. In this committee of conference I represented the Senate. I was disposed and ready to carry out the decision of the Senate; but still I believed that under the circumstances that might as well be deferred, and feeling that the Senate was content that it should be deferred to another session of Congress, I was disposed to let it go out of the bill, although it would have been a stretch of power in the committee of conference, perhaps, that might have been remarked upon. If there had been a collision between the House and the Senate on that point, as one must yield, we thought it advisable that the Senate should yield; but as the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] has stated, the question did not arise whether we ought to yield or whether we could yield. That was not allowed to us from the course taken by the representatives of the other House in the conference. All we had to do was to represent the Senate, and being able to obtain the carrying out of the views of the Senate on these two points, we did so. There is the simple state of the fact.

Now, sir, I have great confidence in the judgment of the people. I am not afraid of their decision. I never have been. The same outcry was raised when our compensation was somewhat increased about ten years ago. But there was no real complaint made of it except in some papers that wanted to make party capital out of it. The people were perfectly satisfied with it; and I think they will be satisfied now when they come to reflect and know that there is not a member of this Congress living in this city who can support himself, or begin to support himself, at the expenses here, upon what he receives for compensation. That is the fact. It is the fact with regard to myself; and although I was willing to bear it longer, to continue the present inadequate compensation might be very great injustice to others who have not, perhaps, the same ability to bear it that I have—great injustice, perhaps, to my friend from Massachusetts himself. I am perfectly willing to leave that matter to the people, in the full confidence that the people of this country, knowing what their public servants are and what they do will judge them leniently and kindly.

With regard to the other question, there is a difference of opinion; it involves hundreds of millions; it must necessarily throw a greatly increased burden on the Treasury, not in payment of a debt, not to support persons in the rendering of services in the present or in the future, but to pay for past services which have been settled fully according to law, by a gift, a bounty. Well, sir, if that is justly due, the time will come when it will be paid, and paid, as I said before, under a proper bill and one that does really equalize the bounties. I am not afraid to meet the judgment of the people on both questions.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is a year or two since I expressed my judgment to the Senate in regard to this question of bounty. I then affirmed what I desire now to reaffirm, that it is the obligation of every citizen of this Republic, poor or rich, to render his service in war when it is called for. I do not know why the poor man, "the publican and the sinner," should do more battle than the rich man who lives in a palace. It is my opinion, and has been always, that the great men of a State, the public men of a State, the men of large possessions, the men of large wealth should be at the front of armies. It was so at Marathon; it was so at Plataea; it was so in the old Roman times. We have adopted a miserable, false, and cowardly policy whereby we allow a person, who is under obligation to go, because he has something to maintain in the front of battle, to hire, for a trifling thing, a man to take his place. From the first I have opposed that policy; I have said "Every man demanded for the service, to his place; no bounties." I have said there should be no differences between the individuals who constitute the nation; the rich must fight as well as the poor; and therefore no bounties, no substitutes. So have I always said; so I now say.

Our present experience enables us to recognize the fact that our policy was wrong. We came into our late war without experience; we traveled through it ignorantly; that is, most of us ignorantly, and particularly so the persons intrusted with administration; consequently they did not understand the policies that underlie the incorporation of the elements of war among a people. Otherwise this would not have been a war of four years; twelve months would have sufficed; and we should not have lost hundreds of thousands of men. We have wandered far away from the true philosophy of the conducting of the elements of warlike organization.

But, sir, I do not care to discuss this question. I care simply to throw out some things that are truths, which should be recorded because they are exact truths, and belong to the history and belong to the records of the nation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg leave to say a word, as I represent a small number of the soldiers of the Union—very small, it is true, because of those whom Vermont sent to the war more fell in battle than from any other State except the gallant State of Kansas, as the official records show; but still enough have returned to influence in a certain degree public sentiment, and to represent to us fairly, probably, what the real sentiments of the soldiers are. Now, so far as my knowledge goes, and I am informed by other Senators that it concurs with theirs, the real soldier, above all other things, loves justice and fair play. He does not want a bounty which is taken out of the pocket of some other soldier to pay him; he does not want a bounty, well and hale and strong himself, to crown the honor that he has gained in warfare, while the widow of any brother soldier, or his orphan, or while any brother wounded soldier is pining for the necessities of life. He does not want the Government's money under any such circumstances. He does not want the money of the Government while men who have not been in the service, but have been in the troubled sections of the country, and who have been crucified on account of their love to the old flag are still unprovided for in every respect whatever.

That, sir, so far as my knowledge goes, is the sentiment which fills the bosom of the true soldier. How many, I should be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts tell me, of those seven hundred thousand that he parades before us have petitioned either House of Congress for this bounty? Is it one in a thousand? Is it one in ten thousand?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Possibly. Call it one in ten thousand then.

Mr. WILSON. We have thousands of petitions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How authentic they are we do not know. Who are the agents; who are the speculators; who are the politicians—because the category would be incomplete without them—that are pressing this scheme, and through what means is it that the result is to be obtained? There have been brought upon us bill after bill upon this subject which had to all appearance an origin (if I may say so with all respect to the Senator from Massachusetts) in some military grab-bag, without form or comeliness, not providing in one of them at all for those who have perished or have been lost in anywise to their ability to serve themselves or to be useful to the country, from disease; another which, while it professes to equalize bounties, says to the man who reenlisted in 1863 or 1864, and served his country through, "You must take out of your pocket a part of the bounty which we paid to you, and pay it to your brother in the same regiment who did not reenlist but went home, as an act of equalization, as an act of justice." It does not deserve the name, Mr. President. Then when you turn to the soldier as a citizen, as a tax-payer, as a member of the great body of the community, you say to the soldier of an eastern State, "You shall receive nothing of this bounty," as the House bill provided he should not, "but you shall pay out of your treasure and the accumulations of your earnings to the soldier of some western State that has not been provided for."

I believe the soldiers of the western States, gallant and just men as they are, would scorn to take money raised in such a way, because it is unjust and unequal.

I do not want to be told that I am opposed to the soldier and am not willing to do justice to him, because these crude and unperfected and unjust and unequal schemes are forced upon us on an appropriation bill at the last moment of the session, and gentlemen with high words for the benefit of their party tell us that we are to lose votes because we are not providing for the soldier! It is not statesmanship; it is not justice; it ought not to prevail.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say a word or two in response to the remarks made by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the honorable Senator permit me to introduce a joint resolution containing two sections? It is evident that we cannot do anything in regard to bounties on this bill; but possibly we may pass this joint resolution which I desire to introduce. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Secretary read the proposed resolution. It proposes to direct the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to prepare and submit to Congress at the next session a bill to equalize the bounties paid to the soldiers of the United States by the Federal Government by issuing to them land-warrants, with power to locate them upon the reserved alternate sections along the line of the various railroad grants through the public domain. It also proposes to authorize the heads of the several Departments to submit to Congress at the next session bills for the reorganization of their clerks and employes and for a proper adjustment of their salaries; and to grant from the first Monday of December last to the 4th of March next twenty per cent. additional to their respective salaries to those clerks and employes who are heads of families.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let that lie over until to-morrow. I want to have this bill settled to-night; it has got to be enrolled.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We cannot do anything with the bounty business on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution cannot be received, objection being made. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on House bill No. 737.

Mr. WILSON. I think there was something in the tone of the Senator from Vermont that neither he nor I have a right to assume in this body. He is pleased to characterize the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate as a crude measure; and what is his criticism upon it? Why, this one single thing, easily corrected: that if a man left the service of the country on account of sickness he could not have his bounty beyond the time he served, while the man who left the service on account of wounds that were clear and palpable to anybody could receive his bounty as though he had served out his entire enlistment. That is all there is in the Senator's criticism.

Sir, permit me to say that this bill was drawn with great care, that it was put into the hands of four or five men connected with the Government in the War and in the Navy Departments, and I say here to-day that it was a perfect equalization as far as the Federal Government is concerned; and there is not a single section of that bill that is not clear and plain to the comprehension of all men who understand how business is done in those offices—in the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, and what we intend to accomplish. I do not measure myself with the Senator from Vermont in regard to a knowledge of public opinion, although I have lived quite as long as that Senator, and looked in the faces of quite as many thousand men as himself. He may be right in this matter; I hope he is; but according to my poor comprehension, there is not a press in the country hostile to the measures of Congress—and there are many presses that are hostile both to the measures and to the men, whether that hostility comes from one cause or another—that will not from the day this Congress adjourns till we meet again hold up before the country, and thereby endeavor to affect the public judgment, the fact that this Congress increases the compensation of its employes and its own and casts out entirely all measures to give bounty to the soldiers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have not given any bounty to ourselves, have we?

Mr. WILSON. No; but we have given increased compensation.

Mr. HENDERSON. One Senator is reduced $2,000.

Mr. WILSON. And his mileage ought to have been reduced long ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you call that an increase?

Mr. WILSON. It is an increase generally. Some of the Pacific members do not get an increase, and I think, considering how long they have enjoyed the great privilege of the mileage, they ought to bear it well. I want this matter corrected now before we part. Then let this bill go to another conference committee and let the committee strike our increased compensation out of it or put a bounty provision into it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We cannot do either.

Mr. WILSON. I do not agree with the Senator from Maine. I know we can put a bounty provision into it, and I hope we shall do so yet. I look to the House. If I could do no better I would take the House bill, which is an unequal measure, because it professes to be an equalization of bounties when it departs from the equal basis of calculation—the bounties paid by the Federal Government—and undertakes to deduct what was paid by the States and the local authorities. There is no equalization in that. Instead of eight and a third dollars a month, which is a perfect and absolute equalization on the part of the Federal Government, being the basis, it must be at least twenty dollars a month, and you would have to pay proportionately.

But, sir, I would rather take that than get nothing. It would not cost fifty millions altogether. I have been accused of acting improperly because I tried to get the measure put on this appropriation bill. I tried day after day to get up the bounty bill as a separate measure; I had it made a special order on three several occasions. After my amendment was voted down to this very bill I tried to get up the House bounty bill with the view of offering an amendment to it which would give to every soldier who enlisted for $100 bounty and no more, which includes the men enlisted from April, 1861, to October 17, 1863, an additional $100. About eleven hundred thousand men thus enlisted, and to those of them who complied with the law and the regulations of the Department and have received their $100 I would give another $100, not as an equalization but as an adjustment on the ground of equity. That would take from sixty-five to seventy millions; there is no mistaking what that would take.

I shall vote against concurrence in this report in the hope that the bill will go back to this or some other committee, and that this matter will be changed; and if the Senate does not do it, I confidently hope the House will. Reject this report; send it to the same or another committee, and let the committee modify the Senate amendment put on the bill by the House by the amendment I have prepared, and which I intend to move as an amendment to the House bill if I can get it up, and I intend to ask the Senate to do so as soon as this report is acted upon.

This amendment provides—

That to each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States from the 15th day of April, 1861, to the 17th of October, 1863, for a period of not less than two years, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, and who has received, or is entitled to receive, from the United States, under existing laws, a bounty of $100, and no more, shall be paid an additional bounty of $100, and any such soldier enlisted for not less than two years, who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow or heirs of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States, shall be paid the additional bounty hereby authorized: Provided, That any soldier who has bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not be entitled to receive any additional bounty whatever; and when application is made by any soldier for said bounty he shall be required, under the pains and penalties of perjury, to make oath or affirmation of his identity, and that he has not so bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, exchanged, loaned, or given away either his discharge papers or any interest in any bounty as aforesaid, and no claim for such bounty shall be entertained by the Paymaster General or other accounting or disbursing officer, except upon receipt of the claimant's discharge papers, accompanied by the statement under oath, as by this section provided.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in the payment of the additional bounty herein provided for, it shall be the duty of the Paymaster General, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to cause to be examined the accounts of each and every soldier who makes application therefor, and if found entitled thereto, payment shall be made in bonds of the United States payable after twenty years with interest at five per cent. per annum, said bonds to be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the reception, examination, settlement, and payment of claims for said additional bounty due the widows or heirs of deceased soldiers, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be governed by the restrictions prescribed for the Paymaster General by the Secretary of War, and the payment shall be made in like manner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

This plan will do something for the six or seven hundred thousand veterans who enlisted the first two and a half years of the war for the small bounty of $100, the noble men who bore the brunt of the fight. I commend it to the committee of conference if the report shall not be accepted and it goes to a committee. If the House rejects the report, and I am assured that it will do so by a large majority, this plan of mine will be presented to the committee as a modification of the amendment adopted by the House, and I am not without hope that it will be agreed to by the committee of conference and sustained by both Houses of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have now debated this question one hour, when there is not a single provision in this bill as it stands that was not in it when it passed the Senate by a unanimous vote. The very propositions about which this contest has been made were settled in the same way in the bill as it then stood and as it was voted for by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. That is very true; but I understand that the House were to put on the bounty bill as they have done.

Mr. SHERMAN. They proposed to put on the bounty bill; but in the conference they withdrew that, so that the bill now stands precisely as it stood when it passed the Senate; and yet you are debating about it? Is it not a strange spectacle? The House may have a controversy about it; but we passed this bill in the very words in which it now stands, unanimously. We settled both the disputed propositions by decided votes. The Senate conferees simply stood by the action of the Senate, and succeeded in maintaining that action by the House withdrawing all their counter-propositions. Now, the very bill that passed the Senate unanimously after debate is brought back here, and you talk about rejecting it because the House conferees withdrew from our consideration their amendments and agreed to the bill as we passed it. How ridiculous an aspect that is for the Senate! It seems to me we ought to end this matter at once and send the bill to the House.

Mr. WADE. I have no disposition to find fault with what the Senate or what Congress has done on this subject. I know they are very difficult questions of adjustment, and I have as much confidence in the justice of the people as other gentlemen have; and when I spoke of the way the people would view this, I did it because I know that the people will judge us as they ought to do, on the principles of justice and right, as between man and man. I am afraid of their judgment on this proceeding, because I know they will judge it honestly and properly. The Senator from Maine told us that the people had not moved upon this subject, or words to that effect; that the soldiers had asked nothing at our hands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not say the soldiers.

Mr. WADE. I do not understand it to be so. I can scarcely take up a paper in which I do not find that the soldiers of the late army are gathering themselves together in conventions, and forming leagues for the purpose of endeavoring to induce the Government to do them some measure of justice and equality for the services they have rendered. It is very true we did not contract that we would equalize the bounties; but as we progressed along with this war under circumstances of such great inequality as to the compensation the soldiers received, they could not fail to know, as everybody saw, that the justice of the people would somehow rectify the inequality, and do them some measure of justice. They did talk of it then; they expected that we would do something to rectify these evils; they expect it now, and they have moved, and are moving, everywhere upon this subject; and it is all vain and idle for us to shut our eyes to the fact that the people are moving upon this subject, and taking it into the most solemn and serious consideration. The brave men who have gone forth and encountered the perils and hardships of war are just men, lovers of their country; but they have as keen a sense of justice and equality in the compensation that the Government ought to bestow upon them for the service they have rendered as anybody else; and they know as the thing stands now that it is not equal or right between them. And when we see this great army moving on this subject, and see that it has no effect upon Congress, I know well enough what will be the result. I know what course partisans and politicians will pursue, and how they will proceed.

Sir, if our principles are right and worth preserving, we must take the means that common reason and prudence dictate to preserve those principles; and you cannot preserve them in the face of this great army, dispersed all over this country, burning under a sense of injustice and want of sympathy on the part of the Congress that ought to be and that they had reason to believe was their especial friend. Turn your back coldly on them by increasing the compensation of all other kind of employés and it will not answer to tell them that your Treasury is short; they naturally will ask, if that were so, how is it that you are enabled to compensate yourselves; how did you come to enhance the salaries of all other Government employés, but the moment you turned toward the soldier you had nothing in your Treasury to bestow upon him? Sir, that will not do. Upon such arguments as that we cannot hold our position. I feel sure of it, and I judge by the great principles of human nature. These men are just men; they demand nothing of us that we cannot do, nothing that is unreasonable; but it will not do to tell them that you have no sympathy for them and nothing to bestow upon them, when you have everything to bestow upon yourselves and other employés whose labors were easy, whose burdens were light, in comparison with the perils and hazards they have encountered.

Mr. President, I am admonished that it is late, and I will not detain the Senate, for I am bringing forth no new light on this subject, but I feel keenly that we must do something if we can do it, and we must not hurry away by some sudden impulse until we have taken time to consider this great subject in all its bearings and see if we cannot do something. I will not take further time now.

Mr. YATES. I do not want to consume time, but my heart and my soul are in this matter. I do not approve of all of the doctrine of the honorable Senator from Maine, that when we make mistakes we must wait for our enemies to discover them before we acknowledge them. That is not my doctrine; and especially if we discover that we have made mistakes while we have yet time to correct them, I think it is our duty to correct them. It is not too late to correct this mistake at this time. I know as a matter of fact that soldiers' leagues and soldiers' conventions are being formed in every part of this country now to denounce the action of Congress because they do not do justice to the soldier. I know that there is a party, and the President is at the head of that party, which is appealing to the prejudices of the soldiers and saying that we, the great Republican Union party of the country were willing to call out soldiers, were willing to inaugurate this war, were willing to expose them to the perils of war, but now when the war is over, when they have fought the battles and achieved the victory, we are not the men to stand up and to pay them. I know it is said that it will be mercenary in the soldier to suppose that he should receive pay for his services beyond his contract with the Government. Allow me to ask if it is mercenary for us to add $2,000 to our compensation for serving the country in a civil capacity? Will we receive that, and then say that it will be mercenary in the soldier who had to incur all the hardships and dangers and difficulties of war to receive a small additional pittance? I wish to say for myself that in the providence of God and by the kindness of the people I have by my proclamations called out two hundred and fifty thousand soldiers to this war. By my attention to them, whether deserved or undeserved, I have in my State the proud title of "the soldiers' friend." They went out at the call of their country, they abandoned their business, they sundered their domestic ties, they fought for three years, they trudged through mud and rain and snow, they scaled the heights, and thousands and hundreds of thousands now sleep in unmarked graves upon the banks of the Mississippi, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee, in Shiloh's woods, upon the cloud-involved summits of Lookout mountain, in the sands of the ocean shore, and there they will sleep until the day of resurrection; but, sir, there is the living soldier, there is the wounded soldier, there is the man who lost his arm as he scaled the heights of Donelson, or his eye in the thickets of the Wilderness. He appeals to this Government to stand by him, and especially those soldiers who have borne the brunt and burden of the battle, the three years' men who went first without pay for love of country, with no glittering bribes or bounties before them, who took upon themselves this battle, and who saved this country, who rescued the life of the nation.

I will detain the Senate but a moment longer; I will curtail the remarks I intended to make, but I do wish to say one thing, that when I voted to increase the pay of members of Congress I did it because I believed it was right to increase their pay; when I voted to increase the pay of the clerks with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] I believed it was right; but, sir, it never entered my mind that it was in the conceptions of the present Congress not to equalize the bounties of soldiers. I occupy precisely the same position that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] does; and I never should have cast my vote for the increase of my own pay, however much I need it—and I need it very much—without at the same time extending corresponding remuneration to those who have done so much for us and who deserve so much at our hands.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope we shall have the question.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do not make a speech, then.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall make no speech about it. The Senator from Maine will understand that I am just as anxious to get to a vote as he is himself. I say let us come to a vote on this question and immediately, for I desire to take up for consideration the resolution I submitted authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions to prepare a bill to be submitted to the next Congress by which we can equalize these bounties and pay them in lands and allow the soldiers to select them on the alternate sections on the land grants. We have got land, but we have got no money in the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us take the vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Very well; let us take the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference which has been read?

Mr. WILSON and Mr. LANE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Creswell, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Nye, Ross, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Yates—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, and Wright—11.

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to give notice that I shall call up the resolution to which I have referred in the morning, with a view to have it go to the House, if the Senate will consent to its passage, in time to be acted upon at the present session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the bill (S. No. 247) donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the use of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Fair building in Washington.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 32) to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgan;

A bill (H. R. No. 797) granting a pension to Daniel Lucas;

A bill (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May;

A bill (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Maria M. Buxton;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military services;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatomie Indians;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) to extend the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, to the loyal citizens of Tennessee; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) for the erection of an equestrian statue in memory of Brevet Lieutenant General Winfield Scott, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up House bill No. 602, to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. We have a great deal of business that we must finish to-night, and it is perfectly manifest that we cannot pass a bounty bill at this session.

Mr. WILSON. I think we can.

Mr. POLAND. I move to take up a privileged question, the resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to the seat of Mr. Patterson, whose credentials were presented yesterday. I understand that the joint resolution which was passed and sent by us to the House has been laid on the table; so I suppose we shall have no official notice from the House of the disposition of it; and I therefore move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know how much privilege that question has; but I wish to state to the Senate that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have made efforts to get the floor all day, to call the attention of the Senate to a post office appropriation bill which the House has passed, and which is here before us, and upon which action is necessary and demanded; otherwise, a large portion of the postal service will fail. It is very essential to take it up. It is an appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. There will be no debate on this, I imagine. It is a privileged question.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are certain things that we must finish to-night, because we shall have no time to attend to them in the morning. We must finish the executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. This is an appropriation bill, and ought to be attended to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall finish that first, because it is absolutely essential.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to postpone all prior orders—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Vermont, as a privileged question, the Chair is bound to entertain. It is in the power of the Senate, of course, to dispose of it, but it is a privileged motion, and the Chair must entertain the motion.

Mr. POLAND. I do not apprehend that this question will take any time, or that anybody has any disposition to debate it. I suppose all was said upon it on either side that is desired to be said. The passage of the joint resolution to-day by an almost unanimous vote signified the sense of the Senate in relation to the propriety of receiving this gentleman as a member of the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A motion was made by the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the bounty bill. That motion was not acted upon. The Senator from Vermont then rose and moved to take up the question of the right of a person to a seat. I submit to the Chair that that does not supersede the other motion. As I understand it, a privileged question simply authorizes a party, when no other motion is pending, to rise and submit the question. If the Senator from Massachusetts had called up his bounty bill and it was before the Senate, then the Senator from Vermont could perhaps make this motion; but it seems to me the Senator from Massachusetts was in order with his motion, and that the Chair is bound to entertain it, and until that motion is disposed of, motion after motion cannot be piled upon each other.

I do not know that it is proper to make any remarks in this connection; but I am exceedingly anxious that that subject should be taken up. As anxious as I am to get away from here, I have steadily voted in favor of doing something towards equalizing these bounties. The men who fought side by side and were paid differently by this Government have always expected that something was to be done to equalize the pay. Here was one man who went out in 1861 and fought all through the war and got $100 bounty. Another man came in a year or two afterwards and fought by his side and received $300 bounty from the Government. I never supposed that the bounty bill was to have the go-by in any such way. The Senator from Massachusetts made an effort to get it up late in the session, and then proposed it as an amendment on the appropriation bill, and it was defeated there. I do not antagonize the two questions that have been antagonized here to-night. They are entirely distinct. This is a measure that stands upon its own foundations; and I trust that if it is necessary to prolong the session until we consider the question fairly, it will be done. If a majority of the Senate will do nothing, if it is determined that nothing whatever shall be done, of course there is no use in staying here; but until a fair and honest effort is made, and that, too, without any excuse that we shall not get away, I think we should consider the question and deliberately dispose of it. In my judgment, something ought to be done and something can be done. It is not true that there is no money to pay this bounty. There is more than $100,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States, and it has been there for a year. I rose simply as to that question of order, to inquire whether the Senator from Massachusetts was not in order in his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts was in order in his motion, and the Chair entertained it. The Senator from Vermont then made his motion, which, in the opinion of the Chair, is a privileged question, inasmuch as it concerns the organization of the body. The motion of the Senator from Vermont, in the opinion of the Chair, takes precedence of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, and is first to be put. As to the illustration which the Senator from Illinois gives, that if the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts had been put and the bill was before the Senate, then the motion of the Senator from Vermont might be in order to displace it, in the opinion of the Chair, if it would displace the bill when up, a fortiori it would displace the motion to take it up when made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote upon it, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

The Senate accordingly resumed the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on the Judiciary which, as it had been amended, was as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. David T. Patterson, upon taking the oaths required by the Constitution and laws, be admitted to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I regret that I cannot consistently vote for this resolution. I stated my views briefly when the question was up before, and will not take up any considerable time in repeating them now. But, sir, with this law upon the statute-book, I do not see how the Senate can vote that the applicant is entitled to his seat on taking the oath, when it appears before the Senate on the report of the committee that if he takes the oath he takes it in the teeth of the law. The law says that every person shall take an oath that he has not sought or held any office or exercised the functions of any office under any government, or pretended government, in hostility to the United States; and now, if we vote that the applicant can take his seat on taking that oath when the fact is patent before us that he did hold an office under a government in hostility to the United States, it seems to me it is saying that this oath amounts to nothing; you may as well repeal it. There is but one way in which we can preserve the law, maintain the sanctity of the law, and at the same time admit the applicant to his seat, upon the ground that although he held an office under the confederate government in hostility to the United States, he did it, not for the purpose of aiding that government, but for the purpose of serving Union men. The only way we can admit the applicant, in my judgment, upon that state of facts, is to relieve him from taking that portion of the oath; and I think that was the proper course which the Senate adopted to-day. Then you preserve the law; then you say to the people of this country that whenever a disloyal man comes here, he is not to be admitted; that Congress will insist upon the oath; that he shall not be permitted to take his seat simply because he is willing to take the oath; that Congress will regard the oath, and no man that cannot literally take it shall be admitted to a seat while that law stands upon the statute-book.

Then, if there is a case where a loyal man ought to be admitted, it is our duty to remove the statute, so that he may take his seat. We cannot go before the country and say to the people of this country "Here is a Union man; here is a man that has been persecuted for his loyalty; here is a man who lived in a portion of the country over which the rebels bore sway; who was hunted from his home; who succored Union men; who gave intelligence to the commanders of the Union armies; who comes now from a State that is entitled to representation according to the act of Congress, and presents himself and we turn him away." We cannot do that. What shall we say to the people of the country when they ask us why such a person was not admitted to his seat? Shall we say to them, "He is not admitted to his seat because there is a law of Congress that says he shall not be admitted to his seat except he swears a certain oath; and he did act inconsistent with that, and therefore is not admitted to his seat." What is the reply? "You make the laws; why did you not change that law so that justice and right could be done in the particular case?" It is the only way of escape.

But, sir, if the applicant is permitted to come in here and take the oath in the face of the facts before us, you say to the country that any man, no matter if his hands are steeped in blood, may come here and take his seat if he will take the oath. Sir, if you do that, you may as well repeal your oath at once; you pay no regard to it; you place the decision as to whether a man shall take a seat here under the oath upon the man himself; and if the chief of the rebels is corrupt enough to come here and swear according to the act, upon such a construction, although the oath might be false in fact and in spirit, you will be compelled to receive him. You may as well remove the oath from your statute-book, if that is the construction that is to be put upon it. Unwilling as I am to do anything to deprive the applicant in this case of his seat here, I see but one way to allow him to take it, and that is, to do exactly what we have done, dispense with that portion of the oath in his particular case, which, in my judgment, as I view the matter from my stand-point, he cannot properly take.

Mr. WADE. I have reflected somewhat upon this subject, and I cannot exactly agree with the Senator from Illinois upon it. We have a law that we deliberately made, and which nothing less than both branches of Congress, together with the President, can annul. That law provides that no man who has been engaged in the rebellion or held any office under the confederacy and sworn allegiance to it—I do not repeat the exact words of it—shall be a member of Congress. There that law stands like a lion in the path. This man, as I understand the committee found, was a judge who took an oath to support the confederate government that was in hostility to that of the United States, and the duties of that office would inevitably compel him to do acts in furtherance of those rebel laws. Our committee pronounce a high eulogy upon him because he did take an oath that he would act as a judge and execute the laws of the confederacy, because they say his motives were good. Sir, it is all idle to give that construction to it. He violated the laws of the United States; he violated his duty as a citizen; he abandoned his allegiance to the Government of the United States; and whatever his motives may have been he was guilty of hostility to this Government.

Sir, what would his duty as a judge compel him to do? One of the first laws passed in the confederacy was that the property of all northern men in that country should be confiscated and passed over to the confederacy, and all debts that were owing from their people to northern men were to be confiscated and collected for the use of the confederacy; and that was about the first duty that this judge had to perform. Instead of enforcing a contract in favor of the man to whom the obligation was due, he sat there with an iron and rebel hand to compel the execution of it to a confederacy warring against his own Government. He, with his eyes open, took this responsibility upon himself. If this Judiciary Committee had gone down there with a lawful calling, acting in subordination to the laws of the Government under which they lived, they would have made themselves liable to this confederate government; it might be that in defending the flag of their country they would have committed treason to this confederacy and thereby forfeited their lives; and this judge upon the bench, if he were true to his rebel oath, would have been compelled to enforce those laws against them, even to the taking of their lives, because they were true to their own Government.

This man voluntarily placed himself in a position where to be true to his own Government he must be false to that confederacy which he had sworn allegiance to. He voluntarily placed himself in a condition where no honest man could act. I do not care what you say of his motives. If he acted up to the laws of that confederate government, at war with ours, he was at war with our Government and compelled to disregard all its laws and to enforce those rebel laws whose object was to put down the loyal Government. If he was true to our laws he was false to that oath that he had taken. He could not serve God and Mammon, and he knew it when he took the confederate oath. No man can act as a judge under a rebel government and swear allegiance to it without committing an act of hostility and treason against his own Government. If he acted in subordination to their laws he was false to ours. If he was true to ours he was false to that to which he had sworn allegiance.

Sir, to pronounce a high eulogy upon a man who is a judge, a man of good capacity, a gentleman of character and learning, who voluntarily places himself in this position, and to say that he did so for the good of somebody, is a strange idea of a man's duty, I think. He places himself where he has to betray one side or the other. If he is true to the confederacy he is a traitor to our Government. If he is true to our Government he is false to that to which he has voluntarily sworn. You pronounce a eulogy over him for putting himself in this predicament, and say he did so because his object was to do good to the loyal men down there! In Heaven's name, what good could he do that would be for their benefit as a judge? For every loyal act that they performed there was a penalty that he would be bound to enforce in his court. How could he protect them? If he did protect them, he was a false judge; and when he took an oath to support their government, he was a false judge to do so to shield anybody.

Sir, I do not wish to judge him harshly, but he placed himself in that predicament; and when a man places himself in hostility to his Government and deliberately takes an oath to a government hostile to his allegiance, I think he is very well dealt by if you leave him in a private station. Let him be honored there, if you please; but for Heaven's sake do not pronounce any of your judicial eulogies upon him because he has got into that predicament, and say that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States, and that right over the law that you yourselves have passed, and that stands like a lion in your path. Sir, law-makers should not be law-breakers. Can you permit him, with that law standing in full force, to come in and swear? You cannot repeal that law. The Senate cannot repeal it. There it stands. How can a man of moral rectitude say that he will permit anybody to come and trample that law under foot before his eyes? How are you going to get him in here? You will endeavor to repeal that law of course. Everybody saw that it was necessary in order to clear his path into this Senate, that you should overcome that law. It could not be done in any other way. Failing in that, you now propose to let him in, law or no law. The law stands in full force, and yet the resolution is that he is entitled to take a seat here, notwithstanding the law to the contrary that you cannot repeal. Sir, there never was a proposition on earth more plain and palpable than that this man cannot come in here and take the oath without trampling the law under foot, with the approbation and consent of the Senate of the United States. I do not see how anybody can suppose that it can be done.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Did he take the pay?

Mr. WADE. I do not know whether he took the pay or not. It is immaterial whether he did or not. I have no doubt he did take rebel pay. He was entitled to it, for he was a judge on the bench sworn to maintain that government, sworn to defend its laws, sworn to enforce them against all loyal men. If loyal men did their duty, and he was a true judge to the confederacy, he would have to hang them. If they committed treason, and it would have been treason under their law for a man to do anything to levy war against that confederacy, he would be bound to hang them.

Mr. HOWE. He had not jurisdiction of such crimes as treason against the confederacy.

Mr. WADE. Well, other crimes; I do not care what you call them; assault and battery. If you had gone down there and violated any law of the confederacy in any way, he would have enforced the penalty against you, although you were in the employment of the United States, obeying our laws, and performing your duty as a peaceable and just citizen. That was the predicament the man occupied; and then the Senate of the United States are to disregard the law that they themselves have made and permit him to come here and swear himself into this Senate right over your laws. It can be done; but, sir, it cannot be done by my vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Although it is an uncomfortable hour to speak, [four o'clock a. m.] and somewhat hazardous to follow so impressive a discourse as that to which we have just listened, I shall submit a few observations in vindication of the vote I shall give upon the pending proposition. There is an old saying which comes to us from high authority, the very highest authority that we acknowledge, which declares that "the letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive."

Mr. WADE. Let the letter kill is all I ask.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The Senator from Ohio is for a "killing" construction, for a construction of the law which defeats the purpose for which the law was enacted, for a construction which every man of sense and understanding knows in his soul was never the contemplation of the men who framed the statute; and he says "let it kill." Well, sir, his whole speech was of that temper. It was all toned to the observation which he has made in response to me. His argument is false and his position untenable for the very reason that his construction kills and destroys the life of the statute.

Mr. President, we are told that there was once a law that no man should draw blood within the limits of the palace or within the limits of the court. Blackstone will tell you that that law was construed not to apply to a physician who drew blood from a person in order to save his life, in order to restore him to health, in order to preserve his existence. The statute was made against men of criminal intention who drew blood in violation of the laws of the country; and therefore, although under the strict letter of the law the physician who came with benevolence in his heart to rescue a victim from impending death and drew blood, came within the express letter and language of the statute, he was not held to be included in the enactment.

"Holding office under a government hostile to the United States." What does that mean when it comes to be applied to an individual, as in the present case, who has exercised the duties of a judicial position, or rather continued the exercise of them after his State had attempted, but attempted in vain, to sever her bond of connection with the Union? What does this holding of office under a hostile government mean? It means that the individual shall assist that government; that he shall give it the assistance of his influence, of his power, of his efforts, and shall exercise authority under it in aid of the hostile purpose. That is what that statute means; and although men may be entangled in the meshes of a technical argument, embarrassed by a strict construction of the language, instinctively nearly the whole of us emancipate ourselves from all these cobwebs of the brain, from all this folly of construction, when we come practically to act upon this question. Every one of us instinctively feels that this man was not a criminal, was not guilty, was not included within the intention of the legislative power when it hurled this statute against our enemies. Every one instinctively feels that it was not intended to embrace and to crush our friends, and especially those who in the enemy's country were true to us, who, under circumstances of extreme difficulty and embarrassment, saw the road of duty and trod it with faithfulness and with courage.

"Holding office under a government hostile to the United States" means holding it with an allegiance to that government. That is implied—holding it with the intention to assist that government in the hostile purpose against us, to assist in destroying our jurisdiction and preventing its restoration within the hostile region. Why, are gentlemen to shut their eyes to all the merits of a question of this sort, to all those considerations which pertain to it, and, I may add, to settled rules of interpretation in such cases, and stand, as the Senator from Ohio stands, upon a "killing" expression of the law?

Mr. President, in connection with this point, which I shall not further elaborate, there is another which I will mention. The oath act of July, 1862, has been several times debated in this Senate. I enjoyed the advantage of hearing it discussed very thoroughly at the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. I confess that my mind was never convinced upon the question of power involved, by which I mean that I never heard an argument in vindication of the power of imposing this oath of 1862 upon members of Congress which satisfied and convinced my judgment; but the nearest approach to it was produced by the speech of the late Judge Collamer, delivered in the debate to which I have alluded. He was too clear-headed a man to put the argument upon the ground upon which it has been ordinarily put. He was not willing to take upon himself the burden of insisting that we had the power of adding a qualification of office for Senators to those enumerated in the Constitution, which are, age, residence, and so on. His argument proceeded upon different premises, and from a different point of view. It was the only occasion on which I ever listened to that distinguished Senator, when he cast his whole power into a debate, where my mind did not follow him all the way to his conclusions.

Now, sir, what did he state? You will find his argument in the Globe. It is preserved to us; it can be referred to; and whether we agree to it, or dissent from it, we must say of that as of all other arguments from him, that it is instructive. He said that under the general power to pass criminal laws, this Government might provide that men engaged in the rebellion should never hold office under this Government, and might extend that prohibition to members of Congress; and then it might further provide an oath which would ascertain this guilt and inflict that deprivation of office, or apply the principle of exclusion, as has been attempted by the existing statute and rule of the Senate. He did not treat it as a question of a specific qualification for office to be added in enumeration to those mentioned in the Constitution, but simply as a penal result flowing from the statute which should declare the offense and provide the mode by which guilt should be ascertained. He argued also that trial by jury was not necessary before exclusion was enforced. But I need not go into that.

Now, sir, view this oath act of 1862 from the same point from which it was viewed by the ablest man who ever opened mouth in its vindication, and what is it? Simply and purely a criminal statute, and not one of official qualification. It is in this view a criminal statute and provides a mode by which guilt shall be ascertained, and ascertained out of the mouth of the offender himself. He is to pronounce his own condemnation. If he do not condemn himself by declining the oath when he is actually guilty there is another provision for the case. He is to be held guilty of perjury, and not only may he be ignominiously expelled by this body by its expulsive two-thirds power, but he may be sent into a criminal court and punished along with the vilest and most abandoned felons of the land.

Now, sir, considering this statute as a penal one, as was the one against drawing blood within the limits of the palace or court, mentioned by Blackstone, how much clearer and more necessary it becomes that the construction to be given to it shall be such as I have contended for; that when the claimant to a seat is obliged to condemn himself, if within the law, to exclude himself from a seat in this high place of power, and to go forth with the brand of Cain upon him, that we construe this statute to apply only to men truly and really guilty and criminal, and withhold its application from those who are innocent, from those who have committed no crime and have intended the commission of no crime, whose souls are pure and spotless from the offense of treason; who, instead of assisting our enemies, have assisted us; who, instead of holding office under a hostile government in the true meaning and genuine sense of that expression in this penal law, have held office at the instance of our friends, for their protection and for the maintenance of our cause; and who, because they have done so, have been persecuted by our enemies, and have only been enabled to maintain their rights of person, of property, of reputation, of social enjoyment, and of all the comforts of which this life is capable, because we triumphed in the war and not our enemies. Had they triumphed, such individual would have been branded for life; nay, more, might have lost his dearest rights or sacrificed life itself.

What I ask, then, is that men shall construe this statute according to the laws of humanity and of sound reason, and according to accepted principles of interpretation; that they shall not construe it according to the rigid, technical, killing letter which has such charms for the Senator from Ohio, giving to his voice such emphasis and to his manner such warmth and earnestness. Perhaps it was more the Senator's tone than what he said that induced me to stand up to protest in the name of logic and of law against this perversion of logic and of law by which innocence, merit, patriotism, and patriotic service are to be punished instead of treason, crime, infamy, and guilt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have some difficulty about this question, and I wish to make one or two suggestions in regard to it; I shall not tax the patience of the Senate. It has been assumed in argument here that there is a law that disqualifies a man from taking a seat in the Senate of the United States who has held an office under the confederate government. If there is any such law I have never seen it. There is a law, as I understand, that requires a man to take a certain oath in order to qualify himself to become a member of this body. But if he is prepared and willing to take the oath, the question arises in my mind as to whether or not the Senate can question the truthfulness of that oath. When a person who has credentials appears here, presents those credentials, and says he is prepared to take the oath which the law requires, can the Senate then determine that he shall not take the oath upon the assumption that it would be false if taken by the person applying for the seat?

It is evident that this case is very important as a precedent. One of two things must follow: if a person who comes here as a Senator from the rebel States is allowed, upon taking this oath, to take his seat, then, of course, any man, no matter what may have been his history or his connection with this rebellion, if he is willing to take the oath, is entitled, if otherwise qualified, to take his seat in the Senate. We must assume that position or we must assume the other, that whenever a person comes here with his credentials, prepared to take the oath, the Senate may go back and investigate his antecedent history and determine from that history whether he has or has not been a rebel, and if he has been a rebel, then, notwithstanding he is willing to take the oath, the Senate must determine that he shall not take his seat.

Now, which precedent ought we to establish? If there is a law that authorizes the Senate to say that if a man has been a rebel he shall not be qualified to take his seat in this body, then, of course, that course is to be pursued, and whenever A, B, or C comes here from the southern States as a Senator-elect, his credentials are to be referred and a committee is to investigate the question as to whether he has or has not been a rebel. But if there is no law that authorizes that sort of proceeding, then it seems to me that the examination as to his qualifications is confined to his age, his residence, citizenship—such qualifications as are mentioned in the Constitution.

I suppose that this resolution will be adopted, and I am inclined under the circumstances to vote for it; but it commits the Senate, as I understand, to the doctrine that whenever any man who comes here from the rebel States otherwise qualified is willing to take this oath, the Senate must allow him to take his seat, and then, perhaps, investigate his former history after he becomes a member of this body.

Mr. HOWE. I want to say a word about this subject. It is in the early part of the day, [five minutes of four o'clock a. m.,] and I take it, the Senate would like to hear a few remarks. [Laughter.]

When this Government was set up the people declared in their Constitution several things, one of which was that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State." That was very positive. Another was that "no person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen." I always supposed those two declarations conferred upon every State the right to have two Senators upon this floor, subject only to the conditions that they should send no man who was not thirty years of age, had not been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who was not a citizen of the State from which he was elected; that those were the only conditions attached to this right to have two Senators upon this floor. These were the only qualifications prescribed for Senators.

Now, Mr. President, Congress did enact in 1862 the law which has been repeatedly referred to. It says:

"That hereafter every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation."

That statute does impose additional qualifications upon Senators or it does not. If it does require new qualifications for Senators which the Constitution does not require, then we have put ourselves in the category of demanding as a qualification that which your committee has reported will exclude an innocent, guiltless, loyal man from this Chamber. Your committee have reported that this Mr. Patterson once held an office in the State of Tennessee, while the government of that State was hostile to the Government of the United States; but they have reported that that was an innocent, guiltless act, not evidence of disloyalty, not evidence of crime. This law requires him to swear that he never has held an office under such a government. Now, if that is to be understood as a qualification for the office, that he shall not have held an office under any State government, then you have disqualified one who your committee says is an innocent, guiltless man, from taking a seat in the Senate.

I did not suppose you meant to add any qualifications to those which the Constitution requires. I believe it has been always understood that you could not add to them; but I did not suppose you intended to add to them. I supposed you meant simply to declare that you thought it expedient, before a man was admitted to a seat here, that he should be required to take this oath. Well, sir, whenever you admit a man to take an oath on any subject whatever, you know he may swear falsely as well as truly, and you anticipated when you enacted this law that some men might swear falsely in taking this oath and you prescribed the penalty. What was it? That he should be guilty of perjury if he did swear falsely, and on conviction, in addition to the penalties now prescribed for that offense, "he shall be deprived of his office and rendered incapable forever after of holding any office or place under the United States." Now, is not that penalty enough?

Senators argue this matter as if there was danger, if we do not stand upon the exact letter of that law, and not only stand upon the exact letter of it, but see beforehand that the man who offered to take the oath could take it truly, of letting down the bars so as to fill up this Senate Chamber with rebels, red-handed men, murderers, criminals. There is not the slightest danger of it. Let Mr. Jefferson Davis, if he can be discharged from his present place of confinement, come here to-morrow under an election from Mississippi; let him come to your bar if he has the other qualifications; let him take this oath if he dare to take it. Your Senate Chamber is not full; but you have got a bad man in it, and your remedy for it, if you believe in your law, is simply to go to a magistrate here and enter a complaint against Mr. Davis for perjury, and he is arrested, and in due course of time he is tried, and in due course of judicial procedure he is convicted, and when convicted the judgment of the court goes that he submit to the ordinary pains and penalties of perjury, and that he be deprived of the office of Senator, and that he shall never hold any other office of any kind or description whatever.

Mr. HARRIS. Or we expel him.

Mr. HOWE. The judgment of the law makes it unnecessary for you to expel him. On conviction he shall submit to these penalties and be deprived of this office. Now, I do not see any danger of getting your Chamber full of rebels under this law, if you stand by it; but, on the contrary, it does seem to me to be a little harsh for you to say, first, that a man shall take an oath before he shall take a seat here in addition to the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and that you shall say then that that is a qualification for office, and that you shall then enter into an investigation of the question whether he can take that oath truly or not; in other words, try him before he has sworn; and finding that he would be guilty if he did swear, say that he shall not take the oath at all; and really, actually, and literally impose upon him one of the heaviest penalties in that statute; that is, deprive him of his office. I think that is rather harsh. I would not like to do it. I do not see any state of necessity that drives us to it. I believe there is none.

Mr. POLAND. I believe when the report was brought in from the Judiciary Committee it was not ordered to be printed, and I desire that that order shall be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print the report will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. POLAND. I do not intend to go into any argument of the question at this time. The facts that have been reported by the committee were agreed upon by all the members of the committee. Although there was some difference of opinion among the committee in reference to the proper resolution to be reported formally, the facts that are stated in that report were agreed to by every member of the committee. There was no dispute in reference to what the facts were. The vote of the Senate to-day on the joint resolution that was passed was a declaration on the part of the Senate that Mr. Patterson, who presents himself as a Senator here, is a fit and proper man to be a Senator. It is a mere question of form, it seems to me. If, in view of the facts that are reported and of the action of the Senate that has been taken upon it, Senators see fit to reject him, I certainly shall have no objection. It will be a matter for them to settle, not for me.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Norton, Poland, Riddle, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Howard, Nye, Pomroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stewart, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES F. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. N. P. BANKS of Massachusetts, and Mr. W. E. NIBLACK of Indiana, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 43) to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians;

A bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments, and further disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the managers on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. EDMUNDS.

POSTAL SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 815) supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services.

The bill proposes to appropriate $486,525 for carrying the mail upon the post roads established by acts of Congress passed during the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a communication from the Postmaster General in explanation of that bill. If it is read it will satisfy everybody.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not necessary. The Post Office Committee have examined it, and say it is all right.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MASSACHUSETTS AND MAINE CLAIMS.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to take up a joint resolution (S. R. No. 143) respecting claims of Massachusetts and Maine, which I reported this morning from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I objected to proceed.

ing to the consideration of that resolution, but the Chair did not hear me. I do not think it is a measure that we should pass at this stage of the session.

Mr. SUMNER. It was considered in committee carefully.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I know it was considered in committee about five minutes perhaps; but it was not investigated. I am inclined to the opinion that the principle of paying interest which it recognizes is one which has not been followed by the Government, and is a departure from our uniform practice. It seems that some bill passed at some stage in our history in relation to a claim of Maryland; and that is seized upon and pressed into the service obviously upon the face of this resolution, because it requires some support other than that derived from general principles.

Mr. SUMNER. Simply to apply the rule here; that is all. This resolution is merely to have these claims audited; that is all.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The claims date back to 1812 or 1815. How much they are, what is their nature, what equities are connected with them, we know nothing about, and we have not time now to investigate. I have never seen any papers in the case.

Mr. SUMNER. There were ample papers before the committee of which the Senator is a member; it was considered on three several days in that committee, and finally the committee came to the conclusion which is expressed in the resolution.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I presume the committee had about the information the Senate have; and that is the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts has convinced himself that this amount ought to be paid.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all. I took comparatively little interest in it; others on the committee took more interest in it than I did. The Senator from Maine, who is now absent, [Mr. MORRILL,] took a deep interest in it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It is against the practice of the Government to pay interest upon unascertained demands.

Mr. POMEROY. In my State we cannot get the Government to pay us the principal of what it owes us. The Government owes us for organizing troops and we cannot get the principal.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Unascertained, unsettled obligations of a Government, as a general rule, bear no interest. It seems to me like a pretty "smart" proceeding to hunt up some precedent, which may have been accidental or the result of peculiar circumstances, and to use that to pile upon the Government a quantity of interest on these old claims.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator perseveres in his objection of course I shall not press the resolution now.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think it my duty to object.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate (at fifteen minutes past four o'clock a. m.) proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and remained in executive session till half past four a. m., when the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 62) directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions;

which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 62) directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 596) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) to pay Colonel Lewis F. Fix.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON, from the second committee of conference on Senate bill No. 138, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses of Congress upon the amendment of the Senate to the substitute of the House to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely:

Section one, line three, strike out "twelve" and insert "ten."

Section three, line three, strike out "six" and "three" and insert "four" and "two," line seventeen strike out "four of the companies from each regiment" and insert "any portion of the cavalry force."

Section four, line seven, strike out "five" and insert "four," line eight, after the word "men," insert "and four regiments, of ten companies each, to be raised and organized as hereinafter provided for, to be called the Veteran Reserve Corps." At the end of section four insert: "the Veteran Reserve corps shall be officered by appointment from any officers and soldiers of volunteers, or of the regular Army, who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States in the late war, and who may yet be competent for garrison or other duty, to which that corps has heretofore been assigned."

Section six, line three, strike out "two" and insert "one," lines four and five strike out "one regiment company."

Insert at the end of section eight: "it shall be competent to enlist men for the service who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States, provided it shall be found on medical inspection that by such wounds they are not unfitted for garrison or other light duty; and such men when enlisted shall be assigned to service exclusively in the regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps." In the same section, after the word "years," in line three, insert "for cavalry, and three years for artillery and infantry."

Section seven, strike out all to the word "academy," inclusive, in line four, and in lieu thereof insert: "that fifteen bands, including the band at the Military Academy, may be retained or enlisted in the Army, with such organization as is now provided by law, to be assigned to brigades in time of war, and in time of peace to assembled brigades or to forts or posts at which the largest number of troops shall be ordinarily stationed; and the band at the Military Academy shall be placed on the same footing as other bands."

Section fourteen, line five, strike out "cavalry" and insert "infantry."

At the end of section thirteen insert: "but after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section, as vacancies may occur in the grades of major and captain in this department, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of majors shall be reduced to twelve and the number of captains to thirty; and thereafter the number of officers in each of said grades shall continue to conform to said reduced numbers."

Section seventeen, strike out all to the word "cavalry," in line sixteen, and in lieu thereof insert: "that the medical department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; one assistant surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; one chief medical purveyor and four assistant medical purveyors, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels of cavalry, who shall give the same bonds which are or may be required of assistant paymasters general of like grade, and shall, when not acting as purveyors, be assignable to duty as surgeons by the President; sixty surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry; one hundred and fifty assistant surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of first lieutenants of cavalry, for the first three years' service, and with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry after three years' service; and five medical store-keepers, with the same compensation as is now provided by law; and all the original vacancies in the grade of assistant surgeon shall be filled by selection by examination from among the persons who have served as staff or regimental surgeons or assistant surgeons of volunteers in the Army of the United States two years during the late war; and persons who have served as assistant surgeons three years in the volunteer service shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain."

Section twenty-one, line nine, strike out "sixteen" and insert "thirteen."

Section twenty-four, strike out all after the word "act," in line sixteen, and insert, "shall be entitled in case of passing the examination, and being appointed or commissioned, to receive mileage from the place of his residence to the place of examination, or such portion of that distance as he may actually travel, the same as is paid to officers traveling under orders, but there shall be paid no other compensation."

Section twenty-seven, line seven, strike out "and directed" and "non-," line eight, strike out "other."

Section twenty-eight, after the word "States," in line six, insert "or of either of the States in insurrection."

At the end of section twenty-nine insert, "and officers of the regular Army who have also held commissions as officers of volunteers, or commanded volunteers, shall not on that account be held to be volunteers under the provisions of this act."

At the end of section thirty-five insert, "Provided, That no officer who is furnished with quarters in kind shall be entitled to receive the increased commutation of rations hereby authorized."

Section thirty-six, strike out all after the word "that," in the first line, to the word "and," inclusive, in the sixth line. In line nine, strike out "are" and insert "is."

Insert as a new section, No. 37: "That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared, and to report to Congress at its next session, a code of regulations for the government of the Army and of the militia in actual service, which shall embrace all necessary orders and forms of a general character for the performance of all duties incumbent upon officers and men in the military service, including rules for the government of courts-martial; the existing regulations to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on said report."

HENRY WILSON,

IRA HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. F. FARNSWORTH,

NELSON TAYLOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to hear some explanation of the report of this committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON. The Senate bill as passed by us, with very few modifications, is the bill as it now stands, the amendments being of very little account, excepting one on which we had the main controversy. The bill as passed by the Senate provided for six additional regiments of cavalry, making twelve regiments altogether. That is altered to four additional regiments; we give up two. We have the same number of artillery regiments and infantry regiments as the Senate bill provided. The forty-five infantry regiments are made up in this way: thirty-seven white regiments, composed of the ten old regiments and the twenty-seven battalions with ten companies added; then four regiments of colored troops, and four regiments of Veteran Reserves. This is our bill with a few slight amendments.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after fifteen minutes spent therein the doors were reopened at ten minutes before five o'clock a. m.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the second committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 787) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes, reported that, after full and free conference, the committee were unable to agree.

Several SENATORS. What shall be done?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is but one point of difficulty. The Senate conferees proposed to recede from the amendment in regard to the pay of members, but found that that was not at all in the way; that could be laid out of view; the only difficulty is in regard to the question of bounties. The House insist upon some legislation being had in regard to the bounties, and their conferees submitted a proposition which we did not feel at liberty to accept. I will say that the proposition submitted is much more moderate and much more reasonable than any I have yet seen; but we considered that the action of the Senate did not leave us at liberty to accept it.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will have it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state the substance of it. It provides that all soldiers enlisted after April 19, 1861, for a period of three years, and have been honorably discharged, and who have received or are entitled to receive under existing laws a bounty of $100, shall be paid an additional bounty of $100 each; and that any such soldier who enlisted for less than three years and has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow and heirs of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States or of disease and wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid the additional bounty. All who have served three years under an enlistment for three years and been honorably discharged get $100; where they have not served the three years under an enlistment for three years, but have been discharged on account of wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, they or their widows or heirs are to have $100. In case the enlistment was for two years, as it seems to have been in some of the States, the bounty is fifty dollars. The conferees on the part of the House say they have made a careful estimate of the cost that this will involve, and it will amount to about sixty-five million dollars.

Mr. CONNESS. Is there any provision to prevent assignments?

Mr. SHERMAN. The same as in the other proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does this contain the same provision with respect to bounties heretofore received?

Mr. HOWE. Does it apply to soldiers enlisted after October 17, 1863?

Mr. SHERMAN. The other provisions are similar to those contained in the Senate bill about bartering, transferring, &c. It is, in brief, a bounty of $100 for three years' men who got but $100 bounty, and fifty dollars to two years' men. Those who got more than $100 bounty, or are by law entitled to more than $100, are excluded.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall agree to that proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate may instruct the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know from my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whether the Government can get on without the other appropriations in this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My judgment is that the bill is not so necessary as that we should throw away $65,000,000 to save it. Undoubtedly it contains many important provisions for the support of the Government, but I do not think their passage is of sufficient importance to authorize any gentleman who thinks this money ought not to be taken out of the Treasury to change his opinion. Each Senator must decide for himself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the committee of conference be instructed to agree to that proposition of the House.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would inquire whether it would not be better, in consideration of the situation of the Treasury and the finances, that either the whole or a part of this at least should be provided for in the shape of bounty land-warrants.

Mr. SHERMAN. We proposed that to the House conferees and they rejected it at once.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The proper motion, I suppose, would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I desire simply to say a word in regard to this proposition. Under no possible circumstances can the amount under it go beyond sixty-six or sixty-seven millions. You know precisely the number of men included, and there is no trouble in telling how much money will be required. There is another thing about it; it cannot be paid under two years and a half or three years at best, so that it will not take more than $80,000,000 a year out of the Treasury.

Mr. HOWE. Is it to be paid in bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is to be paid in money. I would never agree to issue bonds to the soldiers, for that would be a confession of insolvency.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we shall do an altogether wiser thing to adhere to the resolution which we have adhered to so far, not at this late moment to undertake by a sudden dash to adopt a proposition which is not even read to us, and which we cannot comprehend the details of or its application at this time. Now hearing it stated once and hearing it talked of, there are several objections (aside from the general one which has been submitted) which occur to me. They are objections to me; they may not be to others.

In the first place, like all the previous propositions, it does not provide for those soldiers who have been discharged from service on account of disease contracted in it, while the pension laws always do, and while this very proposition itself agrees to the principle of that by giving this bounty to the widows of those who actually died. All those soldiers are excluded. The most needy, the most deserving of any (except those who are totally disabled) are those who have been discharged from sickness contracted in the line of their duty, and from which a great many of them have never recovered, and who are more objects of pity and commiseration than any other class of soldiers whatever.

Mr. CONNESS. It is very easy to amend it in that respect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of the proposition as it is. In the next place it appears to me to be altogether unjust to shut out all that large class, the soldiers who, by the pressure of necessity or by the devices of sharpers, agents, and fraudulent or pretended friends, have been induced to assign their rights to bounty. In the pension laws we never do that, but on the contrary, we give to the soldier his pension and declare that the assignee shall have no part of it. I consider a provision of that description to be radically unjust. The soldier is easily imposed upon when he returns; an agent gets hold of him and gets an assignment. Now, we propose to prevent the agent from getting this bounty by declaring that the soldier shall not have it! We depart from the theory we have always pursued in providing for the soldiers by way of pensions.

I think it wrong in that respect, and I think it wrong, as I said before, in the respect that it gives to a soldier who served his three years and took the bounty which was then provided—and which would then buy as much flour or bread, almost, as the increased bounty given afterward, on account of the depreciation of the currency and the increase in the price of all the commodities used in life—an increase of $100, while to his fellow-soldier who reenlisted from the same regiment it gives nothing; so that it is really now, when the facts come to be seen, a premium to the soldier who refused to reenlist and a discrimination against the one who did reenlist and fight it through. I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate, but I think it altogether unwise and unsafe to hastily dash at this proposition in this way.

Mr. WILSON. The veterans who reenlisted received $400 bounty for reenlisting and had a year of their time given in. They enlisted in reality for six years and we gave back one year and $500 bounty, whereas the men who served out their full time of three years got only $100 bounty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not propose, as this matter is understood, to say anything about it in the way of argument. I have intimated my opinions in regard to it and what my vote will be. All I ask is that we may take the question by yeas and nays, as I desire to record my vote against the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. When the bounty bill was up before I cast my vote for it, but under the instructions now proposed to be given to this committee of conference ten regiments of troops in my State will receive no bounty under it; men who did as valuable service as any men who enlisted during the war; men who enlisted in the State service in the spring of 1861, and in the fall of that year enlisted for three years or during the war, and served as United States troops up to the summer of 1865. In the spring of 1862 when I came here, supposing, as our military men there supposed, that there was some defect in the muster-in, I secured the adoption of an amendment on a bill which was passed by Congress, legalizing the muster-in of those troops. Still, under a decision of the Solicitor of the War Department they have been deprived of any bounty. At an early part of this session I introduced a measure to remedy that injustice, and had it referred to the Military Committee. They kept that bill until a few days ago when they reported it here along with the general bill increasing the bounties, or, as it is called, equalizing the bounties, thereby forcing me to vote for the proposition to give additional bounties to all other troops in order to get even a single bounty for those ten regiments of soldiers who, I repeat, did as valuable service as any men in this war, and who have never received any bounty. There are here certificates as to their conduct on the battle-field from every military commander in Missouri and in Arkansas under whom they served. Only about five hundred men of those regiments received any bounty, and the War Department say that was paid to them under a mistake, alleging improperly that they were State troops and not United States troops, although they were recognized as United States troops by act of Congress.

Under the proposed instructions the committee of conference can only allow bounty to those soldiers who have heretofore received a bounty of $100, or are authorized to receive it by law. Under the construction of the War Department these men are not authorized to receive bounty, and therefore I am now required to vote to increase the bounty to other troops $100 and to give nothing whatever to these ten regiments raised in my own State, who are just as much entitled to it as any troops that served during the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator whether if any classes are now omitted that may not be remedied by an amendment at the next session. If this bill be passed now, can we not amend it next year in any respect where it may be found defective?

Mr. HENDERSON. These troops were included in the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Committee on Military Affairs, after mature examination, reported that these troops should be included. If I am required to vote any bounty, I think I must insist upon giving it to these ten thousand men in my State. They certainly would look at me with wonder and astonishment if I had voted for giving $200 to other soldiers and nothing to them. If I were to do that I should be ashamed to go before them again. I have not pressed the matter, because I did not suppose it was the feeling of Congress at the present session to increase the bounties. I confess that I have not shown much anxiety to increase the bounties; but now, at the close of the session, I am asked to ignore the services of these ten thousand men and to vote $200 bounty to other soldiers, and to say they shall have nothing. If under any circumstances we are to pass any measure of this kind, we certainly should have a proposition that would include these men.

Mr. CONNESS. I simply rise to suggest that if this proposition be adopted by way of instruction to the committee of conference, it ought to be with the understanding that the committee shall have power to make some changes in it. For instance, the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that it should extend to crippled and disabled soldiers, is certainly correct.

Several SENATORS. It does.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to leave some discretion to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference with instructions to accept the House proposition stated by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the instructions, so that instead of those soldiers who have assigned their claims being prohibited from receiving bounty the committee shall report a provision that those soldiers shall have the bounty and no assignee shall be entitled to any part of it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will move one further amendment, and that is that the committee be instructed to endeavor to procure an agreement to extend this bounty to those soldiers who were discharged on account of disease contracted in the line of duty.

Several SENATORS. That is in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand it. It extends to the widows of those who died of disease contracted in the line of duty, but not to those men themselves if they are living. My object is to put them on the same footing here that they are put under the pension laws.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that not one in twenty of the men who were discharged from the Army on account of disease were ever injured by their service. During the first year and a half of the war almost any one could get off on that plea; a regiment would be brought into the field and before they ever looked an enemy in the face two or three hundred men would be discharged, and scarcely one of them have any permanent disease.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL.]

Mr. NYE. I desire to say that on this vote I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 28, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Harris, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Norton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Henderson, and Sumner—5.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, (at ten minutes past five o'clock a. m.) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and remained in executive session till ten minutes before seven o'clock a. m., when the doors were reopened.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, to submit a report. I will state that this is precisely the report that was made before, except that in pursuance of the instructions of the Senate we have added the bounty proposition which was offered by the House and stated to the Senate before.

Several SENATORS. It need not be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. On this statement, perhaps the Senate will dispense with the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The reading of the report may be dispensed with by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The report was concurred in.

Several SENATORS. Let us take a recess.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that we had better wait awhile to see what the House does with this report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the bill (S. No. 265) to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 247) donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 815) supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth R. Smith, widow of Lieutenant R. H. Smith, United States third artillery, reported a bill (S. No. 451) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Smith; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Andrew Russell's heirs, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, the Senate again proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At ten minutes past seven o'clock, a. m., (Saturday, July 28,) the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned to meet at nine o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 27, 1866.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

HORATIO STONE.

On motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH, the Committee on Appropriations were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Horatio Stone, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Library.

WILLIAM B. COATES.

On motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH, the Committee on Appropriations were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William B. Coates, and the same was referred to the Committee on Patents.

PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be paid to J. H. Riley, who has been acting as clerk to the Committee on the Pacific railroad, compensation for thirty days at the same rate that is allowed to the clerk of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIRECT TAX IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a substitute, Senate joint resolution No. 90, to suspend the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain briefly the substitute which has been very carefully prepared at the Treasury Department. Its object is to divide the direct tax assessed in 1861 between the States of Virginia and West Virginia. I believe there is no objection to it on the part of the members from West Virginia.

The bill also provides for the repeal of that portion of the amendment to the direct tax law of 1862, which requires deeds for property sold at tax sales to be executed by the President of the United States, leaving the certificate of sale prima facie evidence of title, as under the original act of 1862. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was then passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the title so that it shall read "to provide for the ascertainment and apportionment of the proper quota of the direct tax of 1861 to the State of West Virginia, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with amendments, Senate bill No. 400, to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] how much this bill increases the pay of the collectors of Boston, New York, and the other places named.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Not any. Mr. SCOTFIELD. How much does it increase the pay of appraisers?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It raises it from $2,500 in some cases and $2,000 in others to $3,500.

Mr. ELIOT. Will the gentleman inform the House how many new ports of entry are created by this bill?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. My impression is that only two are created, Corpus Christi and Brazos Santiago; perhaps only one, Corpus Christi.

Mr. ELIOT. I have to say that this matter has been before the Committee on Commerce, and this bill, it seems to me, ought properly to be referred to that committee before it is acted on by the House. So far as Corpus Christi, in the State of Texas, is concerned, an inquiry has been made and an examination been had before the Committee on Commerce; and we have come to the conclusion that the public interest do not require that there should be a port of entry created at this time at Corpus Christi. Of course I can have no personal feeling in the matter, and if the House shall see fit to create a port of entry at that place, the Committee on Commerce will have discharged their duty. Now, I would call the attention of the House to the fact that while it may be true that at some future day it will be necessary, for the purposes of commerce, there shall be a port of entry at Corpus Christi, in the judgment of the Committee on Commerce that time has not yet arrived. It is very well known that the creation for a new port of entry involves expenditures necessary to pay officers of the customs. And unless a case be made out beyond controversy, I think it would hardly be right for Congress to provide for the creation of additional ports of entry. There is no reason why at the present time any other expenses should be incurred than those incident to a port of delivery at Corpus Christi.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] will yield I will move that that part of the bill be stricken out which creates a port of entry at Corpus Christi.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I shall have to oppose the whole bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] to say that this bill does not increase salaries.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It does not increase the salary at Boston.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If a point of order will carry this bill to the Committee of the Whole I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now to make the point of order. The bill has been debated.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say, in reply to the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. Eliot], in reference to the port of Corpus Christi, that the Treasury Department have come to an entirely different conclusion from that to which he has arrived. The port of Corpus Christi has a very large and constantly increasing trade. Business there has been very much incommoded from the fact that there is no custom-house or port of entry within, I believe, one hundred and fifty miles, the nearest port of entry being, I think, at the mouth of the Rio Grande river. The merchandise entered at Corpus Christi is principally for the supply of the interior provinces of Mexico. A considerable portion of the river, forming a bend around, is within one hundred miles, or perhaps less, of Corpus Christi; so that the interior provinces of Mexico are much more readily reached from Corpus Christi than from the port of entry near the mouth of the Rio Grande.

The Senate committee have examined this subject carefully and have adopted the recommendation of the Treasury Department in favor of a port of entry at Corpus Christi. According to the information of the committee, one single house at that place does a business of over two million dollars annually in supplying the interior provinces of Mexico.

Mr. ELIOT. If my colleague will permit me, I desire to say that the same considerations which he has urged have been taken into account by the Committee on Commerce of this House. A careful examination has been given to the subject, and it has been found to be the fact that, whereas it may by and by be important for the public interests that there should be a port of entry at Corpus Christi, it is now important mainly on private account. There are, undoubtedly, strong private interests involved in the creation of a port of entry there at this time; and if the House is disposed to legislate for the benefit of those private interests it may be well enough to pass the bill in its present form. If my colleague will consent, I move that the provision with reference to a port of entry at Corpus Christi be stricken out.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to suggest that in the fourth section, in the provision with reference to deputy naval officers, there is an omission, doubtless unintentional, of Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] whether in this suggestion he is taking care of a constituent of mine, recently appointed to the collector's office in Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I have nothing to do with the gentleman's constituents. I am seeking to legislate for the country, not for any party or district.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. As this bill appears to be a private affair among a few gentlemen, I will move, if it be in order, that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the amendments be read, and after that I shall demand the previous question.

The amendments were read, as follows:

After the words "San Francisco" insert the words "and of the appraisers at the ports of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore."

After the words "per annum" insert the words "and the custom-house weighers at the ports of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, $2,000 per annum."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. By a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce the pay of the appraisers and weighers at New York has been increased, the salary of the latter being raised to $2,500. We propose by this bill to give the weighers at these principal ports $2,000. I call the previous question.

The question was taken on the motion to lay upon the table; and it was disagreed to.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means were then adopted.

On ordering the bill as amended to a third reading the House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 36; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 34.

The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative to make a quorum.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading. The bill was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided, and there were—ayes eleven, not one fifth of those present.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-three, more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 49, not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Banks, Barker, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Conkling, Dawes, Donnelly, Driggs, Eekley, Glossbrenner, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Jencks, Johnson, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Lathin, Latham, Maynard, McCullough, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Spalding, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, and Winfield—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Benjamin, Bromwell, Broomall, Cobb, Cullom, DeForest, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, James R. Hubbard, Julian, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Lynch, McClurg, Mercur, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Ritter, Sawyer, Seofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stokes, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketchum, Leffew, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Ross, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—86.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. BENJAMIN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, withdrew his motion.

HOUSE REPORTERS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution in behalf of those who work the hardest of all the persons who work in this House, the Congressional Globe reporters, and to serve them as we have served all others:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund to each of the reporters employed in reporting the proceedings of the House the present session for the Congressional Globe an amount equal to the annual increase of compensation allowed during the present session to the assistant disbursing clerk.

There was no objection.

The resolution was then unanimously adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to grant pensions to certain persons in East Tennessee; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CLERK TO SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. ANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the temporary clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms be placed on the roll as a regular clerk in that office at the compensation he now receives.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IN EUROPE.

Mr. STROUSE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be instructed to issue such orders and instructions to our ministers, chargés d'affaires, and consuls, as may be necessary for the protection of American citizens and American interests on the continent of Europe during the progress of the existing war between the empire of Austria, the kingdom of Italy, the kingdom of Prussia, and the States of the German Zollverein.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 791, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 131, for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine.

On motion of Mr. KASSON, the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 795) to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais, Maine;

An act (H. R. No. 761) authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities;

An act (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox., jr.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to a question of privilege. I give notice that from and after one o'clock I shall call for the enforcement of the rule about outside persons occupying members' seats, and also the enforcement of all the rules of the House.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War in reply to a resolution of the House of the 24th instant, requesting information in regard to the discharge of certain California volunteers stationed in the Territories; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Also a communication from the Secretary of War in reply to a resolution of the House of June 4, transmitting the report of the Quartermaster General respecting railroad property in the possession of the Government on May 1, 1865; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

AIR-LINE RAILROAD TO NEW YORK.

Mr. STEVENS. I call up the motion made on the 30th of May last to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 632, to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York was recommitted to the select committee on air-line railroads to New York. I demand the previous question on the motion.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Will the gentleman allow a statement for one minute?

Mr. STEVENS. I will after the previous question is seconded.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Then I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

On laying the motion on the table there were—ayes 84, noes 40.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 56, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alloy, Bergen, Boyer, Broomall, Daves, Defrees, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Maynard, McCullough, McKee, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—48.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Spencer C. Harding, Higby, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Ketcham, Kootz, Kaykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lonn, Louch, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Perham, Plants, Price, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Nelson Taylor, Van Arman, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen T. Wilson—56.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Denas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hubbard, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kelso, Ladin, Leftwich, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Noell, Paine, Patterson, Pike, Pomroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Schenck, Sitzes, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Townbridge, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—82.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to reconsider was agreed to—ayes 50, noes 44.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question on the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I want to make a motion to postpone the bill until the next session. I hope, therefore, the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. LATHAM. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for an amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I will hear it read.

Mr. LATHAM. I move to amend by adding at the end of section two the following:

Provided, That the consent of the Legislatures of the several States through which said road may pass shall be obtained before this act shall go into effect.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman must excuse me; I do not hold to that doctrine at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that the bill be amended so as to grant twenty miles on either side of the road. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. That would be a very good idea, if we could give it.

Mr. O'NEILL. I suggest an amendment by inserting a provision that the company be required to run a train of cars at eleven o'clock at night, so that we can have a night mail.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no kind of objection to that. Amend by providing that they shall run a train from Washington as late as eleven o'clock at night.

Mr. JOHNSON. How far?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. For Bladensburg. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL. A through train.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. On ordering the main question I desire the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I desire to offer an amendment by striking out the words "or lines."

Mr. STEVENS. I will agree that that amendment may be offered.

The main question was ordered on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. J. L. THOMAS] desires to say a word on this subject: I do not mean to speak more than ten minutes myself, and I presume the gentleman from Maryland will not desire more than that.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I do not expect to discuss this bill at this late hour of the session. I understand that my colleague from the fourth district [Mr. F. THOMAS] made an agreement with the chairman of the committee that this bill was to be postponed during his absence. I am in receipt of a letter from my colleague this morning in which he states that his health is still so poor that it will be utterly impossible for him to return here during the present session of Congress. And I merely desired to make that statement to the House before the previous question was seconded so that the House might agree to postpone this matter until the next session of Congress.

My State, in connection with other States, has a great interest in this bill. But I am not well enough acquainted with either the provisions of the bill or the questions growing out of them to be able to discuss them intelligently. My colleague [Mr. F. THOMAS] who is a member of this air-line railroad committee, is well acquainted with this subject, and he was put upon that committee, as I understand, for the purpose of watching the interests of the State of Maryland in connection with this proposed road. As is well understood, my State is directly interested in the defeat of this bill. It is not so much because we do not desire any more railroads through our State, for that is not so. I believe the Legislature of Maryland would be willing to grant a charter to any road to go through our State and compete with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. But we do not believe that Congress has the power to grant a charter to a railroad to pass over the soil of Maryland without first obtaining the consent of Maryland. And we believe, also, that by the passage of a bill of this kind, it would be the direct means of taking over sixty thousand dollars a year from the State treasury of Maryland.

Mr. WENTWORTH. How much?

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Over sixty thousand dollars a year.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Have you a right to tax Illinois for that?

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. We have a right to tax freight or passengers coming over our soil; and I believe Illinois has the same right.

Mr. WENTWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. She may not exercise the right, but I believe she has it. That, however, is a constitutional question which can be determined in the courts, whether this bill is passed or not. I have said all that I desire to say. I merely wished to make this appeal to the House to postpone this bill until the next session. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] that Illinois can well afford to collect no commutation tax off passengers who may go over her road, for she obtained what neither Maryland nor Pennsylvania ever got, land enough to build her roads.

We built our own roads, with our own money, and have never asked the Government for any assistance.

Mr. WENTWORTH. This is not so much a matter of dollars and cents with us; we only object to the fashion they have adopted of getting it. If they are poor there in Maryland and want to put their hands into our pockets, they may do so and take out whatever they please. But we have not a long time to live; this is but a transitory state of existence; at the best our lives are but short.

Mr. ROSS. I suppose the gentleman means political lives. [Laughter.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object to my colleague [Mr. ROSS] making sport at my expense in my time. [Laughter.]

Now, they claim the right in Maryland not only to regulate the price but the speed of their railroads. That is what we complain of. Now, I would ask the States between here and New York to state what they will take, how much they want to rob us of annually, and let us regulate the speed of these roads. I do not object to the price they charge, as some people do. But we claim the right to regulate the speed, and not have the cars stop at every little town along the road that they may see proper to build up for the benefit of their State. As to the right of Maryland to regulate the rate of speed and price of the roads in their State, it is very doubtful what Maryland has not undertaken to regulate within the last two or three years. She had the right, I believe, to take the State out of the Union; but she did not do it, and why? Because the men of my State would not allow her to do it.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Maryland did not go out because she did not want to go out.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Wait until the next election and see how that goes.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. If we are beaten then it will be by rebels.

Mr. STEVENS. I have delayed this bill over two months to accommodate the distinguished gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.] When he went away the other day I told him that I would wait until the last moment before I called it up. Indeed I have waited so long that those who placed me in charge of this bill have reproached me with some collusion with those on the other side. I have delayed calling up the bill until the last moment, with the hope that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] might be able to be here. I learned last night that he would not be here, and the time had come when I must either call the bill up or allow it to be lost. As to this States' rights notion, I have no respect for it. It has got us into mischief enough already. If the Constitution means anything it expressly declares that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the States. Now, we have monopolies enough between this city and New York. And one of the monopolies chartered by Maryland adds thirty cents to each fare for the benefit of the State. There is a monopoly beyond it. There is a monopoly in the Camden and Amboy railroad which makes every one bend to its will.

Now, sir, not only do they charge double what this bill provides, but a great deal more. And this bill provides for running in seven hours. It must be enforced or it will be forfeited. The bill provides they shall charge six dollars, and the cost now is eleven and twelve dollars.

Mr. WRIGHT. I beg pardon. It costs only $8 25 for a through ticket on a train which goes in less than eleven hours.

Mr. STEVENS. They refuse to allow any connection between the Northern Central and the road between here and Baltimore. They refuse to allow them to check freight. They refuse to allow them to run a road from one end to the other of the city although the company built a road from Bolton station across to the other station. The city of Baltimore has refused to allow them to run their cars through on that line. Thus we are met in every way in reference to freight and passengers. I do not propose to stand longer in the way of other business; and I send some letters to the Clerk's desk. They are sample bricks of this whole Babel.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL EXPRESS AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY,
OFFICE 134 BALTIMORE STREET,
BALTIMORE, March 15, 1866.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 13th I have to say that more than a month since I made a written application to the officers of the Camden and Amboy Railway Company for facilities for doing our express and transportation business over their road, and in the meantime have repeatedly seen the president and other officers of the road and urged them verbally to give us such facilities.

In my last interview with the president he declined to entertain a proposition from us, and within the last three days I have received the inclosed notice from the secretary, which you will see amounts to a flat refusal to treat with us.

Please return me the secretary's letter.

Respectfully yours,

H. WARFIELD.

Superintendent Northern Division.

General J. H. WILSON, Superintendent Northern Department, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1866.

SIR: I take the liberty of laying before you the following facts touching the matter of transportation between this city and New York, and therefore throwing some light on the questions involved in the application for an air-line railroad.

I believe it is urged by those opposed to the project just mentioned that the present line of railway via Philadelphia and Baltimore is sufficient for all purposes, and that therefore the charter asked for by the advocates of the "air-line" is unnecessary.

Within the last two months, as the manager of the National Express and Transportation Company in the northern States, I have had occasion to negotiate with the authorities of the Camden and Amboy railroad, the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore road, and the Baltimore and Ohio road, for the purpose of obtaining the usual facilities enjoyed by other express companies in the transaction of their business. These negotiations have been mostly conducted for the company which I represent by Mr. H. Warfield, a business man of great experience. After the remark that the express business is quite as much a legitimate occupation as any other and therefore entitled to fair play on all hands, and particularly from public carriers, I beg to invite special attention to the fact that the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company up to the present time have denied the company which I represent any of the privileges granted to Adams' company, and that, too, in face of the fact that we have asked for nothing unusual, and have signified our willingness and ability to pay at the same rates required from others. I inclose herewith a letter from Mr. H. Warfield, superintendent of the northern division, a letter, marked "A," and also a copy of a letter from Mr. R. Stockton, secretary of the Camden and Amboy railroad, "B," from which it will be seen that the railroad positively decline to negotiate for an extension of their accommodations to express companies. Without annoying you with additional details or extraneous information touching the reason for declining to negotiate, it is fair to assume that they do so either because they have sold what they call the exclusive right to transact express business over their road to the Adams' Express Company and its branches, or that they have already taxed their road to its utmost in giving accommodations of this kind, and therefore are unable to do the business which we have intended to give them. In either case, an interest represented by $10,000,000 in our company, and probably twice as much more in the other two companies alluded to in the copy of Mr. Stockton's note, is compelled to suffer because the Camden and Amboy railroad is either sold to a gigantic monopoly or overtaxed in its capacities. A condition of affairs in which either of these could be the case is certainly injurious to the business interests of the country, and afford ample reasons for the chartering and construction of another road between New York and Philadelphia at least.

Between Philadelphia and this place the case is slightly different, but still oppressive to the business interests of the company which I represent; but without going into any details, I will simply say that the officers of our company stand ready to testify and are desirous of being heard by the committee to which has been referred the matter of the "air-line road." Mr. Warfield's address is care of the National Express and Transportation Company, Baltimore, Maryland. I can be found at the headquarters of Lieutenant General Grant for a week.

Hoping that the statement above may receive due consideration, and that the legitimate pursuits of the country may be relieved of oppressive tribute to a line of railway now enjoying a monopoly of the carrying business between this point and the city of New York. I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JAMES H. WILSON,

Late Major General Volunteers,

Superintendent Northern Department

National Express and Transportation Company.

Hon. T. STEVENS, M. C.

PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY, March 12, 1866.

SIR: The executive committee of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company have considered your application and directed me to say that our connection with other railroads would require consultation with them before such arrangements could be agreed upon.

We have now three separate applications for three new express companies over our route, but it is the opinion of this committee that it is not for the interest of the road to have any more expresslines on the road at present.

Respectfully, &c.,

R. W. STOCKTON,

Secretary.

H. WARFIELD, Superintendent National Express and Transportation Company.

A true copy: J. H. WILSON.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to a matter I have heard suggested again and again this morning as to the propriety of our passing this bill. It is this: the practical effect of the passage of this bill will be to create a valuable franchise, which will in the market command money, and the result will be that that franchise will be sold to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, or such other bidder as may be found, and the probability is we will get no railroad, especially if this passes into the hands of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. I desire the gentleman to state, that it may go to the country with the authority and force his statement will give, what is known of the prospect of this road being built. If it is passed by Congress—I know it will be passed, because Congress deems it has the right, as I have no doubt it has, to create this under the power to regulate commerce, and I doubt not the commerce of the country is clogged up for want of channels of communication. If we are really to have another channel the bill ought to pass. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state to the House what is known in regard to the certain completion of this road.

Mr. STEVENS. I will say that I do not suppose the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company propose to buy this road at all, for the president of that road and others have been nine times before the committee to prove that no such road was wanted by anybody. Two gentlemen of high standing and great wealth came before us. I required them to go to New York and consult with others there before I would move at all. They came back and assured me that $10,000,000 could be raised in ten days after the passage of this bill, and that the charter if granted would not be sold to any other corporation; that these gentlemen in New York and Pennsylvania had determined that another road should be made, if they could get the privilege to make one, and that they had ready the money to make it, and from men there I know they have the money. Both of these gentlemen, men of high standing, assured me that the money was ready as soon as this bill was passed. And I take considerable reproach to myself for having allowed this bill to lay so long to accommodate the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.]

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] if he has any objection to putting into this bill a provision that this franchise shall not be transferred to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, or any other corporation without the consent of Congress?

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I agree to the propriety of such a provision, though I do not think that there is any danger of these parties parting with so valuable a privilege.

The SPEAKER. The House is acting under the operation of the previous question, and any amendment must be by unanimous consent.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I must object to the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I will see that it is put in by the Senate. I have only this further to say, that if there is this value in this franchise, why should the stockholders sell it at all? This is an attempt on the part of the people to get rid of these odious monopolies which have been grinding us to the earth for years. It is intended that this road shall carry passengers at one half the rate, and freight at less than one half what is now charged by the other roads. Iron ore and pig metal and everything of that kind will be brought to this city at the rate of two cents per mile, while four cents and upward is now charged. I hope now the vote will be taken.

The first question was upon the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, to insert the following:

And the said company shall run a through passenger train out of Washington every night as late as eleven o'clock, p. m.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next question was upon the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD, to strike out of the second section the words "or lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed bill is not upon the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] to offer the amendment he indicated a few moments since.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I now move to amend the bill by adding thereto the following words:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the said National Railway Company to sell or transfer, either directly or indirectly, any of the franchises created by this act, without the assent of Congress, to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, or to any other railroad company or party interested in the several existing railroad lines between the cities of Washington and New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LATHAM. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed copy is not here, and therefore the bill will go to the Speaker's table.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask to have entered a motion to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed.

The motion was entered.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor but yielded to

Mr. BOUTWELL, who said: I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit a report in regard to the complicity of Jefferson Davis and others in the assassination of President Lincoln. I move that the report be laid upon the table and printed, and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move that the friends of Mr. Davis on the committee have leave to submit a minority report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that five thousand extra copies of this report be printed.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JOHNSON. If Jefferson Davis is to be prosecuted, we ought not, it seems to me, to publish this evidence to the world.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was on ordering the printing of the report.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the reading of the report.

Several MEMBERS. We object.

The SPEAKER. It must be read unless the House suspend the rule which gives any member the right to call for the reading.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend that rule.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The motion to suspend the rule was agreed to. So the reading of the report was dispensed with.

The question being taken on ordering the printing of the report, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was ordered to be printed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The committee have reported two resolutions; but under the circumstances in which I am placed in regard to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] he having yielded to me the floor, I will not ask a vote upon those resolutions at this time if there is any opposition to them.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Let them be read for information. All the objection we make to any of these matters is because the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROGERS] and others of the minority of that committee have had no opportunity to examine the testimony.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I renew my motion, that the minority of the committee have leave to present their report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In regard to this report, I will say, by the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] that this is not made as a final report in the case. It is rather a preliminary report; and the gentleman from New Jersey will have ample opportunity to examine all the evidence and prepare any statement of his views which he may deem it proper to present.

The SPEAKER. He has now the authority of the House to make a minority report.

The resolutions reported by the committee will be read, after which any gentleman can object to their consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is no defect or insufficiency in the present state of the law to prevent or interfere with the trial of Jefferson Davis for the crime of treason or any other crime for which there may be probable ground for arraigning him before the tribunals of the country.

Resolved further, That it is the duty of the executive department of the Government to proceed with the investigation of the facts connected with the assassination of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, without unnecessary delay; that Jefferson Davis and others named in the proclamation of President Johnson of May 2, 1865, may be put upon trial and properly punished if guilty, or relieved from the charges against them if found to be innocent.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is very apparent that we must object to these resolutions. They refer to matters which properly belong to the courts.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then let the resolutions go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had further insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 780) entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes," had agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed, as conferees on the part of the Senate, Messrs. CLARK, VAN WINKLE, and MORGAN.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 809) to further regulate the printing of public documents and the purchase of paper for the public printing;

An act (H. R. No. 759) to authorize the refunding of certain taxes; and

An act (H. R. No. 810) amendatory of section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen;

An act (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts;

An act (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 181) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine.

PENSIONERS DROPPED FROM THE ROLLS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the House of May 22, a partial answer of the Commissioner of Pensions in regard to pensioners dropped from the pension-rolls under the act of Congress approved February 4, 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON IMPORTED WOOL.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 793) to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer the following amendments:

In the tenth line of section two, strike out "forty," and insert "fifty;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

In the same section strike out in the twentieth line the word "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" strike out in the twenty-second line the word "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" in the twenty-third line strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

On flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, bal-morals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description, composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding forty cents per pound, twenty cents per pound; valued at above forty cents per pound and not exceeding sixty cents per pound, thirty cents per pound; valued at above sixty cents per pound and not exceeding eighty cents per pound, forty cents per pound; valued at above eighty cents per pound, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, upon all the above-named articles, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

In the same section strike out in the sixty-ninth line the word "twenty" and insert "twenty-eight;" so that the clause will read as follows:

On patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, forty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on tapestry Brussels carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, twenty-eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Speaker, I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the effect of these amendments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Nothing more nor less than putting the second section in a form precisely similar to the provisions on this subject already passed by this House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the duty on manufactured wool under this amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. The same that we have already agreed on in this House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to inquire whether the bill is not substantially the same as the section in reference to wool in the tariff bill which we passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will pass it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask that the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the articles mentioned and embraced in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all unmanufactured wool, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, imported from foreign countries, the duties hereinafter provided. All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, as aforesaid, shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into three classes, to wit:

CLASS 1.

Clothing wools: that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, ormetis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote; down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes two and three.

CLASS 2.

Combing wools: that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used; and also all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

CLASS 3.

Carpet wools and other similar wools: such as Don-skoil, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere.

For the purpose of carrying into effect the classification herein provided, a sufficient number of distinctive samples of the various kinds of wool or hair embraced in each of the three classes above named, selected and prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and duly verified by him, (the standard samples being retained in the Treasury Department,) shall be deposited in the custom-houses and elsewhere, as he may direct, which samples shall be used by the proper officers of the customs to determine the classes above specified, to which all imported wools belong. And upon wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty-two cents or less per pound, the duty shall be ten cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, eleven per cent. ad valorem; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty-two cents per pound, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the second class, and upon all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be thirty-two cents or less per pound, the duty shall be ten cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, eleven per cent. ad valorem; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed thirty-two cents per pound, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, ten per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the third class the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported into the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be twelve cents or less per pound, the duty shall be three cents per pound; upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed twelve cents per pound, the duty shall be six cents per pound: Provided, That any wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, which shall be imported in any other than the ordinary condition as now and heretofore practiced, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be subject to pay twice the amount of duty to which it would otherwise be subjected, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That when wool of different qualities is imported in the same bale, bag, or package, it shall be appraised by the appraiser, to determine the rate of duty to which it shall be subjected, at the average aggregate value of the contents of the bale, bag, or package; and when bales of different qualities are embraced in the same invoice at the same price, whereby the average price shall be reduced more than ten per cent. below the value of the bale of the best quality, the value of the whole shall be appraised according to the value of the bale of the best quality; and no bale, bag, or package shall be liable to a less rate of duty in consequence of being invoiced with wool of lower value: And provided further, That the duty upon wool of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed; and that the duty upon wool of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the amount of the duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed. On sheepskins and Angora goat skins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be thirty per cent. ad valorem; and on woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks, the duty shall be twelve cents per pound.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed by law on the articles hereinafter mentioned, and on such as may now be exempt from duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise herein enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duties, that is to say:

On woolen cloths, woolen shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not herein otherwise provided for, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description, composed wholly or in part of worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, except such as are composed in part of wool, not otherwise provided for, valued at not exceeding forty cents per pound, twenty cents per pound; valued at above forty cents per pound and not exceeding sixty cents per pound, thirty cents per pound; valued at above sixty cents per pound and not exceeding eighty cents per pound, forty cents per pound; valued at above eighty cents per pound, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, upon all the above-named articles, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines, twenty cents per pound and thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On bunting, twenty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On women's and children's dress goods and real or imitation Italian cloths, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, valued at not exceeding twenty cents the square yard, six cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at above twenty cents the square yard, eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That on all goods weighing four ounces and over per square yard, the duty shall be fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On clothing ready made, and wearing apparel of every description, and balmoral skirts and skirting, and goods of similar description, or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other like animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, except knit goods, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, forty per cent. ad valorem.

On weltings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords, and tassels, dress trimmings, head nets, buttons or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, wrought by hand or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, or mohair, or of which wool, worsted, or mohair is a component material, unmixed with silk, fifty cents per pound, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem.

On Aubusson and Axminster carpets, and carpets woven whole for rooms, fifty per cent. ad valorem; on Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, wrought by the Jacquard machine, seventy cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on Brussels carpets wrought by the Jacquard machine, forty-four cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on patent velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, forty cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on tapestry Brussels carpets, printed on the warp or otherwise, twenty-eight cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on treble ingrain, three-ply, and worsted chain Venetian carpets, seventeen cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on yarn Venetian and two-ply ingrain carpets, twelve cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on druggets and bookings, printed, colored, or otherwise, twenty-five cents per square yard, and, in addition thereto, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; on hump or jute carpeting, eight cents per square yard; on carpets and carpetings of wool, flax, or cotton, or parts of either, or other material not otherwise herein specified, forty per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bed-sides, and other portions of carpets or carpeting shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and that the duty on all other mats, (not exclusively of vegetable material,) screens, hassocks, and rugs, shall be forty-five per cent. ad valorem.

On oil-cloths for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, valued at fifty cents or less per square yard, thirty-five per cent. ad valorem; valued at over fifty cents per square yard, and on all other oil-cloth, (except silk oil-cloth,) and on water-proof cloth, not otherwise provided for, forty-five per cent. ad valorem; on oil silk cloth, sixty per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. I want to have an opportunity to strike out the third section in reference to the lower grades of wool.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes

58, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. HARDING of Kentucky, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes seventy-four, noes not counted.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTLAND SUFFERERS.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of the sufferers by the fire at Portland, Maine.

The first section of the bill provides that all goods, wares, and merchandise which may be sent from places without the limits of the United States as gratuitous contributions to the relief of sufferers by the fire which occurred at Portland, Maine, July 4 and 5, 1866, shall, when imported at the port of Portland and consigned to the proper authorities for distribution, be admitted duty free.

The second section provides that there shall be allowed and paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, on all materials actually used in buildings erected on the ground where said fire occurred, a drawback of the import duties paid on the same; provided, that said materials shall have been imported at the port of Portland during the term of one year from and after the 5th day of July, 1866.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the bill unless the second section be stricken out.

Mr. LYNCH moved to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

Mr. LYNCH demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LYNCH, and Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-six, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended.

The bill was received and read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman from Maine to let me move to strike out the second section.

Mr. LYNCH. The whole amount will be very small. The amount of goods imported will be of small consequence.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What about the second section?

Mr. LYNCH. It provides for drawback on lumber. Up to March last there was no duty on lumber. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the bill on the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 36, noes 60.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 42.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. LYNCH, were appointed.

The House was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-four, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LYNCH demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. LYNCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back Senate amendments to House bill No. 737, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, recommending concurrence in some and non-concurrence in others.

First amendment:

Strike out the following:
For facilitating communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electrical telegraph, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

After "one hundred" insert "fifty," so it will read:
For expenses in detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, as well as the coins of the United States, $150,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Insert "grading and fencing grounds, &c.," so it will read:
For completion of north wing of Treasury extension, grading and fencing grounds, &c., $300,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Add to the foregoing paragraph:
Provided, That the building shall be constructed in accordance with the plan prescribed by the joint committee of Congress as exemplified in the construction of the south wing.

Mr. KASSON. That plan was changed in its application to the south wing. By inadvertence in the Senate the plan was perpetuated as to the new wing. The Senate is convinced that it made a mistake. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

In line twelve, after the word "dollars," insert:
For expenses of detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in perpetrating frauds on the United States, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

The committee recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

On page 3, line two, after the word "dollars," insert:
For the purpose of preparing for publication under the direction of the Secretary of War, and of printing at the Government Printing Office five thousand copies of the first volume of the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion, compiled by the Surgeon General; and for the purpose of preparing for publication, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and of printing at the Government Printing Office five thousand copies of the Medical Statistics of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, to be completed by Surgeon J. H. Baxter, $30,000: Provided, That the editions of both publications thus ordered direct: And provided further, That the necessary engraving and lithographing for these publications may be executed under the direction of the Secretary of War without advertisement.

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The seventh amendment of the Senate was on page 3, to strike out lines three, four, five, and six, in which the committee recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

On page 3, line twelve, after the word "dollars," insert:

For the repairs of the custom-house and post office and the walks and fences adjoining the same, at Middletown, Connecticut, $5,000, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

For the erection of a chapel in the Naval Academy grounds at Annapolis, Maryland, $25,000; and the existing appropriation for the enlargement of the chapel is hereby repealed.

For reconstructing and repairing the levees on the Mississippi river, in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas, $1,500,000, to wit: $595,000 in the State of Louisiana; $555,000 in the State of Mississippi, and $250,000 in the State of Arkansas, as nearly as may be with a proper regard to the efficiency of the repairs; said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall at the next session of Congress make an accurate and detailed report to each House thereof, of the amount of money expended under this appropriation, the amount of work done, how and in what manner, where and by whom, the particular levees repaired or reconstructed, the rates paid for work and materials, the condition of the levees, the areas protected by such repairs or reconstruction, and what sum, if any, remains unexpended.

The committee recommended concurrence in the amendment with an amendment striking out the last clause thereof.

Mr. STEVENS. Non-concurrence.

Mr. KASSON. This amendment embraces three propositions. The first two the committee agreed to; the third, which is in regard to the improvement of the levees, they disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The amendment consists of three propositions; first, the post office at Middletown; second, the chapel at Annapolis, and third, in regard to the levees. The committee recommend concurrence, with an amendment striking out all in regard to the levees.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to state to the House that I understand the action of the committee a little differently. If the question was to concur with the amendment the chairman will remember it must have failed. There is, I think, an error in the report. But whether there is an error or not, the question is presented to the House, and I shall be glad to have its attention for five minutes. In my opinion, the House ought to concur in the amendment of the Senate, which was reported to the Senate by a select committee, was fully debated and argued in the Senate at great length, and only five Senators in the whole body were found to oppose the proposition for the improvement of the lower Mississippi river.

The proposition is to appropriate $1,500,000 for the immediate necessary repairs of the levees of the Mississippi river in the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, and the reasons for it I will briefly state. There are many (about thirty-one) thousand square miles of the best cotton and sugar lands in the United States that have been formerly reclaimed from overflow and used for the cultivation of cotton. By reason of the great inundations that have occurred during and since the war, some of the crevasses of the levees have been caused by the rebel forces and others by the Union armies, during the military occupation of the country, these valuable lands of unequalled fertility are rapidly coming under the dominion of the canebrakes of the South. Unless something is speedily done they will be rendered useless for years to come. Not only will the farms be rendered incapable of cultivation, but the laborers of the South, the freedmen, to the number of hundreds of thousands, will be without employment there unless the improvement is made, and you will have to continue to vote your millions for their support. With this improvement you will not only cultivate the habit of labor, but you will provide the means for paying them for the service which they perform; and in addition to that you can produce out of these lands, as the report of the select committee indicates, at least two million five hundred thousand bales of cotton annually, which, with an internal revenue tax of three cents per pound will pay some thirty millions of the internal revenue of the United States annually.

The necessity for immediate action is this: if the appropriation is not made at this time you will not be able to employ your labor during the coming winter to effect the repairs, and you will lose the entire next year's crop. With the addition of that next year's crop we can make the balance of exchange between this country and Europe decidedly in our favor. Without that crop our embarrassments may still continue. With the cotton tax you not only replace this money in the Treasury, but you more than double, you treble or quadruple, the amount expended out of the proceeds of the crop. I have made a very brief statement and I now desire to get a vote upon it as soon as may be.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the decision of the committee to non-concur in this amendment will be sustained. Prior to the establishment of what was called the confederate government the planters of the region in question maintained their own levees and took care of their own lands, as we drain our marshes, maintain our dikes and embankments, and fence and work our farms in the North. Under the confederate government they imposed the duty of maintaining the levees or dikes upon the public treasury. The levees were destroyed while the owners of the lands they protected were waging war upon our Government, and now the attempt is made by this amendment of the Senate to saddle upon the people of the country the cost of repairing the damages of war and neglect. I cannot consent to tax my constituents in order to reward rebels whose lands are broad baronies. Sir, the Union people of the Gulf States do not wish us to do it, and in order that there may be no question of this assertion I ask the Clerk to read from the New Orleans Tribune of the 20th an article entitled "The Mississippi Levee Swindle."

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

"THE MISSISSIPPI LEVEE SWINDLE.—We sincerely hope Congress will not make an appropriation to repair the levees along the Mississippi river. No greater attempt to swindle the loyal people of the country has ever been witnessed than that now attempted by a number of leading rebels at Washington to have Uncle Sam to improve their plantations and protect them from inundation.

"According to natural law and the provisions of the Louisiana statutes, ditches, canals, levees, &c., necessary for the drainage or protection of plantations are to be made by and at the expense of the planters themselves. This has always been the case until the coming into power of the late rebel Legislature, when the taxes paid by the people of the whole State were squandered on levees of plantations in but a small portion of the State. The people of New Orleans and other parishes pay heavily enough for their own levees; and it was a gross outrage to take their moneys to build the levees of rebel planters elsewhere. It was by such shameful means that the State became bankrupt.

"The planters abandoned their homes, neglected their levees, and went into the rebellion against their Government. They pronounced Congress a rump. They pass new slave codes. They oppress, imprison, and murder Union men, and set themselves up in defiance of the Government of the United States. They are still waging a war against the Union. Yet in the true character of a bogus 'chivalry' they petition Congress to build their levees. We hope Congress will do no such thing. The breakings of the levees is owing to the neglect of planters who went into the rebellion. These very planters were formerly very adverse to the making of internal improvements by the General Government. They have not yet recanted their State-right heresies. They deserve no aid from the loyal people.

"The truth is, the oligarchy is bankrupt and about to sell out. This levee scheme is the last effort of the rebel planters to hold their heads 'above water.'

"Let Congress give them an appropriation and the oligarchy will again thrive. Let Congress refuse, and these rebels who now declare that they will not sell a foot of land to a Yankee or a negro, will be ruined, as they deserve to be, and then their plantations will be sold out. Union men, new men of energy and patriotism, but of small means, will then have some chance. The large plantations will then be divided into small farms, in the northern style, and every poor loyal man will have an opportunity to purchase. It is of the utmost importance to the loyal millions that Congress should refuse the unjust appropriation demanded by the Gibsons, Claibornes, and other notorious rebels from this State. Not a loyal paper of this State indorses their wicked demands. Not a loyal man in Louisiana wishes their success. Let Congress study this subject carefully. Let it stand by the poor down-trodden Union people. Let it beware how it gives aid and comfort to our enemies and new life to the expiring oligarchy. Congress owes it to its friends in this State to refuse its sanction to this swindling scheme, by which the money of the United States Government is to be expended in enriching its enemies and tightening the bonds which already hang so heavily on the Union men. Let Congress do nothing and the oligarchy is dead."

Mr. KELLEY. I now ask the reading of a brief paragraph from another Louisiana paper, the organ of the owners of the levees, the people who are now applying for this relief. It is from the New Orleans Times of the 20th of the present month, the date of the Tribune from which the article has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Let the radicals, STEVENS, SUMNER, et id omne genus, repent of their misdeeds, and we will forgive the past and shake hands with them. But let them, repent as speedily as possible for the day of their salvation draws to a close. If they neglect the present opportunity, and especially if they should resort to their usual practice of endeavoring to thwart the efforts of the friends of the Constitution, who desire to restore the Union to its integrity and to promote a spirit of reconciliation among all parties, we cannot answer for the consequences."

Mr. KELLEY. I hope we shall not give these people $1,500,000, with which to replenish their cartridge-boxes. If they mean to have another war let them wage it with their own means, and not ours.

Mr. KASSON. In answer to what has been read from the New Orleans Tribune, I wish to have read what the New York Tribune says on the subject. It is as follows:

"SOUTHERN LEVEES.—The extraordinary floods of this season have proved fearfully destructive in the Southwest. Louisiana, west of the Mississippi and south of the Red river, has been mainly under water, perhaps still is; while eastward of the Mississippi, the rich valley of the Yazoo, with its tributaries, embracing three million five hundred thousand acres of the most productive cotton land in the world, is in good part so flooded as to be scarcely habitable. This is partly owing to the floods; partly to the natural wasting and caving in of the banks during the last three or four years of war, which rendered proper attention to them impossible; and partly to their being cut from time to time in the prosecution of hostilities. It is probable that not less than ten million acres of the richest portions of the Southwest, capable of producing a bale (four hundred pounds) of cotton to the acre, have thus been so flooded that they for this year can at best barely subsist their scattered, wasted inhabitants, instead of adding, as they might, some fifty million dollars to the exportable produce of the country.

"The inhabitants of the Yazoo valley have, therefore, appealed to Congress for aid. They are not represented in either House; they are utterly without capital, or the means of obtaining it; but they want to go to work and enrich their country; and they will, if they can be protected against the devastating floods which they are wholly unable to shut out.

"Congress having decided to put a duty of five cents per pound on raw cotton, must, if only for the Treasury's sake, endeavor to stimulate and expand the cotton culture. Had $5,000,000 been seasonably expended on the levees of the Mississippi, Yazoo, and Red rivers, not less than double the amount would have been added to the revenue from this year's product of cotton alone; and the good thus effected would have endured and borne fruit for years, much of it forever. Assuming that the cotton tax will have to be borne for five years, $5,000,000 expended on levees this year, and $1,000,000 per annum for the next four—$9,000,000 in all—would return to the Treasury not less than $50,000,000, beside adding immensely to the development and expansion of our national wealth.

"We beg Congress not to adjourn without considering and acting on this subject. Grant that it is too late to effect anything this year; if not acted on now it will be too late to provide protection for the industry of next year. But if Congress should now act we may be certain of a very large extension of planted surface next year, and at least double crops on all the richest cotton and sugar lands of the prolific Southwest."

This is the sentiment not only of the New York Tribune. Almost all the New York papers, as well as the Chicago papers, the Cincinnati papers, the Chronicle of this city—in fact, all the radical leading organs in the country have urged this measure upon us as a duty which we owe to the financial and agricultural interests of the country. They point to the fact, which must be obvious to every reflecting mind, that this is not a measure for the benefit of the rebels in the sense in which it is spoken of. Where will these people get the implements with which this work will be done? In Massachusetts or Pennsylvania. Where will they get the skilled labor for the construction of these levees? Where they have always procured such labor—from the Ohio and upper Mississippi rivers. Where will they get the pork and the flour to sustain the laborers? On the banks of the upper Mississippi and its tributaries. And I tell gentlemen that when any question in regard to that great river is up, whether it concerns a locality at the mouth of that river or at the head of the river, it becomes men interested in the great Mediterranean valley to stand by the interests of that river.

Let these levees be broken down or swept away, and the mouths of the Mississippi river will soon become blocked up more fearfully than they have been by the alluvial deposits which have been accumulating year by year. Competent engineers have advocated projects for straightening the current of the Mississippi, to increase its velocity, and thus keep its entrances clear. Yet we are now told that we must allow this river to spread over miles each side of its proper bed, inundating a vast country capable of adding hundreds of millions annually to the wealth of the country. If those levees were rebuilt, the proprietors who now cannot sell their lands at a dollar per acre, would be able to cultivate those lands and make them highly productive, contributing largely to the wealth of the nation.

If gentlemen still indulging the war spirit want to hang rebels let them hang them by the rules of law and justice; if they want to starve rebels let them enact it upon the statute-book that they shall be starved. But when we are legislating here for the great interests of the country, let us legislate like statesmen, not placing dependence upon newspaper articles which are dishonorable to the country from which they come, for they are in disregard of what every man knows to be the best interests of that country. I ask gentlemen not to disregard the fact that by the rebuilding of these levees we shall increase the production of cotton, thereby diminishing its cost to us who consume it, reducing largely the present high prices of cotton goods, as well as increasing largely our internal revenue.

Mr. STEVENS. If we all indulge in such platitudes as my friend has we will never get through this bill during this session.

Mr. KASSON. Did the gentleman say latitudes or platitudes?

Mr. STEVENS. Platitudes. I hope nothing will come up again so near the heart of my friend in the interest of the rebels. This, in my judgment, is a most shameful attempt on the part of the enemies of the country. Of this General Claiborne who comes here I have nothing to say. I asked him whether he was a rebel and in the rebel army and he said that he was but that he was now willing to submit. Not one of these States has yet made its peace with the Union. Not one of these States is represented here, not one of them has a Representative which can in its name rise on this floor and speak in behalf of its interests. They have to look abroad for men to act for them as attorneys. Shall we grant this when we refuse to pay our own honest debts? Shall we grant this when the respectable chairman of the Committee of Claims refuses to pay an old woman whose house was burned down, because we have no money? Let them build their own levees. Let them raise their own cotton. I would not be in favor of hanging them, but I do not think I should interfere if the Lord should choose to drown them out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. I ask my colleague whether the difference is not while those who are opposed to him are for damming the Mississippi he is for damning the rebels. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I am not for hanging them, but God forbid I should give them a reward for having cost us so many hundreds of millions of money and so many hundreds of thousands of lives! I see no symptom of repentance except when they come here asking us for an appropriation of millions of dollars. I do not see why we should grant it when we persistently refuse to compensate our own citizens whose houses have been burned or plundered by these very rebels. When loyal citizens come here for remuneration they are told we cannot afford it at this time, that we have no money. Sir, I cannot endure the idea of paying this money when we refuse the just demands of our own citizens. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. STEVENS. I will yield the floor to the gentleman if he will renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. I will give it back to him again so that he may renew the demand.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield the floor to the gentleman only on condition that he shall demand the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the previous question will not be seconded until I shall have an opportunity of saying a word.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I said the other day, in some remarks on this subject, that I believed ultimately it would be the duty of the United States to assist in the management of the Mississippi river, and I am still of that opinion. I refer to it because it is necessary to qualify what I have to say to-day in reference to this particular measure. I believe the people of Louisiana deserve that assistance, and there is no man in this country who will more readily and heartily assist them in that way when the time shall arrive. But, sir, I am against this measure for reasons which I will proceed briefly to state. We had, a couple of months since, several intelligent gentlemen from New Orleans, who asked assistance of the Government to open the mouth of the Mississippi river. They said it was so shoaled that large vessels could not get from the river into the Gulf of Mexico. Gentlemen now come from Louisiana and ask us to dike the Mississippi river. Thus we have a proposition, in the first instance, to excavate its mouth so ships can get out; and then, in the second instance, that the banks shall be leveed so the water shall be retained in the bed of the stream. The reason of this is that the management of the Mississippi river is upon a false principle; and it never can be safely managed nor controlled for the benefit of the people of that country until the system is changed. It is against nature. Nature has clearly indicated a plan for the management of the Mississippi. It has made outlets to the right and to the left for the surplus water of that great stream, navigable for so many thousand miles, to flow out into the Gulf. In our part of the country the rivers flow in, the small rivers create the large, but in the lower Mississippi the rivers flow out. In the first instance it is an arrangement of nature for the purpose of creating rivers; and in the second it is one of the methods adopted by nature for the purpose of preserving rivers.

Now, sir, the management of the Mississippi river absolutely requires that the present system of levees shall be in a degree abandoned, and that the system of nature shall be in a degree restored. Between the Gulf of Mexico and the northern boundary of Tennessee there are from fifty to one hundred of these bayous and rivers, the natural outlets of the Mississippi river necessary to the preservation of this country. From the system which has been adopted there, all these bayous and rivers have been closed by the drift-wood that comes down from above. The consequence is that the stream of the Mississippi rises, and levees are built to contain the volume of water in the bed of the river and thereby protect the country from an overflow. Now, sir, these rivers and bayous must be again opened, and that will in a great degree let off the surplus water and relieve the country and the Government of the United States, if you please, from the expense and danger attending the present system. I endeavored to open these bayous myself two or three years ago. And the very men who are here now asking for an appropriation of money by the Government of the United States to maintain the levees, represent others who shot the soldiers and burned the steamers engaged in that work whenever they could find an opportunity to do so.

I touch upon another part of the subject. The effect of these levees is constantly to lift up the bed of the stream. And as a consequence the levees have to be made higher and higher from year to year. And the effect of raising the bed of the stream—being closed—the natural outlets for the surplus water, is to throw a considerable part of the sediment that comes from twenty thousand miles of navigable waters into the mouth of the river. There it meets the returning flood of the Gulf of Mexico, which sweeps back the sediment brought down by the stream, and it is deposited in the mouth of the river, which is constantly shoaling, until the navigation is rendered so difficult that the vessels of the United States sometimes are compelled to lay there two or three weeks. That is altogether in consequence of the levee system. And whenever that system shall be abandoned or changed, and the natural outlets of the river opened, then this sediment at the mouth of the river will be deposited elsewhere, and that difficulty at least will be removed.

There is one other trouble in regard to the management of this river to which I will allude. There is now in Louisiana a servile population that is not yet in possession of the rights that it demands, and which in time it must have. It is a population upon which the country is dependent for its labor. I fully and honestly believe that the present condition of things cannot long continue without the resistance of that population to the people in authority there at the present time. And I cannot entertain any doubt whatever, from my own conviction, that whenever resistance shall come that population will have the sympathy if not the support of the great mass of the people of the United States. Now suppose this work completed, in what condition do you find that country? The river is maintained in its bed by levees, and lifted above the face of the country. Every year the river is more elevated and the country comparatively lower. It runs as it were on the ridge of a hill. A single man in a single hour of a night can open them, deluge the whole country and destroy property and life there. That is the fact in this case, and it is one that must be considered.

And that brings me to another question, more important than all else. I feel an affection and an interest for the people of Louisiana as strong as that for my own native Commonwealth. There is no man in this country who would be more willing than I am to give them every assistance, either by means of the power or the treasure of the Government of the United States; but I ask that the provision of the Constitution which requires the establishment of a republican form of government shall be first complied with before they demand or request assistance from us.

I will not go into a disquisition upon the question of what constitutes a republican government. But I will say briefly that one of the requisites of a republican government, in my belief, is that it shall be in harmony with the sentiment of the people of the United States. And while I say, as I have said before and will say hereafter, that the people of Louisiana have no interest hostile to the Government of the United States, and will be, I believe, in their hearts, when they are left to their own opinions and their own conduct, loyal to its interests and to its institutions, yet I comprehend perfectly well that the power of that country is now in the hands of men who have interests hostile to the Government, and who in their hearts are not loyal to its principles or its institutions. Had it been left to the people of the State of Louisiana we should have had none of these troubles that now affect us politically or economically. But the power is in the hands of men who have very recently been engaged in a most determined effort to destroy this Government.

And while I disagree with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who suggests hanging these men; or with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who suggests imprisoning, or with another gentleman who suggests drowning them, I will say this, that I am against giving them the power to control and destroy this Government. And we are asked to appropriate for the benefit of these men, not merely $1,500,000, but at least $25,000,000, for if we begin this work we must go on with it. And if we appropriate $1,500,000 for the management and control of the waters of the Mississippi, we will be giving that amount to the enemies of this country, to be expended not so much for controlling the river as for controlling the opinions of that section of the country. I am against it.

But when the time shall have come that they have formed a government in harmony with the spirit and principles of the Government and people of the United States, I will be the first and the most urgent to advocate aiding them from the Treasury and by the power of the Government. They have an opportunity to do so now. There are organizations yet remaining in that State by which it can be immediately put into harmonious connection with the Government of the country, and instead of seeking here for an expenditure of the money of the Treasury for their lands, they would be working to make their government what it should be, and then I know that every member of this House would be willing to give to them all that will be necessary for their prosperity.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was first upon agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment of the Senate, namely, strike out from the amendment of the Senate the following:

For reconstructing and repairing the levees on the Mississippi river, in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, $1,500,000, to wit: $985,000 in the State of Louisiana, $655,000 in the State of Mississippi, and $230,000 in the State of Arkansas, as nearly as may be with a proper regard to the efficiency of the repair; said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall, at the next session of Congress, make an accurate and detailed report to each House thereof of the amount of money expended under this appropriation, the amount of work done, how and in what manner, where and by whom, the particular levees repaired or reconstructed, the rates paid for work and material, the condition of the levees, the areas protected by such repairs or reconstruction, and what sums, if any, remain unexpended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the remainder of the amendments of the Senate be considered, as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

Insert the following:

To provide for the survey of the Isthmus of Darien, under the direction of the War Department, with a view to the construction of a ship-canal in accordance with the report of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory to the Navy Department, $40,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to collect reliable statistical information concerning the gold and silver mines of the western States and Territories, which shall include the labor and capital employed, the product and the modes of working the same, and which information shall be reported to Congress at its next session, $15,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence, with an amendment, to strike out the words "at its next session $15,000," and insert "$10,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

Insert the following:

For compensation to the consul at Quebec, in Canada, $1,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, to rent such rooms in the vicinity of the Department for the use of the Pension Office as may be deemed necessary for the transaction of the business of that office, $3,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence, with an amendment striking out the following paragraphs:

For the continuation of the work upon the north portico of the Patent Office building, $50,000.

To enable the superintendent of Indian affairs for California to collect information and testimony in regard to the claim of George McDougal for beef furnished Indians in the lower part of California in the year 1852, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a building at St. Paul, Minnesota, for a custom-house, post office, the accommodation of the Federal courts, and other necessary Government purposes, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $100,000.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

On page 114, line twenty, insert:

For payment in part for the purchase of sites and the erection of school-houses in the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, payable to the board of commissioners of primary schools of said county, the sum of $10,000.

For support of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Association, $10,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the persons employed by the Committees for the District of Columbia of the two Houses of Congress under the provisions of joint resolution approved June 18, 1864, entitled "A resolution to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia," the compensation provided in said resolution, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

On page 17, line twenty-five, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

That no portion of said sum shall be expended until the alteration of said building is submitted to the architect of the Capitol extension, and he shall certify it is well adapted to the purpose contemplated, and that its cost will not exceed $60,000; and the said sum of $30,000 shall only be paid in installments as an equal amount derived from other sources shall be expended on said building, and if the said hospital company accept this appropriation it shall be held as an agreement on their part that the building is forever to be considered and held dedicated to the relief of sick and indigent persons without distinction as to creed or color, and shall remain under the care of the Sisters of Charity as incorporated under the act entitled "An act to incorporate Providence Hospital of the city of Washington, District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864: Provided, That if the said property should ever be sold or diverted from the uses expressed in the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate Providence Hospital in the city of Washington, District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864, then the sum of $30,000 shall first be paid out of the proceeds thereof into the United States Treasury to reimburse the sum hereby appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

On page 17, line twenty-five, strike out all after the word "dollars" to the end of line six on page 18.

The words proposed to be stricken out are as follows:

Providence Hospital, District of Columbia: For the purpose of aiding in the erection of an additional building to the Providence Hospital, in the city of Washington, $30,000: Provided, That if the said property should ever be sold or diverted from the uses expressed in the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate Providence Hospital, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864, then the sum of $30,000 shall be first paid out of the proceeds thereof into the United States Treasury to reimburse the sum hereby appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

On page 18, after line six, insert the following: For the National Association for the relief of destitute colored women and children, incorporated under an act of Congress approved February 14, 1863, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the officers of the association.

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to reimburse the corporation of Washington for expenses incurred in improving streets and avenues passing through and by property of the General Government, under the third section of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the inhabitants of the city of Washington," passed May 15, 1820, $47,245 81.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence, with an amendment striking out the first paragraph in regard to the National Association.

The amendment was agreed to; and, as amended, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

On page 18, strike out the following: For contingent fund for Joint Committee on the Library, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

On page 18, after line fourteen, insert as follows: For additional appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library to decorate the Capitol with such works of art as may be ordered and approved by said committee, as provided by act approved August 18, 1856, $5,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Insert after the word "dollars" at the end of the sentence in line five hundred and twenty-three, page 22, making an appropriation for the erection of a fire-proof brick building for the Treasury Department, the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to remove and sell at auction or otherwise, any portion of the presses, machinery, and apparatus employed in the Treasury building, which, from the diminution of the volume of business or otherwise, he may from time to time find to be no longer required.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The thirtieth amendment was merely verbal, making a word plural instead of singular; and was concurred in.

Thirty-first amendment:

Insert the following: For compensation of surveyor general of Nevada, $3,000.

For compensation of the clerks in his office, $5,000. For office rent, messengers, furniture, books, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses of office, $3,000.

On page 2, line twenty-six, after the word "dollars," insert:

For compensation of the surveyor general of Montana, $3,000.

For compensation of clerks in his office, $5,000. For office rent, messengers, furniture, books, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses of office, $3,000.

The committee recommended concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

Add "and fifty," on page 21, line twenty, after the word "hundred."

The amendment was non-concurred in in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

Thirty-third amendment:

On page 21, line twenty-two, insert as follows: Appropriations required for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Seminole nation of Indians, under treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867:

For this amount, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable the Seminoles to occupy, restore, and improve their farms, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $30,000.

For the purchase of agricultural implements, seeds, corn, and other stock, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $20,000.

For the erection of a mill as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $15,000.

Interest on $50,000 from the date of the ratification of the treaty, at the rate of five per cent per annum, to be paid annually, for the support of schools, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

Interest on $20,000 from the date of the ratification of the treaty, at the rate of five per cent per annum, to be paid annually for the support of the Seminole government, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

For this amount to be expended for subsisting the Seminole Indians as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $40,362.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the losses that may be awarded under the provisions of article four of treaty of March 21, 1866, as per third article of said treaty, $50,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of a board of commissioners, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to investigate the losses of the loyal Seminole Indians, as per fourth article treaty of March 21, 1866, $720.

For the erection of agency buildings, as per sixth article of treaty of March 21, 1866, $10,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause a census of each tribe to be taken, as per first clause seventh article treaty of March 21, 1866, $2,500.

For transportation of such articles as may be purchased under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the Seminole Indians, under treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $12,000.

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-fourth amendment was on page 21, line twenty-seven, to strike out "$1,800;" and insert "$2,500;" which was non-concurred in in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

The thirty-fifth amendment was on page 22, line fourteen, to strike out "$900" and insert "$1,095;" which was non-concurred in in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

The thirty-sixth amendment was on page 22, line twenty-one, to strike out "nine" and insert "twelve;" which was concurred in in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

The amendments numbered thirty-seven to forty-four inclusive, all being changes in figures, were non-concurred in according to the recommendation of the committee.

Forty-fifth amendment:

On page 22, after line ten, insert: That so much of any moneys in the Treasury known as the commutation fund as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the payment to loyal persons claiming service or labor from colored volunteers or drafted men, the amounts heretofore or hereafter to be awarded them under the provisions of section twenty-four of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1864, for each person so claimed to be held to service or labor, who has enlisted or been drafted into the military service of the United States; but such payment shall in no case be made to any person except upon satisfactory proof that the claimant has firmly and faithfully maintained his or her adherence and allegiance to the Government of the United States by defending its cause against the government and forces of these so-called confederate States of America, in all suitable and practicable ways, and according to his or her ability and opportunity: Provided, That no money shall be paid under the foregoing provision until the final report of the commissioners under the act aforesaid shall have been made of all of the claims embraced under the twenty-fourth section of the said act.

The committee recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

The forty-sixth amendment was on page 23, to strike out after the word "dollars," in line twenty-one, to the word "be" in line twenty-six; which was concurred in according to the recommendation of the committee.

The forty-seventh amendment was on page 25, to strike out lines three to seven inclusive, which was concurred in according to the recommendation of the committee.

Forty-eighth amendment:

Add the following as an additional section: Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to dispose of the property saved from the rebel steamer Florida, and distribute the proceeds thereof as other prize money is required by law to be distributed.

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

Add the following: Sec. — And be it further enacted, That midshipmen and acting midshipmen in the Navy of the United States shall be entitled to one ration, or commutation therefor.

The committee recommended non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

Add the following: And be it further enacted, That so much of the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes," as appropriates $3,750 for a minister resident in Greece, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The committee recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-first amendment:

Add the following: Sec. — And be it further enacted, That there is hereby appropriated for payment of traveling expenses of members of the first regiment of Michigan cavalry from the place in Utah Territory where they were mustered out of service in 1861 to the place of their enrollment, a sum sufficient to allow to each member $325, deducting therefrom the amount paid to each for commutation of travel, pay, and subsistence by the Government when thus mustered out, and that the accounts be settled and paid under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I trust the House will not follow the recommendation of the committee on this subject, and I will state the reasons why it should not. This regiment of cavalry was one of the first raised in the State during the war. It went through the regular term of service and reenlisted as a veteran regiment. After the surrender of the rebel army this regiment, for some cause, was sent to Utah when their term of service was within about two months of expiration. After having been retained in the service a little more than a year longer than their term of enlistment would have held them, they were informed in March last, by a mustering officer, that if they would consent to be mustered out there, at Salt Lake City, they might do so, and they should receive commutation for transportation home, but if they did not thus consent they would be retained in the service an indefinite length of time. All but seventy-nine, I think, of the regiment assented to the arrangement, were accordingly mustered out and received commutation, the men naturally supposing that the commutation would equal or nearly equal at least their expenses home. But when they came to ascertain the ratio at which commutation is estimated, they found it only furnished them about one third the necessary means to get home. Many of them, however, struggled home spending their own money, but some of them are to-day, according to my last information, at Salt Lake City, for want of the means to get home to their families and friends. Some of these are my own constituents and their families need their support.

I claim that it was a palpable wrong to compel these men to make their election either to be mustered out there or to remain in the service long after their term had expired. The proposition of the Senate is simply to pay them the actual cost of getting home, and it seems to me so plainly just that I do not feel any further necessity of urging it, except to say, without disparaging any other regiment, that this first regiment of Michigan cavalry was one of the best that ever entered the service. At the terrible battle of Gettysburg they made what was pronounced by all military men one of the most magnificent charges ever made by cavalry, absolutely defeating a flank movement of the enemy which was being prosecuted to success. The men have felt that it was a hardship to be thus retained in service longer than their term, and especially to be mustered out away off on the frontier, compelling them each to spend, as they have spent, about two hundred dollars of their own money to get home. It is a plain injustice. This proposition is simply to pay these men what it has cost them to get home.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the gentleman mean to say that he thinks it is the duty of Congress to pay $350,000 for transporting a regiment from Utah to their homes?

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. The duty of the Government is always to return the regiment to the point where it was mustered in.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes; but not at such a cost. It is too much.

Mr. STEVENS. This was a matter in reference to which we had no information from any of the Departments. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE] states exactly what he believes to be true—

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. The gentleman will allow me to say that the facts which I have stated are proved by evidence which I have here, comprising a statement of the Governor of Michigan and affidavits of a large number of the officers and men.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman had only asked us to concur in the statement that this is a most gallant regiment, we should have done it with great pleasure, because we are all convinced of that fact. But here is a case of a regiment mustered out at their own choice. They chose to be mustered out. Now, sir, there are thousands and tens of thousands of men who have been mustered out away from their homes. And are we to appropriate money to all of them in this way? At any rate the committee thought it right that the matter should be sent to a committee of conference, who could examine all the facts deliberately. I trust that we shall not vote money away in this loose manner.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I attach no blame to the House for not allowing this claim in the first instance, for the papers in the case were not in a complete and satisfactory form. Indeed, I did not know that the question had gone to the committee. I will state, however, that before the Senate committee evidence was presented substantiating all that has been stated by my colleague. It seems to me but just that Congress should pay the actual traveling expenses of this regiment from that distant point where they were discharged without being furnished with any adequate transportation. I hope that the House will not concur in the amendment made by our committee, but will stand by the action of the Senate and pay this money to the gallant regiment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs and for other purposes; and asked a conference with the House on the question.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that these men were mustered at such a distance from their homes by their own choice. Now, it should not be overlooked that at that time they had served a year beyond their term of enlistment; and I think it pardonable in them that, after serving that length of time beyond their enlistment, they should wish to go home. They were taken this distance by the Government, where the Government ought not to have taken them after their term of service had expired.

COMPENSATION OF COLLECTORS.

The SPEAKER stated that the Senate asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes on Senate bill No. 400, to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOOVER, of Massachusetts, moved that the House insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked for.

The motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATIONS—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER stated the question was on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 52, noes 42.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Fifty-second amendment:

Insert the following as a new section:
And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act to carry into effect the treaties between the United States and China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls, or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1860, shall extend to Egypt; and the consul general at Alexandria shall have the power provided by section twenty-two of such act for the consul general or consul residing at the capital of a country where there is no minister.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

Insert the following as a new section:
And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present session of Congress; and, in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate, and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. STEVENS demanded the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I want to say a word. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] It is a matter that affects me personally. [Cries of "Order!"]

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. WENTWORTH and Mr. SCOFIELD demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SCOFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to concur.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 114, not voting 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cooper, Jenckes, and Samuel J. Randall—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Dawes, Deftres, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koonz, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Storer, Taber, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trumble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—114.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Brewell, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Aschel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kellogg, Kerr, Kuykendall, Longyear, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Moorhead, Mouton, Noel, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Nathaniel C. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Woodbridge—79.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

During the vote,

Mr. JOHNSON said: Mr. Speaker, I voted under a misapprehension of the question; and in order that there may be no misunderstanding upon the subject I declare that I am in favor of increased compensation, so as to enable poor men to come to Congress. I vote "no," so that the section may go to a committee of conference, and the Presiding Officers of the two Houses may be provided for.

Several MEMBERS, for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHNSON,] changed their votes from the affirmative to the negative.

Mr. BIDWELL stated that his colleague, Mr. McRUER, who was absent on account of illness, if present, would have voted in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

Insert as follows:

And be it further enacted, That there be allowed and paid to the officers, clerks, messengers, and employees of the Senate, and to the Librarian, assistant Librarian, messengers, and other employees of the Congressional Library, an addition of twenty per cent. on their present pay, to commence with the present Congress; and the amount necessary to pay this allowance is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence with an amendment, adding the following to the amendment of the Senate:

And to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to execute the resolutions of the House of the present session, to regulate the compensation of its officers, clerks, clerks of committees, messengers, and other employees, including the payment of the same increased rate of compensation fixed by resolution of the House of June 25, 1866, to those clerks, committee clerks, messengers, and employees of the House (not including the stenographer of the House) not provided for in said resolution, but which is hereby authorized, and also to the Capitol police, such sum as may be required be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to Department officers appointed under heads of Departments, and to all chief clerks, principal clerks, and clerks of the first, second, third, and fourth classes, who shall be in the service of either of the Executive Departments or bureaus of the Government at Washington, including the foreman and clerks in the Government Printing Office, on the day of the approval of this act, and who shall also have been in such service for not less than six months prior thereto, an amount equal to twenty per cent. respectively on the amount of regular salary affixed to their respective appointments: Provided, That in adjusting and paying the same there shall be deducted the sum which shall have been paid to the beneficiaries since the 1st day of July, 1865, out of any sum appropriated by Congress for extra allowance to officers and clerks in any Department; and only the deficiency, if any, in such cases shall be allowed and paid to such beneficiaries: And provided further, That when any such salary shall have been increased since July 1, 1865, such increase shall be deducted from the amount hereby allowed; and the sum requisite to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to submit an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. I noticed from the reading of their amendment that the clerks in the Agricultural Department are not included. I presume that is an oversight of the committee.

Mr. KASSON. They are included in the amendment of the committee. It says expressly "of the Departments and bureaus."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Agricultural Department is not an Executive Department, nor is it a bureau in any Executive Department. The statute describes certain Executive Departments, but that is not one of them. I move to amend the amendment so as to include the Agricultural Department clerks and employes.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] whether the employes of the book-folding room are included in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KASSON. They are embraced under the head of "employes of the House." I now call the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

Insert the following:

The sum of $8,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the preservation of the harbor of Provincetown, Massachusetts, the same to be expended under the supervision of a commission or board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. In pursuance of the instructions of the House, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to the last amendment of the Senate concurred in by the House.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That instead of any grant of land or other bounty there shall be allowed and paid to each and every soldier, sailor, and marine who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States, and who has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one third dollars per month, or at the rate of $100 per year, as hereinafter provided, for all the time during which such soldier, sailor, or marine actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 19th day of April, 1865. And in the case of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged from the service on account of wounds received in battle, or while engaged in the line of his duty, the said allowance of bounty shall be computed and paid up to the end of the term of service for which his enlistment was made. And in case of the death of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, while in the service, or in case of his death after the discharge and before the end of his term of enlistment, if discharged on account of being wounded, as provided, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow if she has not been remarried, or if there be no widow, then to the minor child or children of the deceased who may be under sixteen years of age.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid, or payable under existing laws, by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request, prior to the 9th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to reenlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and who did actually enlist or accept promotion or was so transferred; "nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request, prior to the 9th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to reenlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and who did actually enlist or accept promotion or was so transferred;" so that the section will read:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That whenever application shall be made by any claimant, through any attorney or agent, the post office of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the claim, which charges in no case shall exceed the sum of five dollars; and every such application shall be accompanied by the written affidavit of the attorney or agent, that he has not charged, nor agreed for, and will not accept more than such sum of five dollars for his services in the case. The Paymaster General, or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the said attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than five dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall be forever thereafter excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That in case the payments shall be made in the form of a check, order, or draft, upon any paymaster, national bank, or Government depository in or near the district wherein the claimant may reside, it shall be necessary for the claimant to establish, by the affidavits of two credible witnesses, that he is the identical person named therein; but in no case shall such checks, orders, or drafts be made negotiable until after such identification.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any soldier, sailor, or marine to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other papers, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act; and all such transfers, assignments, barter, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended so to be conveyed by any such soldier, sailor, or marine.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any soldier, sailor, or marine, or of his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, shall be made unless the application be filed within two years from the passage of the act; and the settlement of accounts of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be made in the same manner as now provided by law.

Mr. STEVENS. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who desires to move an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by striking out the second section of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid or payable under existing laws, by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

Also amend the third section of the amendment by striking out the words "nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request, prior to the 9th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to reenlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and who did actually enlist or accept promotion or was so transferred;" so that the section will read:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. CONKLING to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a question of order. I do not know whether there is anything in it, but I will submit it to the Chair.

The House instructed the Committee on Appropriations to add to this civil appropriation bill the bounty bill as it passed the House after full discussion and consideration. The committee, in accordance with those instructions, have added that bill by way of amendment. I now raise the point of order that it is not competent to vary from that by proceeding to amend what the House has ordered to be put into the bill. The order of the House to the Committee on Appropriations, to put the bounty bill on this appropriation bill, is the same as if the House had put it on by direct vote. It is therefore not competent to strike out any portion of that which the House has inserted.

The SPEAKER. The instructions of the House to the Committee on Appropriations were to report back the bounty bill in the position of an amendment to this bill, the same as though it had been an amendment of the Senate, being still open to amendment the same as the Senate amendment, with this exception: the bounty bill amendment, occupying necessarily the place of an amendment to a Senate amendment, is open to amendment only in one degree. The bounty bill and the Senate amendments were all referred to the Committee on Appropriations; if the one cannot be amended when reported back to the House neither can the other.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] desires to offer an amendment. I will yield to him for that purpose, and then I will call the previous question.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to further amend the third section of the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That troops known as home guards, or other volunteer troops organized for local service, which are now excluded from bounties by the rulings of the War Department or under the terms of their enlistment, shall not participate in the bounties provided by this act or any part thereof; but this exclusion shall not apply to those voluntarily legalized as mustered into the three years' service of the United States under an act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes, approved February 13, 1862.

The SPEAKER. There is already pending an amendment to an amendment. No further amendment is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I must object to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] unless the Pennsylvania militia are included.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures;

A bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in the post offices of weights of the denomination of grams; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. CONKLING to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, upon which, the previous question having been seconded, Mr. STEVENS was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. If I can get the attention of the House a few moments, I will endeavor to state in a very few words the object of my amendment. I shall not begin by pretending at great length the regard I have for the soldiers and sailors of the Republic. I assume, for this purpose, that all men and all parties are sincerely willing to do everything that can be done, and to strain a point always in the interest of the soldiers and seamen who have fought in the late war.

This amendment is ostensibly for the purpose of equalizing bounties, but unless the amendment which I have offered shall prevail I submit to the House that it will do anything but equalize bounties. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] in making his point of order, if I understood him aright, said that this amendment, in the form of a bill, had once been fully considered and adopted by this House. If an opportunity had ever been afforded to consider this bill fully in this House, I doubt whether I should now be called upon to propose this amendment. But in the absence of all deliberation in the House we were brought, under the operation of the previous question, to a vote upon the bill, which, among other things, involves the incongruities which I shall endeavor to point out.

This bill involves an expenditure of from eighty to one hundred and fifty million dollars, according to an estimate made by a gentleman who assures me that he has looked at the record with great care, and upon whom we are all accustomed to rely in such matters. Now, sir, as to the operation of this bill. I trust I may be allowed to speak of the State of New York, because that State is an example of the manner in which the measure will operate upon the eastern and New England States generally. It will cost the State of New York $20,000,000 to pay the tax imposed by this bill; and my belief is that the soldiers of that State will not receive, under the bill, $500,000; nor do I believe that they will receive even $100,000, all told. Why? Because in the State of New York and in most of the New England States, almost from the outset of the rebellion—from a period, at all events, as early as the year 1862—bounties were paid by the State, by counties, by municipal corporations, and by voluntary associations; and these bounties are to be deducted altogether in estimating the additional bounty to be paid under this bill. Thus the House will see—I am still speaking of the State of New York as an example of all these eastern States—that while the tax for the payment of these bounties is to be uniform, as it must be, that State will be virtually excluded altogether from participating in the benefits of the bill. Is that right? If the State of New York, if the New England States had been unpatriotic, if they had been laggard or regally in supporting the war, a measure which would thus punish these States might be defended or excused. But on the contrary, we are to be punished because we came forward with our bounties at the outset of the rebellion and gave not only men but money in excess for the purpose of sustaining the war.

I may say that in my own district in the year 1862—I well remember the circumstances—under one single call twenty-four and three fourths per cent., one quarter of the entire assessed valuation of the taxable property, went to pay the bounties of soldiers and to provide for their families. This was under the call for three hundred thousand men. One quarter of the substance of the people, as it stood on the tax-book, went to pay these bounties. Ought we to be punished for that? Ought New York to be punished because with munificent hand she paid her soldiers and made provision for the families of those who first stepped forward as volunteers and went into the ranks? I think not, sir. Yet the effect of this proposition will be to impose upon States situated as New York is their quota of this tax, while their soldiers will be excluded from participating in the proceeds.

I may be told that the soldiers of New York have already received the bounty proposed by this measure for others, and that therefore they should not receive bounty again. Granting this for the sake of argument, will any gentleman explain to me how it is equitable that New York, New England, and Pennsylvania, having once paid these bounties, should now be compelled to submit to taxation to pay the same bounties over again to the soldiers of other States—States that in the beginning withheld this measure of munificence? But, sir, there is a latter branch of my amendment which proposes to strike out that provision of the bill which excludes from its benefits all those who ever asked to be discharged from the service. Look for one moment at the effect of that amendment.

When Richmond fell, when Petersburg fell, when the parapets of Fort Fisher were held after a hand to hand fight, the struggles went on very largely by eastern troops, it so happened by men raised in the eastern States, but the most of them, the war being virtually over, before the 9th of April, 1865, signified their desire en masse by regiments to be discharged from the service. Under the bill as it stands now all these regiments, the one hundred and seventeenth New York regiment for example, the first regiment that mounted the parapets of Fort Fisher, cut to pieces as it were, more than decimated, almost blotted out by that fight, when the question was put to them, would you like to be mustered out? they said certainly, the war being over, they would like to return home. These men are distinguished against and excluded by this bill because they were mustered out of the service after they had requested to be mustered out, such request being anterior to the 9th day of April, 1865.

If we are to do something for the soldiers in equalizing bounties, let it be done with impartial hand. Let the soldiers East and West participate in it. If it is to be sectional and confined to those of a particular portion of the country, then let us have some contrivance by which the admeasurement of taxes may also be confined to the same locality.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield the floor for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know how impatient the House is at this late hour of the session of discussion on any subject; and if this could have been permitted to come to a vote without discussion, I should not have troubled the House. I desire briefly to defend the bounty bill of the House as ordered to be attached to the bill now before the House as being an equal measure, eminently so. In the first place, it takes in no soldiers, though it is general in its terms, except those of 1861 and 1862. Those who came in after 1862 received large local bounties and will not come in under the provisions of this bill. Some, in 1862, received small local bounties of from seventy-five to one hundred dollars. Those, so far, will be subjected to deduction; but as a general rule, the soldiers to be benefited by this bill are principally the soldiers of 1861 and 1862—the early part of 1862.

What does the Government say to them? The Government, in the first place, does not recognize this bounty as a debt in any sense. The pay was the compensation of the soldier; but it does recognize the granting of bounty as an act of something more than charity, an act of generous justice to the men who have done good service. And when about to perform that act of generous justice the Government may be represented as calling all its children round who have been in the war and saying "We cannot equalize you; that is impracticable, but we will go as near it as possible. We propose every man who has gone into the service shall have eight and a half per month during the war." It says to every man coming round the Government personified for this purpose, "How much have you received from any source? What have you received from your State? What have you received from your county? What have you received from any volunteer association? If that is not more than eight and a half per month we will add to it. Those who have received more cannot complain if we do not when they have more than we propose to give others." The Government says to each one, "Our desire is that you shall have at the rate of $100 per year provided you have not already had it from any source whatever; if you have not we will make it up to you."

Then, again, the gentleman objects to another provision of the bill, and moves to amend it, and yet permits it to go as an amendment to the appropriation bill as directed by the House. It is that the generous donation of the Government of $8 33 per month should be deducted, or withheld rather, from those who asked to be discharged from the service not on account of wounds or disability, prior to the conclusion of the war. It seems to me to have been manifestly just, in saying to the soldiers, "We propose to give this to you for the time you have actually served," that this should be added: "We will give it to every one of you who held on till the end of the war, and did not voluntarily leave the service except on account of wounds or disability, or against your own will. If you left it because you were mustered out, then it is withheld; if you left it because of wounds, then it is not; but if you asked to be discharged voluntarily, before the termination of the war, while hostilities still continued, then we do not think it a hardship to withhold that which would equalize your pay."

I know the bill does not make all equal. It is impossible. But it comes nearer to it than any other proposition. The Government should ascertain how much each one has had and endeavor as far as practicable to put all on the same footing. And then when you take into consideration further that it relieves the States from the trouble they otherwise would have, it is a great point gained. If the Government of the United States undertakes to equalize bounties in this way and does not take into account the local bounties, what then? As soon as the soldiers have obtained what equalization they can from the Government of the United States you will find them all turning back to the several States, comparing their relative local bounties, and asking for equalization there.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I shall now ask the question to be taken, and shall not yield to anybody else.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONKLING, there were—ayes 41, noes 51.

Mr. CONKLING. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 61, nays 64, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Dixon, Eliot, Glossbrenner, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marston, Moreau, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Taber, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Van Aernam, Ward, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Baker, Benjamin, Bingham, Cooper, Cullom, DeForest, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Leitch, Marshall, Maynard, McClurg, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Phelps, Plants, Price, Ritter, Ross, Schenck, Shanklin, Spalding, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, and James F. Wilson—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos B. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, De-mas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kelso, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Moulton, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Wright—71.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask unanimous consent to propose the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That troops known as "home guards," or other volunteer troops, organized for local service, which are now excluded from bounties by the rulings of the War Department or under the terms of their enlistment, shall not participate in the bounties provided by this act or any part thereof; but this exclusion shall not apply to those volunteers legalized as mustered into the three-year service of the United States under an act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes, approved February 13, 1862.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object.

The question recurred on concurring in the amendment as amended; and being taken, there were—ayes 63, noes 33.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll-call having commenced,

Mr. STEVENS said: I ask unanimous consent that the morning session of to-day be extended until this bill shall be disposed of.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. There will not be time to complete the call and order a committee of conference before the recess.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I now withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the votes by which the amendments were severally concurred or non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the several amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

AIR-LINE RAILROAD—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 632, to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. ALLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The bill had previously been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being now engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question on the passage.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion and let us have a vote directly on the passage of the bill.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being taken on laying the bill on the table, it was disagreed to.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to make a privileged report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Army bill:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendment of the Senate to the substitute of the House for the Senate bill No. 138 to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States respectfully report that after full and free conference they have failed to agree, and therefore ask to be discharged.

ROBERT C. SCHENCK,

HALBERT B. PAINE,

SYDENHAM E. ANCONA,

Managers on the part of the House.

The committee was accordingly discharged.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask permission, on behalf of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] and myself, to make a statement. We met the conferees on the part of the Senate, and agreed to take up, as the basis of our action, the Senate amendment or substitute for the House substitute or amended bill; that is, the Senate's last form of a bill upon this subject. We found very soon that there was a material difference between us upon two or three leading points relating specially to what should be the general aggregate force of the Army. The House and Senate have approached each other nearly in the actual number of regiments. The House provided for sixty-one and the Senate for sixty-two regiments. The Senate had provided for twelve regiments of cavalry, and the House for six. The Senate converted the nine old large regiments of infantry into twenty-seven. The House converted them into twenty-two. The House took the two hundred and sixteen companies, added four companies, and made twenty-two regiments. The Senate took each battalion, added two companies to it, and made twenty-seven regiments. The Senate has provided for five additional regiments of infantry. It refused any provision for a Veteran Reserve corps, or any provision by which men wounded or disabled in the service, either the volunteer or regular, could be retained in the Army. The Senate allowed but three colored regiments.

All these things were discussed pro and con. The House conferees advanced from point to point, and at length (although they knew they were going against the sense of the House) agreed in regard to the Veteran Reserve corps, to give up one half, making the corps consist of five regiments. They agreed to drop three regiments of the colored infantry, coming down from eight to five. This was upon the condition that, having agreed to raise the cavalry from six regiments to ten, two of those cavalry regiments should be colored. This the Senate conferees agreed to. They insisted under these circumstances on having thirty-two regular white infantry regiments, made up of the old regiments. Proposition after proposition was made; and it may not be improper to state that at one time the House conferees were entirely satisfied that the whole question was settled by an agreement with them on the part of a majority of the Senate conferees. What they proposed to agree to ultimately as the most that they would concede was thirty-two regiments of infantry, to be made up of the old infantry regiments; ten regiments of cavalry, two to be colored; leaving the artillery (which both were agreed upon) at five regiments; and cutting down the Veteran Reserve corps to five regiments, (one half of what the House had insisted upon;) and the colored infantry to five.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] will yield for a moment. The Chair desires to suggest that, as this is probably the last day of the session, the taking of the recess, fixed at half past four o'clock p. m., be postponed till such time as the House sees proper to adjourn till the evening session.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. We went on until we reached that point where we thought there was an agreement, and where we still think there was an agreement. But one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, having been absent, returned and succeeded possibly in winning over one of the two who agreed with us. Thus the whole matter again fell. What we offered them was this: that instead of having sixty-one regiments, as the Senate proposed we would consent to cut the whole Army down to only fifty-seven regiments, and that we would take what we understood to have been once agreed to—five regiments of artillery; ten of cavalry; two to be colored; thirty-two regiments of infantry, instead of thirty-seven, or, as the Senate had it, forty-two; a Veteran Reserve corps of only five regiments, and five regiments of colored infantry. In addition to this there were disputes about a great number of details, but we went over the bill again and again and found that we were able to agree upon these various matters of detail substantially.

Now, sir, I come to what we have to propose. Congress cannot, without great detriment to the public service, adjourn without making some provision in regard to the Army. Gentlemen are aware that the Army now consists of numbers that may be expanded to some forty-three thousand, including nine regiments of three battalions each; but all these regiments are, in accordance with the requirements of the present law, about to be disbanded.

Along with this is a regiment of artillery, which in like manner was raised for the war, and must also be disbanded if nothing be done by this Congress. The result of that will be, it will bring down the Army to the old limits of from seventeen to twenty thousand men. Those in charge of the military affairs of the country, including the Secretary of War and the General commanding-in-chief, are of the opinion it would be perfect madness to undertake to manage the military affairs of the country if we are now to be remitted to the old Army, losing even the nine large new regiments of infantry and the regiment of artillery in the regular Army raised for the war.

I am for one decidedly of the same opinion. What we have to propose now to this House, rather than let the whole subject fall through, I have already stated. Two of the conferees did not have an opportunity to confer with the other conferee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ANCONA.] We propose to bring forward a bill which will accept all of the details as agreed between the Senate and House conferees to put the Army, with its regiments, as I have explained, at the lowest point to which the conferees, under any circumstances, were authorized to go. This will bring them down to fifty-seven instead of sixty-seven, as the House had it, or sixty-two, as the Senate had it. It will give up one half what was provided in regard to the Veteran Reserve corps, and so on.

Mr. WARD. Has the gentleman any assurance the Senate will accept this new bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not.

Mr. WARD. Then why not have a new committee of conference that will agree on something?

Mr. SCHENCK. This is only taking the lowest rates which the Senate and House conferees have already once distinctly agreed to.

Mr. WARD. But it will not give us any bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. It will give us a bill more promptly than in any other way. It will put this question, whether they are willing to take a bill framed on their own basis instead of a bill sent from the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask, with the gentleman from New York, why we should not have another committee of conference to adjust the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

Mr. SCHENCK. We have now agreed to all the suggestions of the Senate conferees.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. In a matter so difficult and important why should we not have another committee of conference?

Mr. SCHENCK. For the reason they finally fell back upon the ground so far as the con-fees here were concerned that they would not agree to anything for wounded officers or soldiers. In other words, they would make no provision for the Veteran Reserve corps except—

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move for another committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. It would be if the gentleman had the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I know my colleagues on the conference committee will agree with me, from the disposition manifested, and from what was done, this is a nearer approach to the matter than any we can adopt, and more likely to result in something practical being done. Sir, it is not necessary to go into details in reference to the conference, but perhaps I have gone too far already. It was our conviction the proposition I now make is the most feasible plan to arrive at any conclusion. I now move to suspend the rules to enable this bill, prepared with great care in accordance with what was done by General PAINE and myself, to be introduced and put on its passage.

Mr. WARD. My object is to have some bill adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. PAINE] whether he does not understand we are more likely to get a bill in this than in any other way. I will not detain the House one moment longer than to have my colleague express his opinion on this subject for the benefit of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. Does the House consent?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. WARD. Is my motion in order?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 44.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. WARD. I now move that the House still further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the House substitute for the Army bill, and ask for another committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 814, for the relief of the sufferers by fire at Portland.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. STEVENS. I learn that it will be impossible for us to finish up all our necessary business by the time, to-morrow noon, fixed for the adjournment of this Congress, and that unless the session is extended we shall lose several important bills in consequence of there not being time in which to prepare them and submit them to the President for his approval and signature. I therefore submit the following resolution for action at this time:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the present session of Congress be, and hereby is, extended until Saturday, the 28th instant, at five o'clock p. m.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to amend the resolution so as to extend the session to two o'clock p. m. of Monday next.

Mr. STEVENS. My own judgment is in favor of Monday; but I find such a determination on the part of members to go home that I fear it will be impossible to keep a quorum here till Monday.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I would suggest to my colleague [Mr. STEVENS] that he had better withdraw the resolution for the present. He can offer it again to-morrow morning if it shall then be found necessary.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we better act upon it now.

Mr. FINCK. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that he better let this matter go over until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock. We will then know whether we shall need to have the session extended or not.

Mr. STEVENS. It is important that the question should be settled now in order that we may know what arrangements to make. I see several members on the wing now, hovering about as if ready to fly away. I will modify the resolution so as to extend the session to half past four o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. DRIGGS. At the request of friends, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution of Mr. STEVENS, as modified; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 65, noes 38.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SCOTFIELD, the House (at twenty minutes to five o'clock p. m.) took a recess till half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The hour of half past seven o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House resumed its session.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JENCKES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the select committee on the civil service of the United States, heretofore authorized by a resolution of this House, be continued during the second or subsequent session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and that it may continue to exercise the powers conferred by said resolution.

WYANDOTTE MISSION CHURCH.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 353, for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians.

Mr. CULLOM objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. FINCK renewed the objection.

Mr. PRICE. Then, I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order. The House is now acting under the previous question, which was ordered before the recess, upon the bill of the House (No. 632), to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York; and until that bill is disposed of no other business is in order except by unanimous consent.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. LAFLIN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Printing the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House, ten thousand copies of the report of the Judiciary Committee upon the alleged complicity of Jefferson Davis in the assassination of President Lincoln.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the resolution so that it shall include an equal number of the minority report when made.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would suggest that they be ordered to be printed together, if the minority report is submitted in time to be printed with the majority report.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will modify my amendment to that effect.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to. The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROVOST MARSHAL'S BUREAU.

Mr. LAFLIN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Printing the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed two thousand extra copies of the report of the committee appointed to investigate the provost marshal and his bureau, for the use of the committee, and five hundred for the use of the House.

Mr. ANCONA. I think those numbers should be reversed.

Mr. LAFLIN. I will remark that this has been customary in regard to reports of this character. The members of the committee are more particularly interested in the report than are the other members of the House. However, if objection is made to the distribution proposed by the resolution I am willing to modify it so as to make it fifteen hundred for the use of the committee and fifteen hundred for the use of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. LAFLIN. If the gentleman will withdraw that motion I will modify the resolution so as to make it five hundred for the committee and two thousand for the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. LAFLIN. I modify the resolution so as to make it provide five hundred copies for the use of the committee and two thousand for the use of the House.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL SERVICE APPROPRIATION.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce a supplemental appropriation bill for the Post Office Department, which has been rendered necessary by the great number of post routes which have been established by the action of this Congress. I have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. STEVENS] to introduce it at this time, and I ask that it may be considered and passed at once.

No objection was made.

Mr. ALLEY accordingly introduced a bill for an act supplemental to the act to appropriate money for the postal service; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It appropriates the sum of $486,525 for carrying the mail upon the post routes established by act of Congress passed during the first session of the Thirty-Ninth Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEMPHIS RIOTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to submit a motion instructing the Committee on Printing to report back within one hour the resolution referred to them providing for the printing of the reports of the committee appointed to investigate the late Memphis riots, with such recommendation or modification, if any, as they may deem proper to report.

Mr. SHANKLIN. I object.

WATCHMEN IN CAPITOL ROTUNDA.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, for consideration at the present time, the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the watchmen in the Rotunda of the Capitol be allowed the same pay as is allowed to the Capitol police, to take effect the 1st day of January, 1866.

Mr. KASSON. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grams;

An act (H. R. No. 759) to authorize the refunding of certain taxes;

An act (H. R. No. 809) to further regulate the printing of public documents and the purchase of paper for public printing;

An act (H. R. No. 810) amendatory of section thirteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865;

An act (H. R. No. 814) for the relief of sufferers by fire at Portland; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system.

AIR-LINE RAILROAD—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call for the consideration of the regular order of business.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of House bill No. 632, to authorize the building of a military and postal railroad from Washington, District of Columbia, to the city of New York; upon which the previous question had been seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BERGEN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 59, nays 44, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, DeGreys, Delano, Briggs, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julia V. Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Paine, Perham, Plants, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Bergen, Boutwell, Broomall, Cooper, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Harris, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Myers, Price, Radford, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Phelps, Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Shanklin, Taber, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—44.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Moulton, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Schenck, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—83.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 791) entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes."

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

First amendment:

On page 2, line four, after the word "extension" insert "namely."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

On page 3, at the end of line six, insert the following:

Provided, That from and after June 30, 1866, the regular compensation of the female folders in the dead letter office shall be at the rate of fifty dollars per month.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

On page 3, strike out lines fourteen and fifteen, as follows:

For additional compensation to the Assistant Attorney General, $500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

On page 3, strike out lines sixteen and seventeen, as follows:

For amount required for salaries of clerks, $2,800.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

On page 3, strike out lines eighteen and nineteen, as follows:

For temporary clerks, additional compensation to clerks, &c., $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

On page 3, strike out lines twenty and twenty-one, as follows:

For contingent expenses, $3,500.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

On page 4, strike out lines fourteen and fifteen, as follows:

Salary of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

On page 4, strike out lines sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen, as follows:

The salary of the assistant solicitor of the Court of Claims shall be the same as that of the solicitor of said court.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. KASSON. This amendment is simply a verbal change, to correct an error in enrolling the bill, the proper title of the officer being "deputy solicitor," instead of "assistant solicitor." The amendment does not increase at all the pay which this officer has heretofore received.

The amendment was concurred in.

Ninth amendment:

On page 4, after the word "court" in line eighteen, insert the following:

The compensation of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims shall be, from and after June 30, 1866, $3,500, payable quarterly, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

On page 5, in line one, insert "five" after "fifty," so as to read "fifty-five dollars."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

On page 6, after line twenty-three, insert the following:

To complete the repairing and furnishing of the President's House, $29,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirteenth amendment:

On page 7, strike out, in lines nineteen and twenty, the words "and that the sum of."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

On page 7, in line twenty, after "of" insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

On page 7, strike out after "dollars," in line twenty, the following:

Is hereby appropriated for said alteration and repairs, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

Page 8, after line thirteen, insert:
For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the indebtedness incurred for the Indian service in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, in the years 1860, 1861, and 1862, $40,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Page 9, after line four, insert:
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the reasonable costs and expenses actually paid or incurred by the delegates of the southern Cherokees in coming to and going from Washington, and during their stay in and about, during the negotiation upon the formation of treaties of peace and amity with the Indian tribes, a sum not exceeding $25,000: Provided, That said sum shall be refunded to the Treasury from the proceeds of the sales of the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

Page 9, line twelve, strike out "seven" at the beginning of the line and insert "six."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Nineteenth amendment:

Page 9, line twelve, after the word "of" strike out "$4,870 45" and insert "$374 65;" so it will read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for increased compensation of the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, authorized by the second section of the act of June 1, 1866, from the 1st day of June, 1866, to the 30th day of June, 1867, the sum of $374 65 is hereby appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twentieth amendment:

Strike out the following:
SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That such sum as may be required to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to execute the resolutions of the House of the present session, directing the payment of increased and additional compensation to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-first amendment:

Strike out the following:
SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the words "one year," in the proviso regulating the distribution of a certain fund among the clerks and employees of the Treasury Department who had served therein one year prior to July 1, 1866, in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, approved July 23, 1866, are hereby changed to six months, and the same shall be construed accordingly.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment:

Page 10, line eleven, strike out after the word "to" down to and including the word "to" in line fourteen, and insert so as to make the section read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to quiet the titles of, &c.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

Page 11, line twenty-six, after "police" insert "and two policemen at the Executive Mansion."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

Page 11, line twenty-seven, after "allow" insert "by law."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

Page 12, after line two, insert:
And be it further enacted, That the following sums be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

Page 12, after line ten, insert:
To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for compensation to a clerk engaged in the sale of internal revenue stamps in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $900.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

Add at the end of the bill as follows:
For contingent expenses of the Senate, namely, for additional messengers during the session, $5,000. Such messengers and other employes and the clerks of committees whose compensation has not been otherwise increased at this session of Congress shall receive twenty per cent. in addition to the compensation heretofore allowed, commencing the second Monday in December, 1865.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

Add as follows:
And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be directed to cause estimates to be made for the erection of a suitable fire-proof building for the War Department in Washington, stating the location and price of the land, and plans and cost of necessary buildings, to be reported at the next session of Congress.

[For deficiency in the payment of balances due for taking the census of 1860, $230,360 21: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be paid to any marshal or other person who has taken part in the rebellion against the United States.]

The committee recommended concurrence in the amendment with an amendment striking out the part in brackets.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Add as follows:
And be it further enacted, That section four of the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the service of the United States," approved March 3, 1849, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof inserting the words "that said Auditor shall in all cases transmit his adjustment with all the papers relating thereto to the Second Comptroller for his revision and decision thereon, the same in all respects as is provided in the act of September 2, 1859."

The committee recommended concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirtieth and last amendment:

Add as follows:
And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to defray the expenses of continuing the index to Senate list of private claims down to the present Congress, in pursuance of the order of the Senate dated March 16, 1860.

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the votes by which the amendments of the Senate were severally concurred or non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the several amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865.

Also, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar.

Also, an act (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government.

Also, an act (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had unanimously agreed to the change in the text recommended by the committee of conference in the act (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate further insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, agreed to the further committee of conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. WILSON, HARRIS, and NESMITH conferees on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, disagreed to the amendments of the House to its amendments to the said bill, agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereto, and had appointed Messrs. FESSENDEN, HENDERSON, and BUCKALEW conferees on the part of the Senate.

MEMPHIS RIOT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend the rules in order that I may make a motion that the Committee on Printing be instructed to report back to the House within an hour the resolution providing for the printing of the report of the committee on the Memphis riot.

Mr. LE BLOND. Is that motion debatable? THE SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the motion will not prevail, because the committee itself has determined not to report, as I understand.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The committee is equally divided on the subject.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not know how they stand, but I know the very motion now made carries with it the presumption that the committee have come to the conclusion not to report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is too late in the session to debate it.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 66, noes 21.

Mr. FINCK. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 81, nays 33, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Deftrees, Delano, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, John L. Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Harris, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Whaley, and Winfield—33.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Farquhar, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Laffin, Latham, Longyear, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKee, Moulton, Noell, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Stigreeves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—72.

So (two thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended;

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move that the Committee on Printing be instructed to report immediately the resolution relating to printing the report of the Memphis riot, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to offer as an amendment the following:

That the select committee on the Memphis riots be, and the same is hereby, directed to report to this House the amount of money drawn from the contingent fund of the House to pay the expenses of said committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not yield.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to know how much it has cost. I did not suppose the gentleman would allow it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 28, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Deftrees, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Loan, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Spaulding, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Harris, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—28.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelso, Laffin, Latham, Longyear, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKee, Moorhead, Moulton, Noell, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stigreeves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Woodbridge, and Wright—70.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN. With the consent of the House, before reporting the resolution which the Committee on Printing has just been instructed to report, I desire to make an explanation. There has been no intention on the part of the committee to show any contempt for any resolution referred to it by the House. There are now but two members of the committee present. The other member, the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. LATHAM,] and myself have been unable to agree upon a report in this case. I have been willing at any time to bring the question before the House, even by agreeing to an adverse report, but the gentleman from West Virginia has been unwilling to assent to that proposition. It is due to him to say that I believe he has been influenced by the very best motives. It will be borne in mind that on all questions that have been taken in reference to this neither the gentleman nor myself have voted, we having paired off with each other.

I will say still further that when this resolution was sent to the committee, it was found that there was a large amount of testimony, and in regard to a large portion of it it was not apparent to either of us that there was the same necessity for a large issue of it as there was prior to the reestablishment of Federal relations with the State of Tennessee. But I was willing, inasmuch as the House had passed the resolution, that the matter should be submitted to the House in some form for its judgment. The House, after passing the resolution, having very kindly granted to the committee the privilege of amending it so as better to meet their different views, I am now prepared to submit a resolution. Let me state that while the original resolution calls for the printing of ten thousand copies of the report with the testimony, the committee have agreed, under the instructions of the House, to report in favor of printing one thousand copies; and while the original resolution calls for the printing of fifty thousand copies of the report without the evidence, the committee have agreed in favor of printing ten thousand.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman whether he has made any estimate of the cost per copy of printing this report, whether it will not cost somewhere in the neighborhood of two dollars or two dollars and fifty cents per copy.

Mr. LAFLIN. In answer to that question I will state that without covers it is probable the printing of the report, with the evidence, will cost somewhere about seventy-five cents per copy; with covers it will cost about one dollar per copy. The report itself, without the evidence, will cost about twenty-five cents per copy.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I have understood that it will cost at least two dollars per copy.

Mr. LAFLIN. That is an entire mistake. The gentleman will bear in mind that the Agricultural Report does not cost anything like that amount. It must be remembered that this work has already been printed by order of the House, and all the expense involved in furnishing extra copies is the price of the paper, the press-work, and the binding.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is not the cost of the Agricultural Report very much reduced in consequence of the very large number which we print; and should we print but ten or fifteen thousand copies of this report, will it not cost, in fact, at least two dollars per copy?

Mr. LAFLIN. I can state, for the information of the gentleman and of the House, that, so far as regards the expense per copy of these extra copies, it makes no difference whether we print ten thousand or fifty thousand or one hundred thousand, because the composition has already been done in order to print the fifteen hundred and fifty copies provided for by law.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman has a very different idea on this subject from his colleague on the committee.

Mr. LAFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. SHANKLIN,] and I will then yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 787) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867; and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. SHERMAN, FESSENDEN, and JOHNSON.

REPORT ON MEMPHIS RIOTS—AGAIN.

Mr. SHANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, it might be supposed, inasmuch as I was a member of the committee that made this report, that I have some knowledge of what the majority report contains; but I am under the necessity of stating to this House that I have never seen, and never had an opportunity of seeing, the majority report in this case. The honorable chairman of that committee [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] has never thought proper, at any time since the committee was appointed, to call the committee together for the purpose of consultation. On last Friday the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL,] a member of the committee, inquired of me, as a member of it, whether I had my minority report ready. I told him that I had. I inquired whether the majority report was ready to be presented. He said it was nearly so; that the chairman was sick and unable to give further attention to the subject, and that the report had been delivered over to him to make such corrections as he might think proper, after which it would be presented. It was agreed between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself that on last Monday morning, at nine o'clock, we should meet at the committee-room for the purpose of comparing the majority report with the minority report. He was to have the opportunity to see the minority report and I was to have the opportunity to see the majority report. Under this agreement between my friend from Pennsylvania and myself, I met him at the committee-room at the hour appointed. When I arrived he was there. I had my report, which I had prepared and ready to submit to him, but he informed me that the majority report had not yet been sent to him, but that it would be forthcoming during the day. He said that he would send for it. It was not forthcoming that day nor even the next day. I understood the gentleman that it would be forthcoming soon and that I should have an opportunity to see it. On the next evening I was notified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the report would not be forthcoming until it was offered in the House. I had no opportunity to see the report. The privilege of examining the majority report was denied to me and my concurrence in that report was refused.

Mr. Speaker, there is one fact of which I am satisfied. If that report presents any matter peculiar or different from ordinary riots or mobs I am satisfied that gentlemen must have drawn upon their imaginations and not upon the testimony. Whatever that report contains, whether it is matter of public interest or not, I am unable to say. I have never seen it or been permitted to read it. My minority report I insist is entirely based upon facts. It has been subject to the inspection of any member of the committee at any time they thought proper. It is more than can be said, I am sorry to say, for the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired, and the floor is now assigned to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for five minutes.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. Speaker, I have only one thing to say in answer to the complaint of the gentleman from Kentucky that the committee has not met him to consult about the report. It is within the knowledge of the members of the House there has been no time, since the return of the committee from Memphis when the three members have been present in the House, in consequence of one or two or even the three of them having been ill probably from the climate of Memphis and the incessant labor imposed upon them in taking testimony. Now, the report was prepared by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] the chairman of the committee. I myself conferred with the gentleman from Kentucky with respect to the report. I also conferred with the gentleman from Illinois. If they do not agree with one another it is no fault of mine. With regard to what the gentleman has said that we have drawn from our imaginations if we say this matter differs from ordinary mobs or riots, I will say one word. Why, sir, there was no riot in Memphis, notwithstanding the terms of the resolution which was referred to us. There was no riot, and it is an abuse of language to say so when the civil authorities of a city of sixty thousand inhabitants conspired together to murder in open day unoffending citizens of the United States. I say it is an abuse of language to call that a riot. It was a massacre. It was a massacre by the very persons who are asking now to be allowed to participate in the government of the country. Why, sir, in those terrible three days in Memphis there were forty-eight murders committed upon unoffending American citizens by the civil authorities of the city. The very recorder of the city headed the mob, the very last one in the world who should have been guilty of such a thing.

Mr. SHANKLIN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. BROOMALL. The gentleman has had his five minutes, and I can yield to no one.

There were besides five cases of rape upon helpless and unoffending women under circumstances that the gentleman himself united with us in saying ought not to be put in the testimony. It was too revolting and too horrible to be repeated anywhere. In those terrible three days there were deeds committed within that city, by the civil authorities of the city, which would have made the famous "cities of the plain" blush for the very insignificance of their iniquity. Yet these horrible massacres, these murders, these rapes and robberies are called a mere mob and riot. It will not do, sir.

Mr. Speaker, there ought to be printed at least the number of reports mentioned in the resolution which was referred to the Committee on Printing; and I ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. LAFLIN] to allow me to make the motion to double each of the numbers contained in his report.

This subject does possess some political and public significance. The great question now before the country is whether the people of the eleven States lately in rebellion are yet in a fit condition to be intrusted with a share in the government of the country. The animus and the spirit of the people enter into the inquiry. The details of this report and testimony go to that very spirit and that very animus of the leading people of the city of Memphis. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHANKLIN] likes to shield his friends. I do not wonder that peculiar means have been used—I do not refer to the amiable gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, [Mr. LAFLIN]—to prevent this report from getting before the country at all.

Mr. SHANKLIN. I would ask my colleague [Mr. BROOMALL] whether the proof does not establish clearly and conclusively the fact that the mass of the men engaged in these outrages against the helpless colored people of the city of Memphis were registered voters under the franchise law of Tennessee which was passed by what is known as the Radical party of that State.

Mr. BROOMALL. I can only say in answer to the gentleman that I can well understand that the very worst of the friends of gentlemen upon the other side would swear themselves in under the franchise law. It is very possible that there are men among those who vote in Tennessee who are worse than the average of those who are excluded; I do not know how that is. But I would remind the gentleman [Mr. SHANKLIN] that the recorder of the city of Memphis, the leader of the mob, the man who urged them on to commit these foul deeds, is the vice president of the Johnson club of Memphis. And now I have only to add that if the gentleman complains that he has not been allowed to sign our report, I will agree that he shall have an opportunity to append his name to it.

Mr. LAFLIN. I entertain the very highest respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL,] and there is no man in this House whom I would be more willing to accommodate than him. But I am satisfied from what I have observed of the tone and temper of this House that an amendment of the kind he proposes would meet with its acceptance.

Mr. BROOMALL. Try it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Yes, try it.

Mr. LAFLIN. Without desiring to be at all rude or discourteous, I must decline his amendment. I now call the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. BROOMALL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BROOMALL and SHANKLIN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-three, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Printing to the original resolution referred to them.

The original resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies extra of the reports and evidence of the select committee on the Memphis riots, and fifty thousand copies of said reports without the evidence, be printed.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to substitute as follows:

That one thousand copies extra of the reports and evidence of the select committee on the Memphis riots, and ten thousand copies of said reports without the evidence, be printed.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and upon a division there were—ayes sixty, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBECCA J. SHEPPARD.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill for the relief of Rebecca J. Sheppard.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new bond for $100, with coupons from May 1, 1865, to Rebecca J. Sheppard, of Philadelphia, in the place of a coupon bond for a like amount, No. 29,697, fourth series, loan of February 25, 1864, the same having been destroyed by fire.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think no member of this House will object to this bill. It is for the benefit of a poor lady whose house was burned, with all she possessed, including $300 in bonds, $200 being railroad bonds, and $100 in five-twenties, United States bonds. So well satisfied was the railroad company that the railroad bonds had actually been destroyed by the fire that it issued to her new bonds. And it is now proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a new United States bond to her for the one that was destroyed by the same fire.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] what security the Government would have in case the old bond should be recovered.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman desires, I will amend the bill by adding that the old bond, No. 29,697, &c., shall never be paid, if recovered.

Mr. KASSON. Why not say, "upon satisfactory proof of the loss of the original?"

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DELANO. I hope the gentleman will not ask us to pass this bill without first putting in it a provision for the ordinary security of the Government. No bill of the kind has ever been passed without such a provision.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken; it has been done repeatedly.

Mr. DELANO. Then the bill has been stolen through Congress.

Mr. O'NEILL. There is no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend by inserting the words "upon her giving bond of indemnity to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury against the outstanding bond."

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Early in this session I introduced and had referred to the Committee of Ways and Means a resolution of inquiry into the expediency of providing by law for this class of cases. And I then called the attention of my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] to the case of a poor man whose bonds had become so mutilated that they could not be paid, although enough was left to indicate the numbers and denominations of the bonds, which were all the property the poor man had. I would inquire of the gentleman why the Committee of Ways and Means have not provided by a general law for such cases as that.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee of Ways and Means were of opinion, and have so determined, that it would be unwise to make a general law on the subject, for fear there might be fraud practiced under it. The law as it now stands provides that when bonds are mutilated, and parts are left to prove the numbers, the Secretary of the Treasury may re-issue bonds in their place. The committee concluded that each case not covered by that law should be left to stand upon its own merits before Congress.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Does the gentleman mean that the Treasury will now re-issue bonds in cases like that to which I have referred?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly they will, for I have had it done myself.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Well, I have been told that they will not.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members be appointed, to report to this House at its next session what alteration can or should be made in this Hall to provide for its better ventilation, and for the more prompt dispatch of business.

Mr. RAYMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDUCATION FOR THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to establish a system of education for the Army of the United States, and to provide that all promotions therein shall be from the ranks; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and its further consideration postponed until the second Monday in December next.

Mr. ROSS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY MAIL BOYS.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster of this House is hereby authorized to retain in employment the three temporary mail boys during the vacation of Congress.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. MOORHEAD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: in line nine, page 1, of the engrossed bill, strike out "$2 50" and insert in lieu thereof "three dollars;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their seventh amendment and agree to the ninth section of the bill, with the following amendment: in line two of said section strike out the word "imported;" and in the same line, after the word "merchandise," insert the words "hereafter imported;" and at the end of the ninth section add the following words: "And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall apply to long-combing or carpet wools costing twelve cents or less per pound, unless the charges so added shall carry the cost above twelve cents per pound, in which case one cent per pound duty shall be added;" and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their eighth amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line two of said amendment, strike out the words "and directed;" and in line three, after the words "collection in," insert the words "any of;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

The committee recommend that the text of the bill be amended by striking out the word "first" in line one, page 1, of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "tenth."

P. G. VAN WINKLE,

E. D. MORGAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES K. MOORHEAD,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,

C. DELANO,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this report is nearly the same which was presented before on this bill, with the exception of the ninth section, which, according to the former report, was stricken out. It will be seen that the ninth section is now retained in a modified form. This appeared to be satisfactory to both parties. I now call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MOORHEAD. I cannot yield to any one.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask that the ninth section be read as proposed to be amended by the committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be read.

Mr. WRIGHT. I object.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Has not any member the right to call for the reading of that upon which he is required to vote?

The SPEAKER. It was decided in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, by Mr. Speaker BANKS, that, the House having before it the report of a committee of conference, no member had the right to demand the reading of the original bill; and that decision was sustained by a majority of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORHEAD] will give us some explanation of this matter.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I must insist on the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give us no explanation of the report I must move to lay it upon the table, because I do not know what it is. This is too important a matter to take everything for granted.

Mr. WENTWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 33, nays 68, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Baker, Benjamin, Cobb, Cooper, Doffrees, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hogan, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Lettwith, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, and Winfield—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Conkling, Cullom, Delano, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, Mercut, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stokes, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, and Whaley—68.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Henderson, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburt, Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Ladin, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Moulton, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Unson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—75.

So the House refused to lay the report on the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. MOORHEAD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HON. DAVID T. PATTERSON.

The SPEAKER stated the regular order to be the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 144, in relation to the admission of Hon. David T. Patterson to a seat in the Senate; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The resolution was read. It provides for the admission of Hon. David T. Patterson, a Senator-elect from Tennessee, to a seat upon taking the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and so much of the act prescribing an oath of office, and for other purposes, approved July 2, 1862, as shall not include the following words: "I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States."

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to be informed whether the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee is on the Clerk's table.

The SPEAKER. It is here informally.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask that it be read as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the credentials of Hon. David T. Patterson, Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, with instructions to report whether said Patterson is legally qualified to hold the office of United States Senator from said State, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report as follows:

The only question in relation to the qualifications of Mr. Patterson, or his right to hold his seat in the Senate, arises from the fact of his having held the office of circuit judge in the State of Tennessee after that State had passed an ordinance of secession and become a member of the confederacy.

Circuit judges in Tennessee are elected by the people of the several circuits, and hold their offices for the term of eight years.

Judge Patterson was elected judge in one of the circuits in eastern Tennessee in May, 1854, and his term of office had not expired when the State passed the ordinance of secession. The constitution of the State of Tennessee remained the same after the secession of the State as before, and there was no change made in the form of the State government, or in their judicial system. A large majority of the people of East Tennessee were ardently devoted to the Union, and deemed it very important for their interest and that of the Union cause that the civil offices in that section of the State should be filled with Union men.

Judge Patterson was a firm, avowed, and influential Union man, and he was urgently pressed by the Union men of that circuit to run as a candidate for reelection as circuit judge, and he finally, though reluctantly, consented to do so. The opposing candidate was an avowed secessionist, and the issue in the election was between Union and secession. The election was held in May, 1862, and Judge Patterson was elected over his rebel competitor by a large majority. At the same election most of the local offices in that section were filled by the election of Union men. At that time it was believed by the Union men of East Tennessee that they would soon be relieved from rebel military rule by the arrival of Union forces; and they desired also to retain the civil power in their own hands. In this expectation they were disappointed, and soon rebel bands were scattered through that region, and the Union people were subjected to great hardships and cruel oppression. When Judge Patterson was thus reflected judge, he did not suppose he would be commissioned by the Governor of the State, who was a secessionist; but after some considerable delay a commission was sent to him, with peremptory orders to take the oath. On the receipt of his commission and order to take the oath Judge Patterson delayed and hesitated, and consulted other leading Union men as to the proper course for him to take. They advised and urged him to take the oath; that he could thereby afford protection to some extent to Union men against acts of lawless violence on the part of the rebels, and that if he did not accept the office and take the oath the office would be filled by a rebel, and they would then be oppressed by the civil as well as the military power of the rebels. Judge Patterson yielded to their urgency and arguments, and went before a magistrate and took the oath which the Tennessee Legislature had prescribed, which, in substance, was that he would support the constitution of Tennessee and the constitution of the confederate States. Judge Patterson declared at the time to the magistrate that he owed no allegiance to the confederate government and that he did not consider that part of the oath as binding him at all. At this time there were rebel troops in the neighborhood, and Judge Patterson had good reason to believe that his refusal to take the oath would subject him to arrest and imprisonment, if not worse treatment; but we do not find that he was actuated at all by personal considerations, but acted solely upon the motive that he could thereby afford some aid and protection to the Union people, and also prevent the office from falling into hands that would use it to oppress them.

East Tennessee at this time was in a very disturbed and distracted condition. The country was full of bands of armed rebels, and lawless violence held sway. Business was nearly suspended, and no civil business was done in the courts. Judge Patterson held a few terms of court in counties where he could organize grand juries of Union men, and in this way did something toward preserving peace and order in the community. No other business was done by him, as judge, after his election in 1862.

During all this time Judge Patterson was an open, avowed, and devoted adherent to the Union. He was in constant communication with the officers of the Federal troops nearest that vicinity, and obtained and furnished to them information as to the movements of the rebels. He aided in concealing Union men, and in facilitating their escape to the Union lines, when they generally entered the Union service. He aided the Union people and the Union cause in every way open to him, and too numerous for detail. By these means he became amenable to the hostility of the secessionists, and was subjected to great difficulty and danger. He was several times arrested and held for some time in custody. At times he was obliged to conceal himself for safety, and spend nights in out buildings and in the woods to avoid their vengeance.

In September, 1863, the Federal troops reached Knoxville, and Judge Patterson succeeded in escaping with his family to that place, and did not return to his home until after the close of the rebellion.

As before stated, the constitution and election laws and judicial system of Tennessee remained the same after the secession of the State as before, and Judge Patterson was elected judge the last time under the same State constitution and laws as existed at his first election, and no law was enforced by him as judge except such as were in force before the secession of the State.

The committee are all satisfied that, during the entire rebellion, Judge Patterson was an earnest, firm, and devoted Union man, and suffered severely in support of his principles. In accepting the office of judge, and taking the official oath, he did not intend any hostility to the authority or Government of the United States, nor did he intend to acknowledge any allegiance to or any friendship for, the confederate government, but acted throughout with a sincere desire to benefit and preserve the Union and the Government of the United States. He always denied the authority of the confederate government over him, and feels an entire willingness and ability to take the oath required upon his admission to a seat in the Senate. The committee recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. David T. Patterson is duly qualified and entitled to hold a seat in the Senate of the United States as a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, a friend has just asked me, privately, the question whether, if I did not live in Tennessee, I would be in favor of this joint resolution. Not having had time to make a reply privately, I will state here, publicly, if I had not lived in Tennessee it would have been impossible for me so to have understood the facts and the general merits of the case as to have seen it in the same light and with the same clearness of vision that I seem to myself to see it now. The transactions of the last few years in many portions of our country, and particularly in that portion where these occurrences took place, have been such that they could be appreciated only by being made matter of personal consciousness. Very early in the struggle it was ascertained that a very large proportion, more, probably, than three fourths of the people of that portion of Tennessee known as East Tennessee, embracing thirty-one counties, with a white population of two hundred and seventy thousand and a black population, free and slave, of thirty thousand, making a total population of three hundred thousand, were determined adherents to the Government of the United States. That fact was ascertained by the ballot-box and in various ways which I will not now take time to explain.

The earnest struggle on the part of the secessionists, as they were called at that time, was by force or by fraud to get hold of the machinery of the Government. By having the means of enacting the usual forms of law and the ordinary agencies for giving them practical effect, they would thereby gain a great moral advantage among a population that had long been accustomed to reverence and respect the laws of the land. Of course the Union people were equally determined to prevent their getting the control of the offices. They could do it only by force or by fraud. Several of the important offices were filled by rebels. We had four judicial circuits, with four circuit judges. The circuit court in our State being the court of general jurisdiction, civil and criminal. Two of these circuit judges were rebels and two of them were Union men. Of the latter Judge Patterson was one. He had been on the bench ever since 1854, stood high in the confidence of the people and of the profession. His term of office expired in 1862. The rebel military power was then in possession of the county. War had been going on something like twelve months, long enough to demonstrate to the Union people the advantage of having the offices filled by their own men, and especially offices so important as that of judge. In due course of events the election came round, and at the instance of Union men Judge Patterson became a candidate and was reelected to the office. The circumstances of his election have been detailed very fully and at length in the report just read.

I left East Tennessee on the 1st of August, 1861, having been elected to the Thirty-Seventh Congress. I left Judge Patterson there as a well known and universally recognized loyal Union man. From his high official position as well as his personal character and his family relations he had necessarily a wide and commanding influence. I returned to East Tennessee in October, 1863, shortly after our troops had taken possession under the command of General Burnside. I found him there a determined loyal man, and he remained such until the downfall of the rebellion. What occurred in the interval of my absence I cannot speak of from personal knowledge, but his acts were of public notoriety, and as such I can confirm in general terms what is stated in the Senate committee's report. He comes to the Senate upon this state of facts. The joint resolution now before us for action proposes to relieve him from a certain provision of what is called the test oath, or more properly the official oath enacted in 1862 for Federal officers, which requires that the officer shall swear, "I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States." If I may be pardoned for violating a well-known rule of this body, which forbids a reference to what passes in the other wing of the Capitol, I will respectfully suggest that the facts stated in that report do not prevent the applicant from taking the oath with a clear conscience. The action of the Senate, however, in order to relieve him from any imputation that might possibly be thrown out by giving a different construction to the oath, has resulted in the joint resolution before us.

It will be observed that it is not predicated upon the fact that Judge Patterson, when entering upon his second judicial term, took an oath to support the southern confederacy. If there was anything in that to embarrass him, he is not relieved by this joint resolution. All that it proposes to do is to relieve him from the disqualifications occasioned by his holding the office of judge. The construction that I have always given to this part of the oath—and I have had occasion to discuss it in various places, at various times—is this: not that an office was held, but that it was held "in hostility to the United States," constitutes the disqualification.

Mr. LOAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether the taking of the oath to support the constitution of the so-called confederate States of America is not so expressed in the joint resolution?

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not think this joint resolution makes any reference to the taking of the oath. It simply relieves him from swearing that he held no office.

Mr. LOAN. Is it not so expressed in the joint resolution and report of the committee that has been read?

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman will bear in mind that this joint resolution does not relieve Judge Patterson from any supposed disqualification by reason of taking that oath. It only relieves him from the disqualification that may arise from the fact that he held office, and, as I was about to remark, it seems to me that the disqualifying fact is not having held office, but having held it "in hostility to the United States." Now, I might suppose the case—and it is not difficult to do so—of a man who has been sent inside of the enemy's lines as a spy. In order the better to accomplish his purpose he might become a rebel soldier, and take the oath as such. He might be appointed to some office, high or low, and exercise the functions of that office, not "in hostility," but in friendship to the United States, and "in hostility" to the confederacy. Such was the case in this instance.

Mr. LYNCH. I would ask the gentleman if the confederate government was not hostile to the United States.

Mr. MAYNARD. The term confederate "government" is one that I have never used. I have never recognized the authority of the southern confederacy as a "government." Certainly, however, the southern confederacy, call it by whatever name you please, was directly in hostility to the Government of the United States.

Mr. LYNCH. I call the gentleman's attention to that part of the oath which this joint resolution proposes to relieve Judge Patterson from taking.

"I have never sought or accepted or attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority hostile to the United States."

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman does not read the language precisely as it stands in the statute. It is not "hostile to" but "in hostility to." The difference between the construction he intimates and mine is as to what the words "in hostility to the United States" qualify. I maintain that they do not qualify the word "authority," but the words expressing the action, thus:

"I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office 'in hostility to the United States.'"

Mr. LYNCH. "Under any authority."

Mr. MAYNARD. The language is "under any authority, or pretended authority," and the words "in hostility to the United States," are to be taken to qualify the action of the party and not the "authority." But in this instance the oath is entirely out of the question. In the case of Judge Patterson, though it might be said in one sense that a man seeks office when he consents to be a candidate, yet he did not in any just and proper and true sense seek it. It was thrust upon him by I had almost said, the moral duress of the loyal Union men of that part of the country; of his district. They had by this time learned the importance of having the office in the hands of a friend. They had the numerical power at the ballot-box, and they determined to use it for their own protection by electing a friend. Judge Patterson had already stood their friend, and they insisted upon his retaining the position. If nothing else, he could negatively protect them by keeping the office out of rebel hands, that could use it for the oppression of the Unionists. And in fact this was about all he was able to do, as I understand very little business was transacted in his court during the rebel sway; and after the occupation of East Tennessee by General Burnside, he remained within our lines, and, I think, never held his courts again. His is not the case, only too common in parts of the south, of a professed Union man succumbing to the power of treason, under the miserable plea that he must go with his section. Nor is it the case, also quite too common, of one who, despairing of the Union cause, made haste to give in his adhesion to what he considered successful treason. Nor yet of one, too greedy of the honors and emoluments of office, was willing to accept it from any quarter. He made no concessions to the cause of treason. He never lowered his flag. Always was he known and recognized as hostile to the enemies of his country. More than once was he in arrest by them. A suit is now pending to recover damages of leading rebels for procuring his arrest. A letter from the rebel secretary Benjamin, (which I regret is not at hand,) after a cruel order respecting some men executed for bridge burning, devotes a postscript especially to him. And in no way could he have demonstrated more practical hostility to the rebel cause than by withholding from the rebels this office. It was this, and a hope that he would refuse to receive and qualify under the commission from the rebel governor Harris, and thus vacate the office, that made them urge the commission upon him, as is stated in the report of the committee. Not even in appearance, or by pretense, did he favor the rebellion; nor was his attitude even equivocal. His loyalty was outspoken and beyond dispute in the darkest hour; so I learn.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether there was not a provision of the oath which all officers under the rebel government took especially abjuring all allegiance to the Government of the United States. Did they not expressly swear to support the constitution of the so-called confederate States? And are we to understand from the gentleman from Tennessee that the fact, if it be a fact, that Judge Patterson took that oath, with a mental determination at the time not to do that which the oath required him to do, puts us under an obligation to absolve him specially from the test oath which is required by the laws of this country to be taken by all persons who accept office under the Government of the United States?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will answer both branches of the gentleman's question. As to the precise form of the oath known as the "confederate" oath—the oath to support the constitution of the confederate States, or the "secesh" oath, or the "rebel" oath, or whatever term was used by our people—I am unable to speak with that definiteness and precision with which on an occasion of this kind I ought to speak, because I never, so far as I at this moment remember, saw a copy of the oath in writing. I have a general impression that it was simply an oath in the usual form to support the constitution of the "confederate" States instead of the United States.

Now, sir, let me say, in reply to another branch of the question, that this joint resolution does not propose to relieve Judge Patterson from any supposed disqualification arising from the taking of that oath. It is accepting the office that constitutes the supposed disqualification. If there is anything in his having taken the oath that disqualifies him it will remain after this joint resolution shall be passed, just as now. I was proceeding, however, to state that Judge Patterson's holding the office was not done in "hostility to the Government of the United States," but was an act of known, understood, and recognized hostility to the southern confederacy. So, then, it seems to me that the oath could have been taken with a safe conscience, even without any legislation of this sort. The Senate, as I understand, are almost unanimously of the opinion that nothing which has occurred during the last five years disqualifies Judge Patterson from holding the office of Senator of the United States to which he has been elected. He is willing and offers to take the oath as it stands, believing he can do so with a safe conscience. Still they have thought it better, more expedient, wiser, to relieve him from the ordinary requirement of taking that portion of the oath, that the law is better maintained in this way than by permitting him to take the oath in its present form and thus be subject to criticism arising from an opposite construction of the terms of it. It seems to me that as a matter of comity we should concur in the decision at which the Senate have arrived. The matter is one peculiarly their own. They have examined it, decided it, and very unanimously. Their decision requires a change in the law as applied to this particular case, not that they propose to abrogate the law so as to impair its force; but on the contrary, they would magnify it and make it more honorable by formally and solemnly relaxing it in favor of a case to which it was never meant to apply.

That Judge Patterson has been loyal, not merely passively loyal, but actively, a determined and loyal citizen of the United States from the beginning all through the war, is a fact which I do not hesitate here most solemnly to declare and affirm. I know there are very few men in the United States as little inclined to resist the law or any provision of it to favor persons who have been engaged in this rebellion at any time or in any way as I am. I am not speaking in defense of one who has been engaged in rebellion. I am not speaking in behalf of treason or traitors. I am speaking in behalf of a man whom I know to have been as loyal to this Government as I am, however we may have differed upon many questions which have arisen heretofore and are now before the country, or however we may differ in regard to questions likely to arise hereafter. I am speaking in vindication of a loyal, honest man, and not in defense of a disloyal and dishonest traitor.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot fully trust our judgment to make an ex post facto decision of what would have been expedient or wise or right, all things considered, under the cruel and horrible surroundings of the rebellion. Men environed by rebel bayonets in the hands of a power that recognized no such thing as justice or injustice, no standard of right and wrong—a power made up of irresponsible and terrible despots—are not in the best frame of mind to judge what is in all respects expedient or wise.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. The gentleman will allow me to inquire whether it was this unjust and irresponsible power that Mr. Patterson swore he would support when he entered upon the duties of that office.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have already stated, and I ask the attention of the House to it, the question is not as to any disqualification, or supposed disqualification, from the oath taken, but quo animo he accepted office in those distressing times.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me in order that I may put a question to him.

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether or not the constitution of Tennessee had been changed at all when Judge Patterson took that oath; and whether the oath was not the same which had previously been taken with the exception of the substitution of confederate States for the United States.

Mr. MAYNARD. The State constitution required that every officer of every kind in the State should, in addition to other oaths, take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. I think I use the language precisely. My recollection is that the rebels changed that feature in the constitution so as to require them to take an oath to support the constitution of the "confederate" States.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. He took an oath to support the rebel government in addition to his other oaths?

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose the oath he took was an oath to support the constitution of the confederate States. I see Judge Patterson is present in the Hall and he intimates that I am correct. The oath was, "I swear I will support the constitution of the confederate States of America." I think that was the form required.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Does the gentleman mean to say that he took that oath and then violated it; that he swore upon the Holy Evangelists that he would support the confederate States and then violated it?

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that all discussion in regard to this oath that was taken is irrelevant and improper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Senate have sent us for our decision the question in relation to the admission of Judge Patterson to a seat in the Senate. He is a good Union man. Now shall we deny him that which he asks?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, for it is in reference to this oath the subject is now pending before the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well, sir; I suppose the decision is all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. In reply to the question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will reiterate that this joint resolution does not propose to relieve Judge Patterson from any disqualification from having taken the oath under these circumstances, if it constitutes any disqualification.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that our Union men, as a question of casuistry, differed in their view of this subject. There were loyal men, and when I say loyal men I mean it—I use terms in their best-understood meaning and do not intend in any manner to palter with words in a double sense—men who went for the Government through thick and thin, high winds or low winds. I say, then, there were Union men who, as a question of casuistry, thought they might take that oath and disregard it whenever they thought proper to do so, disregard it entirely without offense to their conscience. There were other men who took a different view and refused under any and all circumstances, proscription, imprisonment, and everything else, to take the oath to support the confederacy. Among these were high officials in the State. Our present Governor was one of the latter class. When imprisoned he was told that he would be released if he would take the oath, and he steadily refused to do so. The secretary of state, also well known to the country as a thorough and unequivocal Union man, when in the power of rebels was required by them to take the oath, and was told by them if he did not they would imprison him indefinitely, and he accordingly took it. He belonged to the former class. The two classes were pretty numerous. I am not aware that either was offended by the course of the other. As I have said, the situation was severe and distressing, and honest men acted as their judgment dictated. The Union men trusted each other implicitly, and their differences were not made cause of reproach.

I do not know what Judge Patterson's feelings were. I suppose when he concluded to take the position he resolved to go through with all formalities attendant on it. Let me illustrate his situation by referring to an office purely military, the office of conscript agent, an office established for the collecting together and reporting of all persons of military age within the bounds of the official district. The Union men were desirous that one of their own number should be put into this office, not for the purpose of getting men into the rebel army but for the purpose of keeping them out; not "in hostility to the United States" but "in hostility to the confederacy;" not to aid the rebellion but to aid the Government. Should it be insisted that this was a holding of office within the meaning of the law such as to constitute a disqualification? I protest against any such construction as contrary to the purpose and meaning of the statute. So the Senate evidently think. This office, held by Judge Patterson, under the circumstances, is no disqualification. A Union, radically Union, Legislature have elected him to the Senate. It is not proposed to modify the oath in behalf of one who has been tainted with rebellion. Nobody proposes that. I certainly do not. Anything else but that. The object is to relieve from possible hardship a friend, at the same time we exercise increased rigor to the enemies of the country, to admit them by a side door into the citadel while we barricade the main entrance more securely against the other. Such was the evident purpose of the Senate. And while I might have thought it better to have admitted the Senator in the usual form, they have judged differently, and, as a matter of comity toward the other House, let us concur.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAYNARD. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would ask the gentleman this question: if, as he says, this oath taken to support the confederate government shall go for nothing by reason of any mental reservation whatever, or that it is not considered binding in law on the conscience of the person taking the oath, does not that lay the foundation for any person who regards the test oath as unconstitutional, to walk into this Hall and take it without hesitation, upon the ground that it possesses no binding force upon his conscience?

Mr. MAYNARD. I will answer in a general way, that I think it does not. I could give at length my reasons for my opinion, but will not do so, because I see that the hour to which I am entitled is nearly exhausted. I have promised to yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] and I now do so.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, since I heard the report and joint resolution sent us from the Senate, I have felt myself unwilling to enter upon any extended consideration of the merits of the joint resolution. I wish, however, in the ten minutes allowed me by the kindness of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] to say a few words in regard to the legal aspect of the question as now presented to us. It is a question, let me assure members of this House, which in its reach and effect it will be difficult for the best minds in our body fully now to take in and realize. I regret on all accounts that it has come to us under circumstances like those which now surround us, and at a time like this. But I will not stop to dwell upon that view of the question. Permit me, however, to allude to one or two legal points which are involved in this matter. It is said that we may safely pass this joint resolution because the person who has presented his credentials in the body at the other end of the Capitol has been loyal; and that that fact is to control and dispose of the question in this House. Now, sir, it does seem to me that there is a fallacy involved in that idea which a very slight analysis will enable us to detect.

Sir, if there is anything that has been conceded by everybody all through this controversy upon the subject of reconstruction, it is that while the two Houses of Congress, as the political branch of the Government of the United States, may and must judge of the existence of the constituency to be represented; and of the status of the States, and must decide when there is a constituency that can elect a Representative at all, and when there is a State that sustains proper constitutional relations to the Federal Government; while it is conceded that there are matters that belong to Congress as the political part of the Government, everybody has conceded all through this controversy that all questions of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members belong solely and alone to each separate branch of Congress by itself; and therefore this House can judge to no extent and in no degree of any question connected with the qualification of Judge Patterson to take a seat in the American Senate.

Hence it is that what has been said so candidly and fairly by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] has not reached the real question in this case. It is not a question of loyalty or want of loyalty on the part of Judge Patterson. It is not a question as to whether he took or did not take a certain oath.

Sir, the question which is presented to the American House of Representatives with startling emphasis, and under startling circumstances, is whether we shall let down the law to suit a case that is presented; not a case in fact, but a case in law. It is whether we shall so change the law as that a man may take a seat in the American Congress although he cannot swear that he has not held office under the rebel government. Sir, disguise it as you may, change terms as you may, talk as you will, here to-night you have already got square up to the question whether the House of Representatives shall so let down the law as that even Jefferson Davis can take a seat in the American Senate. Sir, that is the question; you cannot evade it, you cannot avoid it.

The Senate has sent us a proposition asking us to say that a law of the land shall be so changed by a joint resolution of Congress that a man may be permitted to come into the Senate or into the House of Representatives who is unable to swear that he has not held office under the rebel government. That is the question which you are called upon now to decide. The question of the loyalty or the disloyalty of the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. Patterson) has nothing at all to do with it.

Pause, my fellow-members of the House of Representatives, I entreat you, pause here upon the terrible brink at which you have arrived, and over which you look to-night. Take this step, and there is no retreat. Take this step, adopt this joint resolution, and you will have indicated your willingness to permit the man who has furnished the brains for the rebellion, who has held an office, high or low, under the rebel government to come here and assume the responsibility of an American legislator. And you are asked to do this when scarcely a moon has waned since you passed, so far as the American Congress had to do with it; a provision so amending the Constitution of the United States as that no man who has held any office under the rebel government shall ever be competent, except by a two-third vote of both Houses of Congress, to take a position of the kind to which we are invited to admit Judge Patterson to-night. My fellow-members of the House of Representatives, we are asked to turn squarely around upon that for which we have congratulated ourselves, upon that for which the country has congratulated us; that is, the having taken a step right, mighty, and sublime in the endeavor to hold and retain the Government in the hands and control of loyal men.

It is for these reasons that I could not, nay I would not, until my dying day, vote for a joint resolution that proposes now so to let down the law as that those whose hands are yet red and dripping with the blood of loyal men, and who furnished to this mighty and godless rebellion its brains, who held its offices, shall be permitted under a joint resolution of the Congress of the United States to step into the high places of power under the American Government which they tried but failed to destroy.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will now yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is fit and proper; I think, that I should make a statement in reference to the distinguished gentleman upon whose case this body is now sitting, because he is my constituent; he lives in my district, the district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor. It is my happiness to have known him, not only through the bloody scenes which have occurred during the last five years, but for long years before. And I take pleasure in saying here to-night in all sincerity to my fellow-members in this House, that so far as my personal knowledge extends, there is not in this House, there is not within the limits of these United States to-night a man who can present a clearer record of devotion to the country we all love, of pure, unwavering, unmitigated loyalty to the Government than David T. Patterson. Ay, sir, such was his devotion to the cause, such was his loyalty to the Government, such was his fellow-feeling with those who loved their Government, that he was willing for their sake—not for the sake of the bloody-handed rebels, of whom my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] speaks; not for the sake of advancing the interests of the cause that was opposed to his country and to your country; but for the cause of his compatriots in Tennessee he was willing to be a judge, to occupy an office of responsibility and trust, and to have the lives and reputation and property of the people in his keeping. I am not speaking at random; I know whereof I am speaking.

In 1854 Mr. Patterson was elected judge of the circuit for the term of eight years. In 1860, when the coming war began to loom up in the political horizon; when it became evident that we were to be plunged into a civil war, Judge Patterson, to my personal knowledge, had a strong inclination to resign his position as judge of the circuit court; but the Union people of his circuit, of whom I was one, besought him, for their sake and for the country's sake, to continue to hold his position as judge. He consented to their entreaty, and held the position of judge until the expiration of his term in 1862. He then disclosed to me the fact that he desired to retire to private life; that he did not intend to be a candidate for reelection, for he did not desire to continue to hold that position under such embarrassing circumstances as then surrounded us. The country was then full of rebel soldiers and they were in the full tide of successful rebellion in Tennessee. Be it remembered, sir, that East Tennessee, at that time and all the time from the beginning of the war, through all its changing and horrid scenes, was true to the country—true in prosperity and true in adversity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's five minutes have expired.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. May I ask the consent of the House to speak five minutes longer?

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to granting to the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. These people, as I was remarking, were true to the Union. And what is the best evidence of that truth? In February, 1861, when the question of secession was first proposed to the people of Tennessee through the ballot-box, what was the answer of the State of Tennessee? Sixty-four thousand against rebellion and for the Union. What proportion of those was found in East Tennessee. About thirty thousand votes in a vote of about forty-two thousand. Thirty thousand votes were given for the Union in East Tennessee.

In June, 1861, the question was again propounded by the Legislature. Then the direct issue was separation or no separation. In the mean time our country was filled with armed and organized rebels; and when that election came, the loyal voters in some parts of East Tennessee had to pass to the ballot-box between rows of rebel bayonets. In the mean time secession had prevailed in Virginia; it had prevailed in North Carolina, in South Carolina, in Georgia, Alabama, and the other southern States; and middle and western Tennessee had been swept into the whirlpool of rebellion. The storm had gathered all around our little mountain land of East Tennessee with her thirty-one counties. We were deserted by our friends on all hands. Mountains stood like impassable barriers between us and the flag of our country; for it must be remembered that the Government of the United States, owing us protection, had abdicated in fact and left us to whatever power might choose to domineer over us.

Under these circumstances East Tennessee, deserted by her friends, abandoned by the Government of the United States, surrounded by rebel bayonets, her citizens threatened with expatriation, threatened with confiscation, threatened with death at every step if they did not yield allegiance to the confederacy, East Tennessee, in the midst of these circumstances, stood as firmly based and anchored in her loyalty as were her everlasting hills upon their granite foundations. Her people wavered not; they trembled not; but, sir, they marched right up between rows of rebel bayonets and deposited thirty-four thousand votes against separation to about seven thousand for it. This was the spirit of East Tennessee in 1861, and it was the spirit which she carried with her throughout the whole struggle. Sir, I would like to review, if time permitted, the thrilling history of East Tennessee during this war. I trust that before this Congress ends I shall have the privilege of doing justice to as noble, as gallant, as loyal, as patriotic a people as breathes the air of these United States.

Who was it, sir, that held East Tennessee fast anchored in her loyalty? Among the rest was the distinguished gentleman whose case you have now on trial here to-night. He was one of the leaders in the Union movement. He presided in our circuit court. He had the ear and the confidence of the Union people. He was traveling from county to county. He was in communication with all the loyal people. He it was who, in conjunction with others, laid the train for that underground railroad over which more than twenty thousand loyal East Tennesseans passed, between sunset and sunrise, with their knapsacks on their backs, with their feet bleeding, through the pathless forest and over the craggy summits of our loftiest mountains, their way lighted by the pale glimmer of the stars or the light of the moon.

I know Judge Patterson would have remained out of office in 1862, when his term had expired, had it not been for the importunate demands of the people of his circuit. I know what I say when I say this. I was one of the first who received the announcement from his own lips that he could not without hazard to his own life serve as a Union judge again. I insisted, with my Union fellow-citizens, that he should retain his office. Although there was a rebel candidate opposing him, doing all he could to secure his election, Judge Patterson, without running for the office, was elected by a majority of four thousand by the Union people against the rebels.

Now, why did he hold the office? It was simply in defense of the Government of the United States. He held it for the purpose of protecting the loyal people of Tennessee. Are, then, his very virtues to be brought up in judgment against him in this House? Is he to be punished for holding the position to which his people assigned him, that he might protect them against the rebels? Surely if our people are disposed to reward merit, if our people are disposed to do justice to those who were willing to go through fire and toil for the honor of the country and for the honor of our loyal people, the Senate of the United States and this House will not place their foot upon and trample down a true patriot who risked his life and all that he had for the honor of that flag under which you, Mr. Speaker, now sit.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will say that it is necessary, in consequence of the late period of the session, this discussion should be soon brought to a close. I have no disposition to prevent reasonable debate, but I should like to have some understanding as to when the vote will be taken.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think that any understanding is necessary further than that this debate shall be kept within reasonable limits.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman say twelve o'clock to-night?

Mr. CONKLING. I think the vote ought to be taken long before that.

Mr. MAYNARD. Say quarter past eleven.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no necessity of having any understanding upon the subject at this time.

The SPEAKER. The discussion can go on, and if the previous question be not called the gentleman from Tennessee may rise whenever he may think proper to close the debate.

Mr. CONKLING. I believe I now have the floor, and I yield with a great deal of pleasure to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. STOKES.]

Mr. STOKES. I regret very much, sir, this question has been forced upon this House, but inasmuch as it is now here, and I have had no agency in bringing it here, I deem it is due to myself, due to Judge Patterson, due to this House, due to the loyal people of Tennessee, that I should express my views without fear or favor.

I desire, in the first place, to state that this question is not as to whether Judge Patterson shall be admitted as a member of the Senate or not. That, sir, is not the question involved in the resolution which comes from the Senate. The question involved in that resolution is, will this House repeal the decision that has been ingrafted upon our statute-book?

I desire to state my feelings are those of kindness toward Judge Patterson. I do not controvert his Unionism. I do not controvert his sincerity. I do not controvert his ability. I do not pretend to say that he would not make a good Senator. Not at all; but that is not the issue. I shall refrain from uttering a word in regard to his claim to the floor of the Senate, as to his merits or demerits. Coming as I do from Tennessee, I only desire to state my position on this question.

On the night of the 22d of February last I delivered a speech in Nashville, Tennessee, and there and then declared if admitted as a member of this House I would freeze to my seat before I would vote to repeal the test oath. [Long-continued applause on the floor and in the galleries.] I have made the same declaration in many speeches since then. I have uttered the same thing on this floor privately to every member with whom I have had the pleasure of conversing. Sir, I regard the test oath passed by the United States Congress as the salvation of the Union men of the South as well as of the North. I regard it as sacred as the flaming sword which the Creator placed in the tree of life to guard it, forbidding any one from partaking of the fruit thereof who was not pure in heart. Sir, this is no light question. Repeal the test oath and you permit men to come into Congress and take seats who have taken an oath to the confederate government and who have aided and assisted in carrying out its administration and laws. That is what we are now asked to do. Look back to the 14th of August, 1861, the memorable day of the proclamation issued by Jefferson Davis ordering every man within the lines of the confederacy who still held allegiance to the Federal Government to leave within forty-eight hours. That order compelled many to seek for hiding-places who could not take the oath of allegiance to the confederate government. When the rebel authorities said to our noble Governor of Tennessee, "We will throw wide open the prison doors and let you out if you will swear allegiance to our government," what was his reply? "You may sever my head from my body, but I will never take the oath to the confederate government." [Applause.]

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order to allow this cheering in the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the Chair must insist that gentlemen shall obey the rules of the House.

Mr. STOKES. Sir, I cannot vote for this resolution. I am committed against it, and besides I do not think it ought to pass. This House ought not to repeal or modify any part of the test oath, and the failure to pass this resolution does not prevent Judge Patterson from taking his seat in the Senate by any means. This House can vote down the resolution and maintain the test oath, and yet if Judge Patterson can conscientiously take the oath the Senate will admit him. But it has been said that this resolution was proposed in order to preserve the law, to keep it intact. I cannot see it in that light; I do not understand it in that way. But pass this resolution and every man who comes from the South, whether he has held a judicial, legislative, or executive office, or has been an officer in the rebel army, can appeal to the precedent adopted by the House of Representatives on the 27th of July, 1866, and your test oath will not be worth a straw. Whenever you abate one jot or tittle from that oath it is gone. It is now the shield and protection of loyal men in Tennessee. Repeal it here and they will be forced to repeal it in Tennessee, and then where will the loyal men stand? Where will the Union people be?

Mr. WRIGHT. Where will you be?

Mr. STOKES. Where I have always been.

Mr. WRIGHT. Where you were when you wrote that letter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is out of order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. STOKES. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire if the letter, a copy of which I hold in my hand, purporting to have been written by him, is genuine. I will send it to the Clerk's desk and have it read, with the gentleman's permission.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object.

Mr. FINCK. Are you afraid of it?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will not object. If it is not a genuine letter I desire to know the fact; if it is genuine I desire the gentleman to explain it.

Mr. STOKES. I have no objection to its being read. I am responsible for all I have said or done.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object to it; the gentleman is not on trial.

Mr. JOHNSON. He will very soon be on trial.

Mr. STOKES. I will allow the letter to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBERTY, May 10, 1861.

DEAR SIR: I have just learned from a friend that there is some gross misrepresentation going the rounds in your section in regard to my position in this trying crisis, and for the benefit of yourself and others I write this.

I have been a zealous advocate of the Union up to the time of Lincoln's call for seventy-five thousand troops; that being in violation of law, and for the subjugation of the South. I commend Governor Harris for his course, and for arming the State and resisting Lincoln to the point of the bayonet, and have enrolled my name as a volunteer to resist his usurpation. I have, in Congress and out, opposed coercion, and all forced measures, believing that it was better to recognize the independence of the "southern confederacy" than to attempt to coerce them back.

I have always opposed secession, but claim the right of revolution, and the right to resist the oppression of the Federal Government, and to throw off their allegiance to the same when that oppression becomes intolerable. That time has now come. I have been, and am now, for standing by the border slave States, for they are to be the great sufferers during the conflict. I am opposed to being tacked on to the southern confederacy at present, (except as a military league.) But when peace is restored, if the two nations cannot live in peace, let all the fifteen slave States elect delegates, meet in convention, frame their constitution, and submit it to the people for their ratification.

The South ought to be a unit during the war by all means. I had announced myself as a candidate for reelection, but on seeing Lincoln's proclamation for troops, abandoned the canvass at once, and I am no candidate. I claim to have done my duty in trying to heal our difficulties and restore peace. That having failed, I shall now march forward in the discharge of my duty in resisting Lincoln, regardless of false charges, or what not, by those who are trying to put me down. Time will tell where we all stand, and who have been faithful.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain yours truly,

WILLIAM B. STOKES.

Mr. JOHN DUNCAN, McMinnville, Tennessee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to know if that is a genuine letter.

Mr. STOKES. Yes, sir; it is.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I understand the gentleman to say that he would freeze in his chair before he would vote to modify the test oath. I would like to know how he can take the oath in the face of that letter, and whether it would not be best, in order that he may avoid doing violence to his conscience, for us to modify the oath somewhat so as to allow him now, loyal as I believe he is, to retain his seat in the House of Representatives. [Applause in the gallery.]

The SPEAKER. This disorder proceeds from the galleries. The assistant doorkeepers will, on the repetition of any disorder, remove the disorderly persons.

Mr. FINCK. It is on the wrong side.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am satisfied to have order enforced, although I am sure we have spoken to the Chair on the subject several times heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has never raised a question of order of this kind but the Chair has promptly responded.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The Chair has said that he was unable to restrain laughter.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for any presiding officer to restrain members from laughing. If the gentleman had ever occupied the Speaker's chair he would have found it so. But other manifestations of disorder he can restrain.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can vouch for that, for when I made a motion the Speaker himself laughed. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. There is nothing more common than to see "laughter" in the published debates of the British Parliament.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope we shall never in that respect act like members of Parliament. [Laughter.]

Mr. STOKES. The letter has been read and I must say I am obliged to my friend from Wisconsin, who introduced it. He wishes to know how I can come here and take the oath now. The House will hear me out on this matter, and then we will compare records—my record with that of the gentleman from Wisconsin or of anybody else.

In 1850, just after the passage of the compromise measures, a convention of Democrats was held at the South, with Yancey at their head. It was avowedly a disunion convention. Soon after the meeting of that convention, which was in October, the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, of which I was a member, met. The question came up of union or disunion, and I recorded my vote on the side of the Union.

In 1855, a similar question sprang up in the Legislature, and I again planted myself on the side of the Union, both in my votes and speeches. In 1859, I was elected from the fourth district to the Congress of the United States. I will say nothing in regard to my record while here for it easily may be obtained by reference to the Journals of this House. You remember, sir, as well as others on this floor, when the question was asked me, would I not agree in any case to a dissolution of the Union, that my reply was "Never, sir, never!"

That Congress passed off and the 4th of March came. You remember, sir, we heard the valedictories of southern seceding Democrats. You remember after they had delivered their valedictories in this House, they packed up their duds and left. I then returned to my home, and on my way, on the night of the 6th of March, in Nashville, I declared in a speech I would rather have a Government without property than property and no Government. There were hisses in the crowd. I repeated it. I repeated that I would rather have a Government and no property than property and no Government. I said, "You can construe that to be abolitionism, Lincolnism, or any other ism you may choose." I told them they would utter the same thing when they had been subdued. On my return home I made speeches at Cookeville, Gainesboro', Thynn's Lick, and at a great many other places, up to the 25th day of April, 1861. The Legislature was called together by the Governor. They convened, and as I have repeatedly said, from the 25th of April up to the 11th or 12th of the May following, I was on the stump. Kentucky occupied a neutral position. Union men of our State issued their address. Almost every leading man in Middle and Western Tennessee had lowered his flag. I remained in that part not knowing where to go or where to strike, and during that time the letter, bearing date the 10th of May, was written in my office. While I admit there are things in it which are wrong, still there is not a letter in favor of secession, not a word in favor of separation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? I do not want to disturb him, but I should like to know whether there is not something in that letter about forming a league with the confederate States.

Mr. STOKES. I understand it perfectly well, and I will make the gentleman understand it before I get done.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Did you not say that you voluntarily enrolled yourself there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield the floor?

Mr. STOKES. I decline to yield any further. Before that letter was written companies had been organized and were in camp with the distinct understanding they were to fight under the flag and were not to go out of the Union. The honest boys of the mountains enlisted and went into the Army with that understanding. I did, with a few Union men, form a league, but the seceding Democrats came in and seeing that it was a trick against them they broke it into pieces. That letter was written on the 10th of May. I do not deny it. A portion of it is correct and a portion of it is wrong. On the 11th day of May, before the ink was scarcely dry, gentlemen returning from Nashville brought the ordinance of separation. The moment I saw that I said to my friends, "We are sold; you see there is no neutrality; but we are men and are now compelled to occupy our rightful position."

Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the ordinance of secession I took my position firmly and at once. I made a list of appointments, and spoke against separation and secession up to the day of the election, on the 8th of June. I met Judge Ridley, Rev. J. B. McFerrin, and others. My friends will bear me out that but few men moved forward and worked against secession as I did. The 8th of June came, and I voted against secession and separation. I remained quietly at home, and when the election came on in November, others, like myself, voted against the ratification of the constitution.

February came, and the rebel troops came. They were in the country. Fishing Creek fight took place. In March, General Buell arrived, with his blue-coats, at Nashville. When that occurred, I worked my way through. I did not go there to eat the rations of the soldiers. I did not go there to lie around the camp. I did not go there and subject myself to be called a camp follower. The President of the United States first commissioned me as a major, and then as a colonel in the Army. I raised a regiment of cavalry, of twelve hundred men. I will not speak of the acts of that regiment. It is of record, whether good or bad. It is indelible, and cannot be wiped out. I served in the Federal Army about three years and a few days over. I can stand here and say I never, during the whole three years, disobeyed an order of my superior. I went where I was ordered. I took whatever place I was ordered. I held it when I was ordered.

During the canvass for Lincoln and Johnson I was placed on the ticket as one of the electors. I made the canvass in 1865. The rebel sympathizers were then all against me, while the loyal Union men were in my favor.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. I think the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee are not germane to the subject under consideration. [Laughter.] We are looking after the resolution for the admission of Judge Patterson to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. STOKES. I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee has been drawn from the regular course of his remarks by a letter which the gentleman from Wisconsin sent up to the Clerk's desk and caused to be read.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What I desired to call the attention of the gentleman to was not in regard to his record since that time, for I believe I admitted in putting the question that I had no doubt of his attachment to the Government; but I understood him to say he would sit here until he froze in his chair before he would vote to modify that test oath.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What is the question of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point of order that the discussion must be confined to the resolution pending before the House, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is clearly out of order.

Mr. ROSS. Cannot the gentleman from Tennessee have an opportunity to explain in reference to his enlisting in the southern army?

Mr. STOKES. I hope the House will indulge me for one moment. This matter has been drawn into this debate by the members on the other side who now make the point of order against me. I thought I had a right to make the proper explanation when, as I understood, the gentleman asked me whether I was satisfied with having taken the oath or not. It is my desire the House shall know everything. I want nothing concealed. I thought it was the correct way to give my political record, so that the House might judge whether I ever did take the oath or not.

The SPEAKER. It was all perfectly in order until the point was raised against the gentleman. The gentleman from Tennessee will now proceed with his remarks.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. STOKES. With much respect for the gentleman from Wisconsin, I now decline to yield the floor. He can take the floor when I have concluded.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to put myself right before this House, for the rebel newspapers and journals have been publishing that letter at least once in every two weeks. It is the only thing they have to go on. It was printed during the canvass and I met it there. I met it before the loyal people of my own district. I have met it everywhere in the West, and everywhere I have been sustained by the people. It is brought here as the last chance, and I think with a success as small as that which it has received heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STOKES] that under the point of order raised by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WRIGHT] his remarks must be confined to the subject before the House, which is the joint resolution from the Senate.

Mr. STOKES. I presumed it was in order for me to repeat what I have said, that I would freeze to my seat before I would vote to repeal or modify the test oath. I hope that is in order.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. STOKES. I repeat it again, and I swear before the eternal God, keep out whom it may, I will never vote to repeal or to modify that oath in any one particular.

It is not the man or his status and qualifications upon which we are called to pass judgment. It is an invitation to us to change and modify the test oath, which is our guard and protection in the South. Repeat that test oath to-night, and it will not be long ere you will hear the cry come up from the loyal men of Tennessee, almost without a dissenting voice, that Congress has taken from them their property and their support, and subjected them to the mercy of the rebels and their sympathizers. Sir, whom do you find opposed to this test oath? Where do you find the opposition to it? Do you find it in the truly Union papers? Can any man upon this floor show me a solitary Union paper in the country that advocates the repeal of the test oath? No, sir. Then who complains of it? It is this faction who are opposing it, and they alone.

I feel that I am justified in voting against this joint resolution. I do so from no ill-will or ill-feeling toward the gentleman involved here. But I do it in the honest discharge of my duty to my constituents and to the loyal men of the entire South. Duty compels me to vote against it. In conclusion, let me appeal to the Union men of this House, to the Union party in this House, not to pass this joint resolution. You have the control of the Government in your hands. In the name of the Union, loyal people of the South, and particularly of my own State, I ask you to keep this test oath upon your statute-book as the flaming sword to guard, shield, and protect the loyal men of the South. If you give way, if you repeal or modify the test oath, you will strike a blow at the Union men of the South from which they cannot recover. They look to you for protection and for aid. If you fail to stand by them it will be your fault; if they are compelled to yield to their enemies you will be responsible to the Union party of the South for the result. As has been already said to-night, the Union men of Tennessee have already suffered too much to be willing again to be ruled, controlled, and tyrannized over by the rebels and their sympathizers. For one, I am for keeping the Government in the hands of loyal men, of Union men.

Mr. Speaker, this is a subject of vast importance and magnitude. Let this House pass this joint resolution and woe will come unto the country.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, I should be recreant to candor were I to attempt to conceal my amazement at the scene now passing before us. Only eight short days ago and eleven States were silent and absent here, because they had participated in guilty rebellion, and because they were not in fit condition to share in the government and control of this country. Seven short days ago we found one of these States with loyalty so far retrieved, one State so far void of present offenses, that the ban was withdrawn from her and she again placed upon an equal footing with the most favored States in the Union. The doors were instantly thrown open to her Senators and Representatives, the whole case was disposed of, and the nation approved the act. Tennessee was restored to her birth-right, her representatives were invested with every immunity and privilege of the representatives from New York or Pennsylvania, and on the same terms. Was not this enough? No one asked for more. Nothing further could be granted. Nothing further would have been accepted could it have been offered. Here the matter should have rested. Here it should have been left forever undisturbed. But no; before one week has made its round we are called upon to stultify ourselves, to wound the interests of the nation, to surrender the position held by the loyal people of the country almost unanimously, and the exigency is that a particular citizen of Tennessee seeks to effect his entrance to the Senate of the United States without being qualified like every other man who is permitted to enter there.

You, sir, who sit in the chair, and every other member of this House, at the threshold took an oath which every man must take before he can cross that threshold. Why? Because the public good requires it; so it has been inscribed on the statute-book. Yet in the fast flying hours of the closing night of this eight months' session, we are suddenly appealed to to give up this safeguard, to cleave down this statute, or to allow it to be trampled under foot. And there seems danger that the appeal may be listened to. How far have we drifted from our moorings when this can be true?

We met here in December, divided by many differences, but there was one ground common to all. There was one ground upon which every man in the nation, who pretended to be loyal, asserted that he stood. What was this common sentiment? It was that the Government must be preserved from its admitted enemies; that the destinies of the nation should never be yielded up to men whose hands and faces are dripping with the blood of murder. Upon that platform we all stood.

Some, not all, insisted upon indemnity for the past; some, not all, insisted upon security for the future; but all insisted that the public debt should be inviolate forever. And all protested that the power to legislate or to prevent legislation should never be given to those who would wring taxes from our people or take money from the Treasury to pay the debts contracted by rebels for the ruin of their country. All admitted that to insure these two ends the seats in this House and in the Senate must be occupied only by those true to the genius and faithful to the mission of this Government. I say we differed as to the means, as to the conditions, as to the safeguards which were necessary. The great majority of men deemed the "test oath" alone entirely inadequate. They said, "If you could always maintain and enforce the provision that no man should sit in Congress who could not truly take the oath, there would be some safety," but they argued, that after southern representatives had been admitted, the oath might be repealed, or that men might take it dishonestly and evade it. The only question was whether the "test oath" was enough—who dared to say it was too much? Who ventured to argue that we should be safe with less? Who, I mean, that holds the creed of the Union party?

The President of the United States, though he leads the sentiment which antagonizes the position held by the Union majorities in Congress, has never in public utterance intimated that we could safely remove this last impediment from the path of those seeking seats here or in the Senate. On the contrary, the President has relied on the "test oath" as one of the corner-stones of his argument.

With all the sway of his great place, and with all the emphasis he has employed, he has insisted throughout that the existence of the test oath made it safe for each House to admit those who could take it. He has said that, without looking to the constituency, we ought to admit men regularly elected who could qualify by taking the oath. Has not this been the President's position? Has he not defined loyal men to be those who could take the oath which you took, Mr. Speaker, which I took, and which all must take who would enter upon any office, as it stands on the page of the statute?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. And approved by President Lincoln.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes; approved by President Lincoln, and approved, as James Madison said of another statute, by the universal acquiescence of the American people. The President has said the "test oath," and men who have denounced Congress, if they pretended to be loyal, have said the "test oath" was the magic barrier, the elixir of life, the all-sufficient lion in the path of disloyalty; and that while we maintained the test oath the Republic could take no harm from admitting representatives from States lately in rebellion. Some of us believed this and some did not. Some feared that the test oath, if we trusted to it alone, would lead to the paradox of a constituency having the nominal right of representation while being itself disloyal, and compelled to exercise that right by choosing a loyal man who would not truly reflect the sentiments of his constituents, or else that disloyal constituents would choose those who did reflect their sentiments at heart, but who were dishonest enough to take the oath notwithstanding. Some feared that the oath would be no shield against men, disloyal in fact, who, upon some question of "casuistry"—I borrow the phrase—would manage to take it, and who, having thereby seated themselves in the House or in the Senate, could never be ousted except by the vote of an impossible two thirds. But the test oath was the outpost; it was a point beyond debatable propositions; and no man was found to deny that the oath should be preserved as the barrier between us and disloyalty; no man, except those who were willing to relinquish the entire position in which loyalty consists.

But now, sir, in spite of all this, what do we find? In the very first instance in which this safeguard was needed, the first in which it was to be relied upon, it is proposed that we shall throw it away and destroy it utterly, not for Mr. Patterson alone, but for all those who would come here. If the oath cannot stand against Mr. Patterson it cannot stand against one of those who, reckoning all the fifteen former slave States, are to cast ninety-four or ninety-six votes in this House, if Representatives are to be admitted without waiting for the ratification of the amendment of the Constitution changing the rule of apportionment and representation. The southern members will then number almost one half of this entire body, and they will find enough here in sympathy with them, if they are to be men who cannot by an oath purge themselves of treason, to ring the knell of the day during which the public credit is to be preserved, during which the public faith is to be kept inviolate, during which repudiation is to be spurned and driven from these Halls.

Sir, I say it is amazing; I say this whole scene to-night is a sad commentary, a picture sorrowful to be gazed upon by the people of this country, and justly sorrowful to none so much as to those who have argued and believed that we would have been safe heretofore in admitting even the most regenerated, the most redeemed, the most disinherited of the rebellious States.

I have nothing of personal feeling, by way of unkindness, in regard to the individual whose name and representative position is at stake. But we have heard a statement made in his behalf, which as his advocate I should never make, certainly not as a part of the argument to sustain the case presented to this House.

We are told in the first place that he took an oath to support the southern confederacy. What does this mean? It means that, holding up his hand in the presence of that God before whom traitors and loyal men must alike appear, he solemnly pledged himself to support that conglomeration of pirates, murderers, and thieves, whose hiding-place was Richmond. And an argument has been made upon the question whether this was a hostile act, whether it was within the meaning of the oath we have all taken. We all swear that we have not done any act "to support any authority hostile to the United States." The person in question it seems took an oath to support the enemies of the United States, but it is said he did not feel hostile himself. Are we quibbling upon technicalities, or playing with words like children with playthings? More than this; he accepted an official commission, and discharged the duties and exercised the prerogatives of a high officer, under this so-called confederation. And then is added what as his advocate I should not have added, that when he took the oath he did there was casuistry and mental reservation in the act—that he did not mean to be bound by it at the time. I ask the lawyers of this House, I ask all the members of this House, whether that creates a distinction favorable to the case. What was that reservation? That the oath to support usurped power was unconstitutional? Ay, sir, so it was, and in that sense was it obligatory upon one man who took it within the so-called confederacy? Certainly not. And yet we have put upon our statute-book, and we stand before the people to-day upon the idea that he who with an oath upon his lips solemnly dedicated himself to the service of that confederacy, took the last and most irretrievable step of rebel allegiance. Does a mental reservation in the taking of an oath change the obligation which that oath imposes? If it be an oath established by usurpation, its origin goes in some form to the question of its force. But is the efficacy of an oath measured or affected by the mental reservation of him who takes it? Does it reflect honor upon a man who takes an oath that he does so intending at the time, by a reservation kept within his own bosom, to decide afterward upon circumstances as they arise how far it is obligatory upon him? Nay, more than that; what is the attitude of him who takes an oath, actually intending at the time he takes it to reject its obligation and to trample it under foot? Such an act, if it be justifiable, implies a right of an individual judgment, which, as has been said, may be exercised in taking the test oath itself. Men have said that oath, too, was unconstitutional; and such men may come here and take it with a reservation, secretly resolved at the time, to trample that, too, under their feet. And the argument in ethics, in morals, and in law, is as strong in the last case as in the first. Can such doctrine be tolerated for a moment?

Sir, I have nothing in the world personally against the man concerned. But I view with as much feeling as my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] the proposition that is presented to us. We are asked to drive a plowshare over the very foundation of our position, to break down and destroy the bulwark by which we may secure the results of a great war, and a great history, by which we may preserve from defilement this place, where alone in our organism the people never lose their supremacy except by the recreancy of their representatives; a bulwark without which we may not save our Government from disintegration and disgrace. If we do this act, it will be a precedent which will carry fatality in its train. From Jefferson Davis to the meanest tool of despotism and treason, every rebel may come here, and we shall have no reason to assign against his admission except the arbitrary reason of numbers. Every man of them may come and lay his hand upon this joint resolution and say: "There is my title, as valid as that of any other man to a seat in either House of Congress, if I can only find a constituency to elect me."

For one I enter my solemn protest against it. I utter my warning against this first attempt to let down the standard of loyalty. Let us not stain our hands with this; it is the Senate's matter solely. The Senate has passed it; upon the Senate be the responsibility. The Senate has absolute power over the admission or rejection of Mr. Patterson, and there is no reason for our dividing with the Senate the responsibility of its exercise. I hope this House will keep aloof, and I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The understanding with us here was, that when the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] concluded his remarks the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] would be again recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have again recognized the gentlemen from Tennessee if he had desired the floor if the motion to lay the joint resolution on the table had not been made; but the gentleman from Tennessee had had the floor for an hour, for himself and those to whom he yielded, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] took the floor in his own right.

The question was upon laying the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. LYNCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 31, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, Deftrees, Driggs, Dumont, Eekley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farguhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Lafflin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seefeldt, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Leftwich, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Tabor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Winfield, and Wright—31.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos B. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Bonham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Goodyear, Gridley, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, De-mas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hubbard, LeBlond, Longear, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Moulton, Noell, Pike, Pomroy, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Strouse, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upton, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—67.

So the joint resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid upon the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell; and

An act (H. R. No. 596) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that that body had passed House joint resolution No. 197, authorizing a contract with Miss Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln, without amendment.

FENIANS.

Mr. DELANO. I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Whereas this House has been informed that certain peaceable and law-abiding citizens, while assembled at and within the building recently erected in this city for the benefit of orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors of the United States, situate on the corner of Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, have been illegally and improperly dispersed by the mayor of this city for the alleged reason that they belonged to a Fenian organization, and thus prevented from exercising their rights and privileges as citizens of the United States; Therefore

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said citizens are hereby authorized, whenever permitted so to do by the Speaker of this House or the President of the Senate, to use and to occupy said building for the purpose of holding public meetings for every proper and lawful purpose, and particularly in reference to the liberation of Ireland.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. DELANO. Certainly.

Mr. BANKS. I know nothing of the circumstances to which the resolution refers. The Senate and House appropriated this building and the materials of which it is composed to the lady managers of the late fair. Some gentleman of the House having thought that it might be occupied for purposes of a doubtful character, and inasmuch as the resolution passed by Congress require the lady managers should use this building for purposes which in their judgment should tend to the furtherance of the main object of the association, that is to say, for the benefit of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States, I say it was thought if used for political meetings or for gift lotteries it might lead to the question of the repeal of the resolution, and therefore it was suggested to the lady managers that they ought to be careful not to grant the use of the building except for the purpose mentioned in the resolution. It is quite possible that the parties interfered with in the occupation of the hall were interfered with because they had not the authority of the lady managers. I desire to say this much, although I have no knowledge of the circumstances of this particular case.

Mr. DELANO. That all may be. This resolution proposes no censure, but simply to refer to the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate the power to grant the use of this building for the purposes referred to in the resolution on all suitable and proper occasions. It seems to me eminently proper the resolution should pass, so that if persons desire to hold a meeting there the Speaker of this House or the President of the Senate, if it be deemed proper, can give them the use of the building for that purpose.

Mr. BANKS. There is no objection to that. Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does not the resolution in fact reflect upon the mayor? Is there any charge against him?

Mr. DELANO. I do not think there is any improper reflection on the mayor, or any reflection at all.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would inquire if this resolution is based upon what is understood to be the facts, and whether my colleague is informed as to that meeting being in any way riotous or disorderly, so as to justify the proceeding against it.

Mr. DELANO. On the contrary, I understand it was the reverse, that it was in every way quiet and orderly.

Mr. SCHENCK. Does my colleague understand on what pretense the mayor interfered?

Mr. DELANO. I do not know distinctly on what pretense, whether it was for the reasons given by the gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. BANKS] or on account of objections to the purpose of the meeting, but I wish to remove all those reasons and confer upon the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate power to grant the use of the building on all proper occasions.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. We have already parted with all control of the property and given it to the managers of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home. We are functus officio, the power has gone from us, and any proposition of this kind would be unjust to that institution—an imputation upon their honor and integrity.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is a speech to some extent. The Chair overrules it on the ground that the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, has a right to modify the grant it has made, and this is a modification.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BERGEN moved (at twelve o'clock) that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question was taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, from the committee of conference in relation to the bill to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 400, to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes, recommend that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out, including the words inserted by the House, all after the words "deputy collector," in line nine, page 2 of the bill, down to and including the word "customs," in the fourteenth line, same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

At the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, and to each of the general appraisers of local customs at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $3,000 per annum. To each of the deputy naval officers and the deputy surveyors at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $2,500; and to each of the custom-house weighers at the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Portland, and San Francisco, $2,000 per annum, out of the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs: Provided, That the additional compensation of twenty-five per cent., as now provided by law, shall be continued to officers, as aforesaid, at the port of San Francisco; and the House agree to the same.

E. D. MORGAN,
TIMOTHY O. HOWE,
WILLIAM T. WILLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SAMUEL HOOPER,
JOHN L. THOMAS,
GLENNI W. SCOFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERK TO SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee of Accounts, reported back the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the temporary clerk in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms be placed upon the roll as a regular clerk in that office at the compensation now received.

Mr. ROLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN RIDGWAY.

On motion of Mr. ROSS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of John Ridgway, and the same was laid on the table.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask leave to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 353, for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians.

Mr. BERGEN. I object.

Mr. PRICE. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to; two thirds voting in the affirmative.

The bill was read. It refunds to the trustees and stewards of the Wyandotte and Quindaro Mission Methodist Episcopal church, for the destruction of their building, $4,680, to be applied to rebuilding the said building and inclosing the grave-yard.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report, as soon as practicable, whether the rights of the people peaceably to assemble and consult for their own good has been interfered with in the city of Washington, and if so, by whom, and what legislation is necessary to protect the people in the enjoyment of all their rights, including the right to discuss the condition of Ireland and the duties of American citizens in relation thereto.

CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask leave to report on the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill No. 43, to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up and considered, ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMUTATION OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. SCHENCK. Yesterday there was a report made by my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. ANCONA] in relation to the repayment in certain cases of commutation money to those from whom it had been improperly taken. I am sure that the House did not understand it when they made objection which sent it to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Military Affairs investigated the matter thoroughly, corresponded with the War Department and had the papers before them, and they found that there were some few cases, not exceeding altogether thirty or forty in the whole United States, that came within the provisions of this bill, and these were drafts that took place under the same form, but more than once within the year, and yet commutation was paid. There are a dozen cases or more, perhaps, in the district represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KOONTZ.] There are more cases in two or three districts in Pennsylvania than in all the rest of the country, and it would not take a large sum to pay back all this money admitted to have been wrongfully paid over to the United States. I speak advisedly, for the committee had the facts all before them, with full reports and explanations from the Provost Marshal General's office. I move, therefore, to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, that it may be considered in the House at the present time.

Mr. WARD. If I can be permitted to move the reference of the bill to the Committee of Claims, I will not object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to the gentleman's making the motion, but I hope it will not prevail.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is just informed by the clerks that the bill, having been ordered to be printed, is now in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move, then, that the further consideration of the bill be postponed till to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now proceed to the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Judiciary Committee relative to the complicity of Jefferson Davis in the assassination of President Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The clerks state that the resolutions, with the report of the committee, are at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I must withdraw my motion.

G. C. BESTOR AND G. W. M'CORD.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following joint resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to organize a board of not less than three persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels-of-war and steam machinery Shiloh, built by George C. Bestor, and Ellah, built by Charles W. McCord, at St. Louis, Missouri, in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, cost the contractors over and above the contract price, and allowances for extra work; and report the same to the House at its next session.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I insist on the regular order.

The House, agreeably to order, proceeded to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

DISTRICT COURT AT ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 62) entitled "An act directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania."

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out after the word "thereof," in line fourteen, the following:

And that, in addition to the compensation allowed by law to the said judge, he shall be paid the sum of $300 for his additional expenses and services.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SCOTFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 447) entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I wish to enter a motion to refer this bill, and I ask that it be reported in full.

The bill was read at length. It provides, in the first section, that the constitution and State government which the people of Nebraska have formed for themselves be accepted, ratified, and confirmed, and that the said State of Nebraska be declared to be one of the United States of America, and be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever. The second section declares that the State of Nebraska shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges, grants, and immunities, and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of an act providing for the admission of the State, approved April 19, 1864.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I wish to submit a brief explanation in reference to this bill, and I will premise by expressing my regret that a measure of such importance as this should come before us at this very late period of the session, when it cannot be considered by the appropriate committee of this House, and when we shall be obliged to dispose of it without that consideration which the magnitude of the subject renders desirable. It will be recollected by members of the House that in April, 1864, the Congress of the United States passed an enabling act, in the usual form, authorizing the people of Nebraska to form a State government. A convention was called and assembled, but it adjourned without taking any action upon the constitution. Afterward the Legislature met and formed a constitution, which was submitted to the people and ratified by their votes. This, in brief, is the state of the facts.

Now, sir, I learn from information in which I place full confidence that the Territory of Nebraska contains to-day sixty thousand inhabitants. We all know that it has a very desirable climate and a rich soil, capable of supporting a very large population; that the Pacific railroad is being built through the Territory; and that the tide of emigration is flowing there with great rapidity. It will very soon be absolutely requisite that the Territory shall have a State government. Inasmuch, then, as Congress has already invited her to come into the Union, and as she has substantially complied with all the requirements we have imposed upon her, I think that in good faith she should be permitted now to enter the Union with the constitution which her people have ratified. I concede that the constitution which she presents is not in form such as I would desire it to be; and but for the fact that we have invited her to come in with such a constitution as she has formed, I would vote against her admission to-day. This constitution contains a provision excluding the colored people of the Territory from the exercise of the right of suffrage. I think the time has gone by when the Congress of the United States should give its countenance to a feature so anti-republican as that. Although, as I understand, Nebraska contains to-day not more than one hundred colored people, those one hundred are entitled to all the rights of citizens and to equality with the whites before the law. But I desire members of the House to bear in mind that this objectionable feature—for objectionable it must be to every gentleman on this side of the House—was permitted by the original enabling act; that the people of Nebraska have done all that we required them to do in this respect—

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. When did the people of Nebraska form their constitution?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. In February last.

Mr. STEVENS. That was long after we had decided the question about suffrage.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I regret exceedingly that the people of Nebraska have not advanced to the position that they will not discriminate against any people on account of race or color. But I believe that, in consideration of the condition of the Territory at the present time; in consideration of the fact that it at present stands greatly in need of suitable public buildings for the purposes of government; in view of the fact that the last Congress refused to do in this respect for the Territory what I think justice required, I believe that we should now admit the Territory into the Union. Sir, I believe in the policy of admitting new States as fast as they can be properly formed, and as soon as the people are in a condition to govern themselves.

Mr. BROMWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the United States has ever suffered any injury from the admission of a Territory too soon, or whether that is likely ever to occur.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I think that injury may come to the people of a Territory by not permitting them to come into the Union at the proper time. I believe that when we deny to the people of a Territory the means of enforcing its laws and protecting its citizens we ought to concede to them a State government, so that they may have the means of doing this for themselves. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will hear the amendment read.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment I send to his desk, and which I desire to offer to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the people of Nebraska having formed for themselves a State government, which, except in the fact that it excludes a portion of the citizens from the enjoyment of political rights on account of race or color, is republican in form, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, on the receipt of due proof that the people of Nebraska have so modified their State constitution as to admit all the male citizens thereof over twenty-one years of age, except Indians untaxed, and unnaturalized foreigners, to equal rights of suffrage, to issue his proclamation declaring that such State of Nebraska shall be thenceforward entitled to all the rights and immunities, and subject to all the conditions and restrictions of an act to enable the people of Nebraska to form a constitution of State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, approved April 19, 1864.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I must decline to withdraw my motion to recommit to receive this amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Permit me to make a remark or two. I proposed to offer this amendment in order that the constitution of Nebraska might be brought into harmony with the established policy of this Congress. We are now at the close of the session. I would suggest that if this bill be referred to the Committee on Territories or to the Judiciary Committee the people of Nebraska can come here at the next session with a constitution in harmony with the policy of this Congress in regard to the Territories, in harmony with the sublime doctrine to which this Congress has committed itself, that all men, not being aliens or Indians untaxed in the Territories, shall enjoy equal political rights and can then be admitted as a State. No harm can come to the people of Nebraska if they are not admitted for the next four months; no great advantages can accrue from having them admitted now. And if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] will permit no amendment, and will consent to no motion to refer, I hope the bill will be voted down.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I believe if I should entertain the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] it would be the means of killing this bill. I must therefore decline to withdraw the motion to recommit for that purpose. But I now withdraw the motion to recommit and call the previous question.

Mr. BERGEN called for tellers upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BERGEN, and Mr. RICE of Maine, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 59, noes 51.

So the call for the previous question was seconded.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 62, nays 52, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Delos B. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Defrees, Delano, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Hart, Hayes, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Meaur, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Plants, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stokes, John L. Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, and Stephen F. Wilson—62.

YAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Baxter, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Cook, Cooper, Driggs, Eldridge Eliot, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—72.

So the main question was ordered.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to state that Mr. TROWBRIDGE is compelled to be absent from the Hall in the discharge of his duties upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The bill was then read a third time.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 62, nays 52, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, DeFrees, Delano, Dumont, Ekeley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Hart, Hayes, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—72.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WARD B. BURNETT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 418) entitled "An act for the relief of Ward B. Burnett;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that there be paid to Ward

B. Burnett $540, being the balance of a pension to which he was entitled, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from March 4, 1863, to March 4, 1866, and which was improperly retained from him.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of the customs, and for other purposes.

ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next and last business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. No. 142) respecting the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. By the first section it is provided that all laws and parts of laws enacted since the 4th day of July, 1861, increasing, reorganizing, or creating regiments, staff corps, or other organizations of the regular Army, or in any way affecting the number, rank, pay, or emoluments of the general, field, staff, and line officers, and enlisted men of the same, be declared to be in full force and effect, and so to remain until otherwise provided by law.

The second section provides that there shall be added to the Army four regiments of cavalry, two of which shall be composed of colored men, having the same organization as is now provided by law for cavalry regiments, and the original vacancies in the grades of first and second lieutenant shall be filled by selection from among the officers and soldiers of volunteers; and two thirds of the original vacancies in each of the grades above that of first lieutenant shall be filled by selection from among the officers of volunteers; and one third from officers of the regular Army; all of whom shall have served two years in the field during the war, and have been distinguished for capacity and good conduct. The President is authorized to enlist and employ in the Territories and Indian country a force of Indians, not to exceed one thousand, to act as scouts, who are to receive the pay and allowances of cavalry soldiers, and to be discharged whenever the necessity for their further employment is abated, or at the discretion of the department commanders.

The third section proposes to repeal the third section of an act approved February 20, 1863, authorizing the appointment of a solicitor to the War Department. It also provides that the Provost Marshal General's office and bureau shall be continued only so long as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days after the passage of this resolution.

The fourth section provides that the third section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1866," shall continue in force for one year from the passage of this joint resolution, provided that no officer furnished with quarters in kind shall be entitled to receive the increased commutation of rations authorized by the resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to move that this joint resolution be laid on the table. I will merely state that it is the means adopted by the Senate to get around refusing to agree to a bill which would favor the volunteers. This is designed to make provision for the gentlemen already in office, and it affirms a vast amount of legislation for their benefit. I do not propose to discuss the matter at all. Another committee of conference has been appointed, and, I understand, has agreed upon an Army bill. This is to avoid the enactment of an Army bill, which, I think, the Senate really does not want, unless it happen to be of a kind that suits it and is not agreeable to the wishes of the House. Before making the motion to lay this joint resolution on the table, I will yield to my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have, during the past two weeks, considered, from time to time, somewhat carefully, the condition of our Army; and there is one fact which I wish to state to the House for its consideration.

The proposition contained in the first section of this joint resolution is that all laws and parts of laws relating to the regular Army, which have been enacted since 1861, shall be continued in full force. Now, if that Army with its present organization is to be continued, I desire to call the attention of the House to some of the consequences. With the assistance of some gentlemen thoroughly acquainted with the roster of the Army, I have gone over the Army Register, classifying some of the officers whose names we find there. We have only noted such persons as are well known. As to a large number, we did not know in what class to put them. But there are in the regular Army of the United States fifty-two officers above the grade of captain, who have distinguished themselves in the field—officers known to me and to those who with me have looked over this list. There are also fifty-two who have seen only a little service; and there are forty-three who have never been in the field at all during the war—men now holding rank above the rank of captain. And below these there are sixteen men who during the war have won their stars as major generals on the field, and twenty-three who have won their stars as brigadier generals on the field; and under such legislation as is here proposed, these will go back into the service to be commanded by colonels and lieutenant colonels who never saw a hostile battalion, and who were never in the field at all. Why, sir, if the present Army organization were to continue, I could point out regular regiments of infantry now in our Army, the colonel of which, if he should call up the regiment for dress parade would call up before him as captains six major generals and brigadier generals. These would have to come up and salute the colonel as their superior officer.

Thus it will be seen that by the legislation proposed in this joint resolution these men who won on the battle-field their rank of general in the Army would be commanded by colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors who never smelt powder, nor were within the reach of hostile guns during the war. It appears to me, sir, that there is no duty more imperatively pressing upon Congress than that of reorganizing the Army, so as to do away with the abuses which must exist under our present laws and to make merit the rule of promotion and superiority. If the system now existing is to continue, we shall lose the very bone and muscle and sinew of our Army. Sir, there are now hundreds of men who have won distinction in the volunteer service, who are now desirous of entering our Army, and who would make it one of the most splendid armies that ever trod the earth; but if we pass no Army bill at this session, these men must wait for some months, and in all probability they will go into other business, so that hereafter there will be fewer men of a desirable class seeking to enter the service, and the old officers of the regular Army will have the field all to themselves.

Now, it appears to me that the whole policy and management of our legislation thus far has been to pass no Army bill, to authorize no reorganization of the Army until all the aspiring young men who have won distinction for themselves in the volunteer service have become disgusted with waiting and again entered into the other avocations of life, and for my own part I wish we would continue the session until next winter, so that we might get an Army organized in a thorough-going manner from the splendid material from which it is in our power now to select. I think there is not a man who has won distinction in the Army but is now appealing to Congress that he may be taken care of in the proposed reorganization. "The men who have never won distinction in the field of course have long since retired into civil life. I hope this bill may go to the table until we compel this Congress to do justice by the soldier and give us such an Army as we ought to have.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVIGATION OF NEWARK BAY, ETC.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to appoint a suitable officer, whose duty it shall be to proceed to Newark, in the State of New Jersey, and examine into the condition of the navigation of Newark bay and the navigation of the mouths of the Passaic and Hackensack rivers, and whether the same needs improvement, and report the result of such examination to this House on the first Monday in December next.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to suspend the rules.

The rules were suspended, and the resolution was accordingly received.

The House divided on the adoption of the resolution; and there were—ayes 46, noes 46.

The SPEAKER voted in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, ETC.

Mr. BROOMALL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Commerce be fixed at the same rate as that of the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands, to commence on the first day of the present session of Congress, December 4, 1865.

Mr. WARD. What is the amount?

Mr. BROOMALL. Eighteen hundred dollars a year.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object, unless it makes the compensation of the clerk to the Judiciary Committee the same.

Mr. BROOMALL. I have no objection to the amendment being considered as having been offered. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROSS moved that the resolution, as amended, be laid upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 20.

Mr. BROOMALL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BROOMALL and Mr. Ross were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 34.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

MECHANICAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution concerning the superintendence of the mechanical establishments of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. BANKS. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. ANCONA. I suggest there will be no objection if the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is an old question and is entitled to serious consideration.

Mr. BANKS. I withdraw my motion and move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution was received, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY (at one o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn without acting upon the reports of the committees of conference on the Army bill and the civil appropriation bills, those bills will probably be lost.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to say that we have already agreed upon a report from one of the conference committees; it is now being acted upon in the Senate, and will probably be here in five minutes.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. If we adjourn to meet at ten o'clock will that enable us to finish the business?

The SPEAKER. If any one of the conference reports should be voted down there would hardly be time for another before the time fixed for final adjournment.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 432, for the relief of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians.

Mr. CONKLING. I object.

Mr. ROSS. I move to suspend the rules.

The motion was disagreed to, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

COLUMBIA RIVER AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. There is a bill pending in the House (House bill No. 679) to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Columbia river to Salt Lake. The member from Oregon [Mr. HENDERSON] made a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was recommitted. I now call up that motion on his behalf.

The SPEAKER. This bill was recommitted on the 19th of June to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and a motion to reconsider was entered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HENDERSON] the next day. Any gentleman can call it up.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The gentleman from Oregon requested me to take charge of the bill and ask the attention of the House to it at the earliest practicable moment. I move that the rule be suspended which requires the bill to be read.

The SPEAKER. It is rather a novel motion, and yet that rule can be suspended by a two-thirds vote.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rule, there were—ayes 69, noes 30.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the rule was suspended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 70, noes 25.

CLERK IN THE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. WINFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. WINFIELD. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the following:

Resolved, That the compensation of T. M. Kelling, clerk in the folding-room, be made equal to that of the book-keeper in the folding-room, to commence with the present Congress, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the rules are suspended will the gentleman permit me to offer the following?

Resolved, That the pages of this House be put on the same footing as to compensation as members of the Cabinet.

[Laughter.]

The motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

STEAMER KEARSARGE.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, asked unanimous consent to consider a bill to compensate the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge for the destruction of the rebel piratical vessel Alabama.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to suspend the rules.

The motion was disagreed to; two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

MINERAL WATERS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCULLOUGH, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 265, to protect the manufacture of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is to protect a trademark, and I hope it will pass.

The motion to suspend the rules was disagreed to—ayes 45, noes 49.

SOLDIERS' INCOME TAX.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, House joint resolution No. 155, to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States, who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of a special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby.

No objection being made the bill was taken up and read.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 791, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to provide for the payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military service;

An act (H. R. No. 32) to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit court of the United States;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Territory of Colorado for the militia of said Territory employed in the service of the United States in the years 1864 and 1865;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians;

An act (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Dr. Alexander Dunbar;

An act (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgen;

An act (H. R. No. 797) granting a pension to Daniel Lucas;

An act (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May;

An act (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Marion M. Buxton;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) to extend the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, to loyal citizens of Tennessee; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 204) to reimburse Mrs. Mary Phelps, of Missouri.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the deficiency bill, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 791) being an act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered six, eight, eleven, twenty, twenty-one, and thirty, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered sixteen and twenty-six.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered seventeen and agree to the same with amendments as follows: insert in the second line of said amendment after the word "expenses" the word "actually;" and in the sixth and seventh lines of said amendment strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-seventh amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: strike out all after the word "dollars" in line four to the end of the section.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered twenty-eight, and agree to the same.

W. P. FESSENDEN,

J. B. HENDERSON,

C. B. BUCKALEV,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. KASSON,

H. J. RAYMOND,

S. J. RANDALL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I would like to inquire whether there is in this report anything which increases our own pay or withholds bounties from the soldiers.

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; it has no relation to either of those subjects. The only two important items, so far as I remember, were two amendments of the Senate, disagreed to by the House, one appropriating $40,000 in satisfaction of old war claims in Oregon; the other appropriating some two hundred and thirty thousand dollars for the pay of the marshals and other persons engaged in taking the census in the southern States, the accounts for which have been adjusted, and which the Senate proposed should be paid so far as the claimants might show themselves to be loyal. The House having disagreed to both those amendments, the Senate has receded. I know of no other important amendment.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORED SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 247) entitled "An act donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia."

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time. It proposes to authorize and require the Commissioner of Public Buildings to grant and convey to the trustees of colored schools for the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, for the sole use of the colored children in the District, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lots numbered one, two, and eighteen, in square nine hundred and eighty-five, in the city of Washington, the lots having been designated and set apart by the Secretary of the Interior to be used for colored schools. Whenever the lots shall be converted to other uses they are to revert to the United States.

Mr. RADFORD. What is the size of these lots?

Mr. INGERSOLL. They are ordinary sized lots.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAUL S. FORBES.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for consideration at the present time, joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) for the relief of Paul S. Forbes under his contract with the Navy Department for building and furnishing the steam screw sloop-of-war Idaho.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to suspend the rules that I may report the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

ELECTION OF INTERNAL REVENUE OFFICERS.

Mr. BROOMALL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting an amendment to the Constitution of the United States permitting Congress to provide by law for the election of assessors and collectors of internal revenue by the people.

Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. STROUSE, and others objected.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to suspend the rules to allow the introduction of the resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. PERHAM. I ask unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Invalid Pensions the bill introduced by myself in reference to the soldiers of the war of 1812.

Mr. ALLEY. I object.

Mr. PERHAM. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to suspend the rules.

APPOINTMENT OF CABINET MINISTERS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent of the House to submit the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the Constitution of the United States makes it the sworn duty of the President to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; and whereas this duty cannot be performed by him in person, but by officers appointed for that purpose, for the faithful performance of whose duties he is justly responsible: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the right of the President, as the chief Executive of the nation, to have for his Cabinet ministers such persons only as may command his confidence; and that it is also equally his right to commit the execution of the laws to such persons under him as he may deem most suitable and efficient for the performance of their respective duties.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is the word cotton in the resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; or wool either. I move to suspend the rules in order that I may introduce the proposition.

The House divided; and there were—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

MISS CLARA BARTON.

Mr. WARD. I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the franking privilege be conferred upon Miss Clara Barton, for the period of two years from the date of the passage of this resolution.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I object.

Mr. WARD. I move to suspend the rules. The rules were not suspended.

FIREMAN.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have a resolution I desire to offer. While almost all of the employes of this Capitol have had their compensation increased, growing out of the changed condition of affairs in the country, the fireman under the old Hall of the House of Representatives has been left out in the cold. [Laughter.] I ask that we shall warm him as well as the others; and I hope there will be no objection to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the fireman employed under the old Hall of the House of Representatives shall be entitled to the same increase of pay that has been allowed to the other employes of this House.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is he paid out of the contingent fund?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes he will be paid if there is contingent fund enough.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by adding the following:

That all increase of compensation allowed to the employes of the House during this session of Congress be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

The SPEAKER. That is not germane to the pending resolution.

Mr. WRIGHT demanded the previous question.

Mr. ROSS moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. WRIGHT and Mr. ROSS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the tellers be allowed to employ clerks, for neither one of them can count a hundred. [Great laughter.]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 65. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is a quorum.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

TAX ON BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution that the tax imposed upon notes of State banks or State banking institutions, by the act entitled "An act to amend an act to provide internal revenue," approved March 3, 1865, shall be suspended for one year.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Has the morning hour commenced.

The SPEAKER. It has, and reports are now in order of a private nature, commencing with the Committee on Patents.

BERRY AND HIGGINS.

Mr. RICE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back House bill No. 108, for the relief of Berry & Higgins, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. It has been already thoroughly investigated. It relates to the construction of the Patent Office building, and refers the whole subject for adjustment to the Secretary of the Interior. The facts are that after the contract was made a portico was added to the former plan, so that it became much more expensive. And these gentlemen, in consequence of the failure in 1861 of the appropriation to continue the work on this building, were subjected to a very great expense afterward in reopening the quarries that had become filled up and replacing machinery that had become injured or destroyed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I cannot tell; but the whole matter is referred to the Secretary of the Interior. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from Mr. Walter, the architect of the building.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 18, 1866.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, in which you desire me to communicate to you the circumstances under which Messrs. Berry & Higgins recommenced work in 1864 on the north wing of the Patent Office building; and what was said as to the prices they should be paid for the marble and granite; also whether I understood the work upon the portico of this wing to be included in the original contract, and whether the contract price was, in my judgment, a fair compensation, taking into consideration the high price of labor, &c.

In reply to these interrogatories, I have to state that the original contract for the marble and the marble-work of the north wing of the Patent Office building was made with Mr. John F. Connelly on the 1st day of April, 1857, and that it was not contemplated at that time to erect any portico at all on the north front. This is manifest by the omission of any allusion in the contract to such an appendage, as well as by the fact that Congress did not authorize it until long after the contract in question was made. These facts settle the question most decidedly that the north portico was not included in the original agreement.

On the 16th day of December, 1861, Mr. Connelly transferred his contract, by legal and proper documents, and with the official sanction of the Government, by the Secretary of the Interior, to Messrs. Berry & Higgins. Copies of this transfer with all the documents, including the original contract, are on file in the Department.

No progress having been made on the aforesaid north portico at the breaking out of the rebellion, the work was suspended until the 26th day of August, 1864, when, in pursuance of orders from the Secretary of the Interior, I directed the aforesaid contractors, Messrs. Berry & Higgins, to proceed with the work. On the receipt of this order they called upon me and stated, very emphatically, that they could not execute the north portico at the prices paid to Provost, Winton & Co. for the east and west porticoes, the details of which, it was understood, were to govern the architecture of that on the north. The reasons they gave for the conclusions they had thus arrived at were, that the quarries were abandoned and filled with mud and water; the railways, hoisting apparatus, and machinery were destroyed; that everything would have to be commenced anew, and that a fearful rise had taken place in the prices of labor, machinery, and transportation. I told them that inasmuch as the north portico formed no part of their agreement, they would not be held to the prices paid in former times on the eastern and western porticoes, and I urged upon them the necessity of reopening the quarries without delay, and of proceeding vigorously with the work, at the same time stating to them that the facts of the case would warrant me, as the superintendent of the building, in awarding them a fair and equitable compensation for their labor. In all these suggestions I had the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, and we felt not only assured that this was the best arrangement we could make under the circumstances, but we considered ourselves fortunate in inducing contractors of so much ability and energy as Messrs. Berry & Higgins to undertake to reopen these quarries, put up the necessary machinery, and deliver the stone at such prices as we might subsequently decide, on the part of the Government, were right and proper. And I now have to say that, in view of all the knowledge that the subsequent progress of the work has developed, I am of the opinion that the cost of the material for the north portico is fully double of that which was delivered for the east and west porticoes, and were it left to me to decide I would award them one hundred per cent. advance on the prices of the aforesaid porticoes, the erection of which took place many years ago, and at a time when the quarries were in full operation, and quarry labor and expenses were one hundred per cent. less than they now are.

As it regards the workmanship of the aforesaid north portico, I am of the opinion that the same schedule of prices should prevail as governed the payments on the east and west porticoes, with the addition of sixty per cent. to all the items, that being the average increase in the prices of the labor of marble-masons since the aforesaid eastern and western porticoes were erected. This would have been my award had the power of fixing these prices remained with me.

In most cases, where a contract is entered into for a certain work, the contractor takes the risk of a rise or a fall of prices, but in the present instance there is no contract to which the contractors may be held, so far, at least, as it regards the portico in question. It therefore devolves upon the Government to mete out justice, which can best be done by adding to prices formerly paid for similar work and materials whatever advance a general change of values may have made apparent.

These remarks and conclusions apply as well to the granite and the granite-work of the aforesaid north portico as they do to the marble, excepting only that the cost of procuring the granite was not enhanced beyond the ordinary rise in the cost of quarrying and transportation. I am therefore of the opinion that an addition of sixty per cent. to the prices paid for the granite and the granite-work of the east and west porticoes would form a proper schedule of prices for the northern portico.

I have the honor to remain, sir, very respectfully, yours,
THOMAS U. WALTER,
Late Architect United States Capitol Extension, &c.
Hon. JOHN H. RICE, Chairman of Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, House of Representatives.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I also have a letter here from the former Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Usher, in which he concurs fully in the facts stated here, that a new contract was in fact entered into by which they were to have fair compensation allowed them for these additional services; and the present architect of the public buildings, Mr. Clark, concurs in the same opinion. This whole matter is to be left to the Secretary of the Interior for adjustment. I understand the present Secretary of the Interior has resigned; I do not know who may be the next Secretary of the Interior. But with Mr. Harlan I should certainly have felt the fullest confidence that the whole matter would have been adjusted on principles of right and equity.

Mr. PRICE. I would inquire if this bill provides for an examination merely, or for settlement and payment of the claim.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. For a settlement by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to amend by making it that the Secretary of the Interior shall examine and report to Congress at its next session.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I prefer not to do that.

Mr. DELANO. I desire to know of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] whether he himself has examined this question, and whether from that examination he is prepared to recommend the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The committee of which I am a member have carefully examined the matter, and unanimously recommend the passage of this joint resolution. In addition to the quarries becoming filled with water, and the engines and railways becoming decayed, there was held back by the contract some twelve thousand dollars as security. Therefore they felt that they could not abandon their contract, as they would have liked to do in consequence of the increase of the labor. The former Secretary of the Interior made a new contract for the marble-work for the Capitol extension, without any direct authority of law, for an amount very much larger than it is proposed to pay to these gentlemen.

Mr. PRICE. I must object to this joint resolution because it opens the door without any kind of restriction; and when we come back here at the next session we may discover that many thousands of dollars have been paid out for which no person is responsible.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] states that the committee of which he is the chairman have thoroughly investigated this matter, I would ask him how much these persons claim of the Government.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. They claim sixty per cent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How much is that?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. We cannot tell, for the work is still going on.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Have these parties never stated the aggregate amount of their claim?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. They have not, for it is impossible for them to state it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is this increase of sixty per cent. to run through the entire contract until the work is completed?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. That is to be left to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am not willing to leave that to the Secretary of the Interior or to any other officer of the Government.

Mr. DELANO. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] will allow me, I will say that I am satisfied this claim needs a more thorough examination and a more mature deliberation than it is possible for this House to give it tonight. I am sure, from what I have heard and know of the case, that if we act upon it to-night we will be doing injustice to the Government. And with the permission of the gentleman from Maine I will move to refer this joint resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. I think it is due to ourselves that a question involving so much money should have some examination. It is now nearly three o'clock in the morning, and we should not be called upon to vote for a claim which will take we do not know how much money out of the Treasury.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I will yield to allow that motion to be made, although I think it is doing great injustice to these parties. And I do not see why a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should not be received with as much respect as reports from other committees.

Mr. PRICE. I do not desire to treat the committee with any disrespect. But the chairman of the committee cannot state how much money this is to take, and therefore I am not now prepared to vote upon it.

Mr. DELANO. I now move that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY S. DAVIS.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill for the relief of Henry S. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLISHING LAWS OF DAKOTA.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Territories a bill to provide for the publication of the laws of Dakota Territory.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the secretary of the Territory of Dakota to expend a sum of money not exceeding $3,000 out of the amount now on hand and saved out of the appropriations heretofore made for the support of the government in said Territory, for the purpose of publishing the laws enacted at the last session of the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Let me say a word of explanation. This bill does not ask for the appropriation of a dollar of the public money. The Legislature of Dakota passed a joint resolution asking to be allowed to expend a sum of money for this purpose that has been saved out of moneys heretofore appropriated. A bill for this purpose was drawn up and referred to a committee, but the member of the committee who was put in charge of it went away and the bill could not be found. I drew up another bill, which was referred to the Committee on Territories, who acted favorably upon it; but a member of the committee has carried that bill away with him. I have now drawn up another bill, providing that the secretary of the Territory may be allowed to expend a sum not exceeding $3,000, of money that has been saved out of appropriations heretofore made, for the purpose of publishing the new code, for the New York code, which was adopted by the Legislature of Dakota last winter.

Mr. CONKLING. I have this suggestion to make to the gentleman from Dakota, [Mr. BURLEIGH:] we are constantly improving our code in New York, and it will be a great deal better and more valuable next winter than it is now.

Mr. BURLEIGH. But the Legislature has already adopted the code.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object to the introduction of this bill.

OREGON AND WASHINGTON WAR CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. DELANO, the Committee of Claims were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of citizens of Washington Territory in relation to Oregon and Washington Territory war claims.

GEORGE W. LANE.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief George W. Lane; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TIMOTHY LEYDEN.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Timothy Leyden; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JOHNSON A. DAWSON.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, also reported a bill for the relief of Johnson A. Dawson, of Mount Sterling, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BLANCHARD.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, also reported a bill for the relief of Edward Blanchard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY RUDD.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that this is an appropriation bill, and must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. This is an appropriation bill.

Mr. DELANO. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will withdraw that point. This is a very meritorious claim.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will waive the point for the present and permit the bill to be read.

The bill was read. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to Henry Rudd, of Henry county, Iowa, $9,150, in full for all losses and compensation to him for horses purchased and delivered under a contract with the Government.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I insist on my point of order. This is not the time to pass bills for the relief of contractors.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and ordered to be printed.

NORMAN HALL.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 463) entitled "An act for the relief of Norman Hall;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 43) to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians;

An act (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union; and

An act (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

GOLDSMITH BROTHERS.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Goldsmith brothers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABBY GREEN.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported back a joint resolution (S. R. No. 112) for the relief of Mrs. Abby Green; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 666) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase certain property for military purposes;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SENATE DEBATES, FIRST CONGRESS.

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on the Library, submitted an adverse report upon a resolution relative to purchasing copies of a proposed publication of debates in the first Senate of the United States, from a journal of Hon. William Maclay; which was laid on the table.

RAILROADS AND TELEGRAPHS IN KANSAS.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill (S. No. 320) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphs in said State,' approved March 3, 1863;" which was ordered to be laid upon the Speaker's table till the next session.

UNITED STATES FENCING, ETC., COMPANY.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, a bill (H. R. No. 735) entitled "An act to incorporate the United States Fencing, Ditching, Draining, and Land-Reclaiming Company. The bill was read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on the civil appropriation bill.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS submitted the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 16, 19, 22, 33, 48, 49, and 55, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered 4, 14, 15, 17, 24, 25, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the ninth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their amendment to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their amendment to the fifty-second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: at the end of said amendment add the following: "And provided further, That the pay of the Speaker shall be $8,000 per annum."

That the House recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out the words following: "for the continuation of the work on the north portion of the Patent Office building, $50,000;" and also recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out as follows: on page 7, line eight, from the word "for" down to and including the word "dollars" in line fourteen, with an amendment as follows: in said last clause strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same, and also to so much of the amendment of the House to the said twenty-second amendment as proposes to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line two, on page 7, down to and including the word "necessary," in line eight on the same page.

That the House recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment numbered fifty-four, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: in line two, after the word "clerks," insert "committee clerks;" in line three, after the words "messengers and," insert "all;" in same line, after the word "Senate," insert "and House of Representatives, and to the Globe and official reporters of each House, and the stenographer of the House, and to the Capitol police, and the three superintendents of public gardens and their clerks and assistants."

JOSEPH STEWART,
W. FESSENDEN,
REVERDY JOHNSON,
THADDEUS STEVENS,
F. C. LE BLOND,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It will be observed that my name is not attached to that report. I declined to sign it, and I wish briefly to assign the reasons why I refused to do so. In the first place, the committee refused to agree to any equalization of the bounties of the soldiers; and in the second place, it retained the provision in relation to the increase of the pay of Senators and members of the House of Representatives. I was opposed to retaining that provision and in favor of some arrangement by which the bounty question should be settled during this session of Congress. It was for this reason I refused to sign the report, and I hope that it will not be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I will be as brief as the gentleman from Iowa. The committee found itself with a large bill embracing appropriations for many millions. It was found from the unequivocal declarations of Senators, as my friend will admit, that the Senate would not possibly agree to any bounty bill. In this the gentleman will bear me out.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That was the position taken by the conference on the part of the Senate. I desire to test the sense of the House on the report, and that the House should declare some provision should be embodied for the equalization of bounties.

Mr. STEVENS. They gave us distinctly to understand that had been tried over and over again in the Senate, and they feared if it were retained in the bill, the bill must fail. We did not think it was our duty to let the bill fail. Now, with regard to the other item. It was introduced by the Senate. It reduces the mileage from forty cents to twenty cents a mile. We found upon calculation that the present bill slightly increases the aggregate amount. We believed that none of us were overpaid, and that the loss to our constituents would be very small. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The House divided on ordering the main question; and there were—ayes fifty-four, noes not counted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. STEVENS, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 20.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 14, nays 101, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bergen, Cooper, Harris, Hogan, Jencks, Johnson, Latham, Le Blond, Lettwich, Moorhead, Nicholson, Spalding, Stevens, and Strouse—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Defrees, Delano, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Koonz, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, McCullough, Mercer, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernum, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Wright—101.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Longyear, Marvin, Maynard, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Moulton, Noell, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—71.

So the report was rejected.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the House disagreed to the report of the conference committee; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate's amendments, and ask for another committee of conference.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it not in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to lay it on the table; and on that I call the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 12, nays 96, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Eldridge, Harris, Hogan, Johnson, LeBlond, Leftwich, Niblack, Nicholson, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, and Trimble—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Cobb, Conkling, Cooper, Culom, Defrees, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Koonz, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernum, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—96.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Humphreys, Jones, Kelso, Longyear, Marvin, Maynard, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Moulton, Noell, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stilwell, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—68.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to offer some instructions to the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will hear the proposition.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move the following instructions:

That the committee be instructed to insist upon a provision which shall secure $100 additional bounty to those soldiers who served during the first years of the war long enough to entitle them to the $100 bounty under the laws and orders then existing.

Mr. GARFIELD. While I think that is very proper, I am sure the Senate would not enter into any conference if the committee of the House should go there trammelled by any instructions. There have been repeated refusals to go into a conference on the ground that it would not be a free conference where one of the parties was hampered by instructions.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. During my recollection this practice has prevailed to a considerable extent. I have known several instances of it.

The SPEAKER. The Senate made the point at the last Congress that it was not a free conference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot yield to allow that.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion that the House insist and ask for another committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the new committee of conference, Messrs. WILSON of Iowa, BANKS, and NIBLACK.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Army bill, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses of Congress upon the amendment of the Senate to the substitute of the House to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely:

Section one, line three, strike out "twelve" and insert "ten."

Section three, line three, strike out "six" and "three" and insert "four" and "two;" line seventeen strike out "four of the companies from each regiment" and insert "any portion of the cavalry force."

Section four, line seven, strike out "five" and insert "four;" line eight, after the word "men," insert "and four regiments, of ten companies each, to be raised and officered as hereinafter provided for, to be called the Veteran Reserve corps." At the end of section four insert: "The Veteran Reserve corps shall be officered by appointment from any officers and soldiers of volunteers, or of the regular Army, who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States in the late war, and who may yet be competent for garrison or other duty, to which that corps has heretofore been assigned."

Section six, line three, strike out "two" and insert "one;" lines four and five strike out "one regimental company."

Insert at the end of section eight: "It shall be competent to enlist men for the service who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States, provided it shall be found on medical inspection that by such wounds they are not unfitted for garrison or other light duty; and such men when enlisted shall be assigned to service exclusively in the regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps." In the same section, after the word "years," in line three, insert "for cavalry, and three years for artillery and infantry."

Section seven, strike out all to the word "academy," inclusive, in line four, and in lieu thereof insert: "that fifteen bands, including the band at the Military Academy, may be retained or enlisted in the Army, with such organization as is now provided by law, to be assigned to brigades in time of war, and in time of peace to assembled brigades or to forts or posts at which the largest number of troops shall be ordinarily stationed; and the band at the Military Academy shall be placed on the same footing as other bands."

Section fourteen, line five, strike out "cavalry" and insert "infantry."

At the end of section thirteen insert: "but after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section, as vacancies may occur in the grades of major and captain in this department, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of majors shall be reduced to twelve and the number of captains to thirty; and thereafter the number of officers in each of said grades shall continue to conform to said reduced numbers."

Section seventeen, strike out all to the word "cavalry," in line sixteen, and in lieu thereof insert: "that the medical department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; one assistant surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry; one chief medical purveyor and four assistant medical purveyors, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels of cavalry, who shall give the same bonds which are or may be required of assistant paymasters general of like grade, and shall, when not acting as purveyors, be assignable to duty as surgeons by the President; sixty surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors of cavalry; one hundred and fifty assistant surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of first lieutenants of cavalry, for the first three years' service, and with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry after three years' service; and five medical store-keepers, with the same compensation as is now provided by law; and all the original vacancies in the grade of assistant surgeon shall be filled by selection by examination from among the persons who have served as staff or regimental surgeons or assistant surgeons of volunteers in the Army of the United States two years during the late war; and persons who have served as assistant surgeons three years in the volunteer service shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain."

Section twenty-one, line nine, strike out "sixteen" and insert "thirteen."

Section twenty-four, strike out all after the word "act," in line sixteen, and insert, "shall be entitled in case of passing the examination, and being appointed or commissioned, to receive mileage from the place of his residence to the place of examination, or such portion of that distance as he may actually travel, the same as is paid to officers traveling under orders, but there shall be paid no other compensation."

Section twenty-seven, line seven, strike out "and directed" and "non-," line eight, strike out "other."

Section twenty-eight, after the word "States," in line six, insert "or of either of the States in insurrection."

At the end of section twenty-nine insert, "and officers of the regular Army who have also held commissions as officers of volunteers, or commanded volunteers, shall not on that account be held to be volunteers under the provisions of this act."

At the end of section thirty-five insert, "Provided, That no officer who is furnished with quarters in kind shall be entitled to receive the increased commutation of rations hereby authorized."

Section thirty-six, strike out all after the word "that," in the first line, to the word "and," inclusive, in the sixth line. In line nine, strike out "are" and insert "is."

Insert as a new section, No. 37: "that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared, and to report to Congress at its next session, a code of regulations for the government of the Army and of the militia in actual service, which shall embrace all necessary orders and forms of a general character for the performance of all duties incumbent upon officers and men in the military service, including rules for the government of courts-martial; the existing regulations to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on said report."

HENRY WILSON,

IRA HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. F. FARNSWORTH,

NELSON TAYLOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will explain this matter if members will give me their attention. With two or three exceptions this is the House bill substantially. The bill as reported by the committee of conference provides for forty-five regiments of infantry, ten regiments of cavalry, and five of artillery, making in all sixty regiments for the military establishment. The forty-five regiments of infantry are composed of ten old regiments with their present organization, twenty-seven regiments to be formed from the battalions now existing by adding two new companies to each battalion, four colored regiments and four Veteran Reserve regiments. One principal ground of contest between us and the Senate has been with reference to the Veteran Reserve corps. The House bill provided for ten Veteran Reserve regiments; the Senate bill for none. The Senate was very loath to concede anything in this regard. All I can say is, the best we could do was to get the committee on the part of the Senate to join with us in recommending four regiments of Veteran Reserves. The House bill provides for five regiments of colored troops; we have cut it down to four. The Senate bill provided for twelve regiments of cavalry; six now being in existence and six to be raised, three of the latter to be colored, and three white. We have come down to ten regiments of cavalry, four new ones to be raised, two of which are to be colored, with the provision that any portion of the cavalry force may be drilled, armed, and equipped as foot soldiers, at the discretion of the President. With reference to the officers of the Veteran Reserve corps they are placed on the same footing as other disabled officers, no better, no worse. In officering these four regiments other disabled officers of other regiments stand on the same footing with them and have the same chance of being appointed. The officers of colored troops are declared by this bill to be officers of volunteers so as to place them on an equal footing with other officers. The Senate concurred in the House provision in reference to the organization of the medical and quartermaster's departments. The House bill provided that enlistments should be for three years; the Senate for five. I should have been very glad myself if the House had provided differently. I prefer that the enlistments should be for five years; I think three years is entirely too short a time. But in deference to the expressed wish of the House we insisted upon that provision being retained, compromising, however, with the Senate by providing that recruits for the cavalry regiments should be enlisted for five years. It is much easier to obtain recruits for cavalry service than for infantry and artillery; and it is much more important that they should be enlisted for a longer period in order that the men should be thoroughly drilled and fitted for service. The Senate bill provided that each regiment should be entitled to a band of music; the House bill provided that only fifteen bands should be allowed in the whole military establishment, and the Senate conceded that to us. I believe these are the only points that the House will take any interest in.

I will only say, in conclusion, that this was the very best we could do, and, under the circumstances, the committee on the part of the House thought it best to recommend the passage of the bill. It is very important that a bill should be passed. It is recommended and strongly insisted upon by General Grant, and by all the officers of the Army. I am satisfied if this is not adopted we shall lose the Army bill. I think it is a very fair bill. We retain the provision in reference to officering the new regiments, by which all the vacancies below the grade of captain are to be filled by officers and men who have served with the volunteers. Under the law as it now exists with reference to the Veteran Reserve corps, a man who has been disabled by wounds may be appointed an officer of a regular regiment. An officer who has lost an arm—as many of our most worthy officers have, who are still in the service—may still, under the present law, be appointed to a command in any regiment of the regular service. So that the necessity for enlarging the volunteer corps on that account is not so great. The argument on the part of the Senate against the Veteran Reserve corps is this: that we shall get into the service a large number of officers who are incapacitated bodily for the performance of efficient service, and who will be, in consequence, retired in a short time; that under the law as it now exists they will be placed upon the retired list, with large pay. There is considerable force in this argument.

But, sir, I will not occupy the time of the House. Unless some gentleman desires to say something on the subject I will call the previous question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is any change in this bill in regard to the maximum number of companies.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. No, sir; that remains the same.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in all candor, that the result of this conference is better than I expected. The gentleman who has made the report has certainly stated fairly the fact that in most of the details of the bill the views of the House prevail, and that in various sections following that which provides for the aggregate force of the Army, the bill corresponds in a good degree, and indeed I might say almost exactly, with the bill which this morning my colleague upon the committee [Mr. PAINE] and myself desired to submit to the House as a compromise.

The only point as to which there has been a material difference between the two Houses, and in regard to which the House, by this report, has made a considerable concession to the Senate, is with reference to the Veteran Reserve corps. As gentlemen of the House are aware, the House has shown throughout a determination to insist upon some provision for wounded officers and men who are still capable of military duty. Hence, on each occasion when we have adopted a bill, we have provided for ten regiments, to be called the Veteran Reserve corps, to be made up of wounded or disabled men from all branches of the service, and to be officered by wounded or disabled officers. By this compromise the Veteran Reserve corps is cut down to four regiments. But then it must be remembered that while we give up four regiments of colored infantry, we gain, upon the last bill passed by the House, two regiments of colored cavalry. Two out of the four regiments of cavalry are to be colored.

There is another material concession to the Senate in allowing the conversion of the present nine large regiments of infantry, organized at the beginning of the war, into thirty-seven regiments, by adding two companies to each battalion. It is for the House to determine whether these changes are so material as to warrant the rejection of the report of the committee of conference, which would doubtless result in our having no Army bill whatever. I repeat that so far as concerns the minor details—and although minor they are not unimportant, for they relate to the advantages to be given to the volunteer forces—the views of the House have been maintained successfully by the last committee of conference, according to what had been agreed upon by the first committee of conference in those particulars. I will not, for one, oppose the adoption of this report.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I think the House may congratulate itself on the success of this conference, and that the committee may congratulate itself on the very happy result which it has achieved in this struggle. I have looked through this bill with a great deal of care, and as the result of that examination I must say that I hope the House will adopt the report of the conference committee; for I am sure it is very much better than we had any reason to hope for, considering the results of the last attempt at a conference with the Senate.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to add one word more. We found in conference with the Senate they were just as determined to have not one single regiment as a Veteran Reserve corps as the House was to have ten. Some compromise, therefore, had to be made. The only question was whether we would come down to four, when in the morning they were willing to give us five. They abandoned their own ground.

Mr. PAINE. I hold in my hand a document on which I made accurate notes of the agreements of the morning. In looking through the second conference report, I find there are only three points in which the report differs from the report to which the third conference agreed to subscribe. We were willing to agree to everything except the provisions relating to the number of ordinary infantry regiments and the number of the colored troops and of the Veteran Reserve corps. The difference is not enough to warrant the rejection of this report, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that that body further insisted on its amendments to the civil appropriation bill disagreed to by the House and agreed to the further conference asked for, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. EDMUNDS as managers of such conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 62) directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Beam for a statue of Abraham Lincoln; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 207) to pay Colonel Lewis F. Fix.

Mr. DRIGGS (at quarter past four o'clock, a. m.) moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that the points of disagreement between the two Houses on the pending bills promise soon to be adjusted, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DRIGGS. I withdraw the motion.

REMOVAL OF THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of three members of the House be appointed and instructed to inquire into the expediency of an early removal of the seat of the Government of the United States to some eligible point on the west bank of the Mississippi, and the appropriation of the present Capitol, and other public buildings, when vacated, as the National Homes for disabled officers, soldiers, and sailors, their widows and orphan children; and that they report to the next session of this Congress.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Strike out "west bank of the Mississippi" and insert "south shore of Lake Michigan."

Mr. PERHAM. I object.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to suspend the rules.

The rules were not suspended.

MEXICO.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Government to demand the withdrawal of all foreign troops from the republic of Mexico so as to leave the citizens thereof free to govern themselves.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What Government is it?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is to leave them to construct a government of their own. I move to suspend the rules.

The rules were not suspended.

FENCING AND DITCHING COMPANY.

The Clerk then concluded the reading of House bill No. 735, to incorporate the United States Fencing, Ditching, Draining, and Land-Reclaiming Company which had previously been suspended.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to know how it is that the Committee for the District of Columbia comes to report a bill which seems to have dominion of the air, certainly of the earth, and not of the District of Columbia in any sense whatever that I can discover.

Mr. COBB. Presuming that the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is made in good faith, I will answer it by stating that this is not one of those bills that contain a roving commission; but it is confined to the District of Columbia. The object of this bill is to enable the inventor of a certain ditching-machine to organize a company for the purpose of selling them.

Mr. PRICE. Is it an excavator or a mole ditcher?

Mr. COBB. Not being myself versed in the science I cannot tell.

Mr. PRICE. There is a great deal of difference between an excavator for ditching and a mole ditcher.

Mr. COBB. I will state to the gentleman that the main business to which it is expected this machine will be put is to assist in building some of the numerous railroads that he has been instrumental in having chartered this session.

Mr. PRICE. That is the reason why I asked the question. I do not want these railroads spoiled by a bad kind of ditcher being employed on them.

Mr. LATHAM. I would inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COBB] if it is intended that the "pioneer ditcher of California" shall run the machine here provided for? [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB. "The pioneer ditcher" is not interested in this institution, so far as I know. The question was upon agreeing to the substitute reported by the committee; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes forty-nine, noes not counted. So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. MARSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Norman Wiard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment House bill No. 815, being an act supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled, bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana;

An act (S. No. 247) donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 324) for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depositary of public moneys at Pittsburg;

An act (S. No. 424) to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 133) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court of the district of West Virginia.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF INSURANCE.

On motion of Mr. MOORHEAD, the Committee of Ways and Means were discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 675, for the creation of a national Bureau of Insurance, and to provide for funding the indebtedness of the United States; and the same was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MERCUR, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back Senate bill No. 290, to incorporate the National Life and Accident Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and ordered to be printed.

ENVELOPE, PAPER, AND STAMP COMPANY.

Mr. MERCUR, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, also reported back House bill No. 95, to incorporate the National Union Envelope, Paper, and Stamp Company of Washington, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. CULLOM moved to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF MINERAL WATER.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I am requested by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCULLOUGH] to report back, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, Senate bill No. 265, to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

No objection was made.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the second Tuesday in December next, after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed.

The motion to reconsider was entered on the Journal.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 815) supplemental to the act to appropriate money for postal services.

EVIDENCE OF MARRIAGES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back Senate bill No. 185, to preserve evidence of marriages in the District of Columbia, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CONKLING. I notice from the reading of the bill that the certificate of the functionary performing marriage is to be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated. I think that is too broad a provision, where so many important interests relating to property may be affected. I move to amend by striking out the word "conclusive," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "presumptive."

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon the third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 9, noes 45.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN (at five minutes of five o'clock a. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question again recurred upon the passage of the bill to preserve the evidence of marriages in the District of Columbia, upon which no quorum had voted.

The question was again taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 38, noes 27; no quorum voting.

Mr. ELDRIDGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 36, nays 63, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Anderson, Baxter, Benjamin, Bromwell, Cobb, Deftrees, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kuykendall, Latham, Leftwich, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Ross, Sawyer, Van Aernam, Ward, Welker, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—36.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allison, Baker, Barker, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Delano, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kerr, Ketcham, Koontz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, Morrill, O'Neill, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Schenck, Shanklin, Stokes, Strouse, Tabor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—63.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburt, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Moorhead, Moulton, Niblack, Noel, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Rollins, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—87.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURERS OF MINERAL WATER.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 265) entitled "An act to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was postponed until next December.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. PRICE was not agreed to. The question recurring on the motion of Mr. ELDRIDGE.

Mr. INGERSOLL called the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion to postpone the bill till next December,

Mr. ELDRIDGE withdrew the motion.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORS MUTUAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 383) entitled "An act to incorporate the Colored Mutual Building Association of the city of Washington," with a recommendation that it pass.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, the bill was read.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] what he expects these corporators to do under this act.

Mr. INGERSOLL. They are all men of color, who desire to be incorporated for the purpose of erecting buildings, which they may lease to their poorer brethren at cheap rates.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The gentleman from Illinois must know that there is nothing in this bill which indicates the object for which the corporation is to be created. The bill simply proposes to create a corporation to hold and speculate in real estate. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

On the motion of Mr. BOUTWELL there were—ayes 50, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGERSOLL. With the consent of the House, I will move that the bill be recommitted.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

G. C. BESTOR AND C. W. McCORD.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c. That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to organize a board of not less than three persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels-of-war and steam machinery Shiloh, built by George G. Bestor, and the Utah, built by Charles W. McCord, at St. Louis, Missouri, in the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work, and report the same to Congress at its next session.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

Mr. HOGAN. I really think there ought to be no objection to this proposition; and I will move to suspend the rules that I may introduce it. I first, however, desire to state the facts of the case. These gentlemen made a contract with the Government to build two gunboats. They were to be low draught iron-clads. While the vessels were in process of construction, and when the contractors were able to go on with the work, having not only the means but the workmen, the Government changed the plan entirely, so as to make the vessels sea-going vessels. The Government proposed to pay these men for the extra work that was to be done. But in the mean time the tide of war turned to Missouri, and these gentlemen in employing their workmen were compelled to muster them into the United States service as militia. They were obliged to pay extra prices for the labor of these workmen, and were precluded from having as much work from them as was desirable and proper.

All that these contractors now desire is that they may get their case before the Navy Department. The Secretary of the Navy informs them that he has no authority to act in the matter unless there be a law or joint resolution passed by Congress authorizing him to adjudicate their accounts. This is the whole case. The proposition is simply to appoint a commission who shall report the facts, to be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy at the next session. We can then take action upon the subject, if we deem it proper. The simple object of this proposition is to give these gentlemen an opportunity to present their case before the Secretary of the Navy. I hope gentlemen will not object to the resolution.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] whether, if the statement contained in the resolution be true, the Secretary of the Navy has not the power to make a proper allowance to these contractors; or whether, if he has not such power, these parties cannot go into the Court of Claims and get redress under the laws as they now exist.

Mr. HOGAN. I suppose that they could go into the Court of Claims; but, sir, propositions similar to this have been made in the Senate in regard to gunboats built in the eastern States; and when eastern builders of gunboats are permitted to bring their accounts before the Secretary of the Navy for investigation, I do not see why our western men should be compelled to carry their cases before the Court of Claims rather than have them presented to the Secretary of the Navy at once. The proposition simply is that the facts shall be reported at the next session of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. As I have objected to the introduction of this resolution, I wish to state my reason for doing so.

Sir, since I have been in Congress I have observed that it has grown to be a custom that whenever a party has had a contract with the Government which has turned out unfavorably to himself, he immediately comes to Congress and asks the payment of a large amount additional upon his contract. But, whenever a contractor makes a profitable contract, and realizes a large amount of money we never hear of any proposition that he shall refund to the United States Government any part of the amount which he has realized. It seems to me that we are creating, by our action in Congress, a very bad system, under which all the losses are on the side of the Government, and none of the profits. I think, sir, that if parties with their eyes wide open have made fair contracts with the Government they should not be allowed by Congress anything additional upon their original contracts. If they do extra work they should, as a matter of course, be paid for it; but I think that we should not be called on in cases of contracts with the Government to pay anything beyond what the Government has agreed to pay. This proposed investigation into the facts is, of course, intended only as the basis of a claim to be hereafter urged for extra compensation; and for this reason I have objected.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HOGAN] that, in the first place, the Secretary of the Navy, under our present laws, has full authority to settle with these contractors for any extra work which they may have performed. In the second place, if on account of unforeseen circumstances—a great increase in the price of labor or materials, or any thing of that kind—the contract which these men made has proved to be a hard contract, from which they ought to be relieved, this commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy can give Congress very little aid in the settlement of this case. Claims of this sort must properly go before the Committee of Claims of each House of Congress, and meet their approval before being acted on. The commission heretofore appointed by the Secretary of the Navy in reference to the iron-clads has been a positive injury to the claimants, because that commission presents the cases upon a basis on which Congress cannot consider them. Thus an obstacle is thrown in the way of the claimants. The commission combines the cases of the claimants together. It does not discriminate one case from another. It groups them all together in one general measure, and says that all the contractors must have a certain percentage additional on their contracts. Now, in point of fact, one man may have made money while another has lost; and therefore each case should be considered separately and on its own merits. Yet, by the action of this commission, the different cases are all put in one omnibus bill. I have no wish to interpose the slightest objection to any proposition of the gentleman from Missouri which may tend to assist contractors who have really suffered loss in consequence of what they have done for the Government; but I do not believe this proposition will be of any service to the men for whose benefit it is intended.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Speaker, what we desire to accomplish by this proposition is that this case may come here as an isolated measure standing solely upon its own merits. We do not seek to put it into an omnibus bill. These two vessels were built at the same yard by different parties.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this measure ought not to pass. There are a great many contracts of a character similar to this that have been taken and executed by parties in all sections of the country; and I do not know what authority any commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy would have to go to a private establishment and investigate its books and its means of doing work, with a view to ascertaining the actual cost of the work; so as to determine what additional amount should be paid upon the contract. If this proceeding were authorized in any one case and were practicable, I see no reason why it should not be done in all other cases, and Congress would certainly have a large amount of business on its hands if it should undertake to appoint a separate commission to examine every case where a contract has been made during the war for the building of ships or furnishing materials of war, and the contractor claims to have suffered loss. The appointment of a commission to go out to St. Louis and make this investigation would be attended with a great deal of expense.

Now, sir, the Secretary of the Navy takes the position that it is not within his power to make extra compensation for work that has been given out by contract. He refers all these contractors to Congress, and says that when he has carried out the terms of a contract he has exhausted all his power in the premises; that if the contractors desire to receive anything more on account of their contracts they must apply to Congress for relief. Now, sir, I see no reason why these parties should not come here and present their claims in this way. Let them present their petitions; and let those petitions be referred to the appropriate committee, the Committee of Claims. Before that committee the parties will have an opportunity to state all the facts bearing upon the case. It seems to me it would be altogether improper and impracticable to adopt this proposition; and if it could be carried out it would be attended with very great expense, for which I think there is no justification.

Mr. HOGAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that gentlemen are somewhat mistaken in reference to the objects contemplated by this proposition. The claimants in this case expect to bring this matter before the Committee of Claims at the next session. All that they wish is that the matter shall be so presented, through the Navy Department, as that the Committee of Claims may have before it the proper materials for a correct judgment. The reason why these parties have not been included in other bills which have been presented to cover claims of this sort—in the "omnibus bill," if I may so call it, which has been passed by the Senate and is now before the Committee of Claims of this House—is that in consequence of the very low stage of water in the Mississippi river when these vessels were finished, according to the new plan which the Department required, the vessels could not be got out safely to the place where they were to be received. Hence the parties had not an opportunity to present their case in time before the action of the commission heretofore appointed by the Department to investigate matters of this kind.

I think that if this commission were appointed to investigate the facts, the examination would perhaps facilitate the final settlement of the matter by the Committee of Claims at the next session. That is the only object I have in view in asking at this time the adoption of this resolution—simply that the matter may be fairly brought before the Committee of Claims through the action of the Navy Department.

The motion of Mr. HOGAN to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the joint resolution was not agreed to.

Mr. HOGAN. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CITY CANAL.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report upon the bill (H. R. No. 502) to authorize a special tax for the purpose of improving the Washington city canal; which was laid on the table.

MAJOR J. W. JACOBS.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am directed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Major J. W. Jacobs, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL MASH.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am directed by the same committee to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Michael Mash, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to revive and continue in force the provisions of an act granting public lands, in alternate sections, in the State of Mississippi, to aid in the construction of railroads in said State, and for other purposes, approved August 11, 1856. I desire to state that this bill was handed to me by an officer of a southern railroad. Personally I know nothing of its merits. It was handed to me some time ago, but I have not had an opportunity heretofore to introduce it.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering at this time the resolutions reported by the Judiciary Committee relative to the alleged complicity of Jefferson Davis and others in the assassination of President Lincoln.

The motion was agreed to.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That there is no defect or insufficiency in the present state of the law to prevent or interfere with the trial of Jefferson Davis for the crime of treason or any other crime for which there may be probable ground for arraigning him before the tribunals of the country.

Resolved further, That it is the duty of the executive department of the Government to proceed with the investigation of the facts connected with the assassination of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, without unnecessary delay, that Jefferson Davis and others named in the proclamation of President Johnson of May 2, 1865, may be put upon trial and properly punished if guilty, or relieved from the charges against them if found to be innocent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill for the relief of Norman Wiard, that the House may proceed to its consideration at the present time.

Mr. CONKLING. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] will not persist in his objection. This matter was before the House at the last Congress, but was not acted on. I think that if gentlemen will listen to the reading of the bill they will make no objection to it. In my judgment, very few bills so meritorious as this have come before this House. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not know of anything more meritorious than the consistency with which this House, during the last thirty-six hours, has avoided acting upon private bills of this sort. It is too late to take them up and consider them properly. I make this remark regardless of the merits of any individual cases. I have no reason to doubt the gentleman's statement that this is a meritorious bill; but it should be considered at a proper season; and I think that six o'clock in the morning of the day of final adjournment, when the House is awaiting the report of a committee of conference, is not the proper time for acting upon a bill involving so much money as I understand this does. I must therefore insist upon my objection.

REPORT ON MEMPHIS RIOTS.

Mr. SHANKLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question. The order of the House in reference to the printing of the reports on the disturbances at Memphis was, as I understand, that the majority and minority reports should be printed together. It appears, however, that this order has not been obeyed; for I have here a copy of the majority report, printed alone, unaccompanied by the minority report. I move that the order of the House be executed.

The SPEAKER. As to the extra copies ordered to-day, the order was that the majority and minority reports should be printed together. The Chair does not recollect what was the order as to the printing of the regular number.

Mr. SHANKLIN. That was the order of the House on the adoption of the first motion to print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct that the order of the House, whatever it may have been, be executed.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to know by what authority the Public Printer, when this House orders that a majority and minority report shall be printed together, sends into this House the majority report alone, excluding the minority report. This is the second occasion when, the House having ordered the printing of the majority and minority reports together, the majority report has been printed alone, excluding the minority report. If I can ascertain whose duty it is to see that the orders of this House are executed in good faith, I am ready to introduce a resolution of censure against that officer.

Mr. BROOMALL. In reference to this copy of the majority report printed alone, I desire to ask the gentleman whether he knows where and by whom it was printed—whether he knows that it was printed by the Public Printer.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very singular question.

The SPEAKER. It is the essential question. If the report was printed at a private office, of course this is not a privileged question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Of course it is not. But, sir, who ever heard of any private establishment printing a report ordered by this House, and bringing it in here?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will send up the report upon which he founds his remarks, the Speaker will rule upon it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will do so with pleasure.

The SPEAKER. (examining the document.) This is the print of the Public Printing Office; but it appears to be simply a proof-sheet folded, a number of the pages being blank, as the paper is printed only on one side.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is very remarkable that we should have the proof-sheet of the majority report only.

The SPEAKER. The minority report probably is to be set up after the majority report.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is to be hoped it will be.

The SPEAKER. When any gentleman presents the report of the majority, regularly issued and printed separately, the Chair will rule upon the question. This is not the regular issue of the report, but is evidently only a proof-sheet. The Chair has not examined the Journal to ascertain whether the reports were originally ordered to be printed together. If they were, and if the order be not carried out, the Chair will rule that it is a matter for investigation by the House.

Mr. BROOMALL. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] had taken the trouble to ask me in reference to this matter, I think I could have saved him a great deal of uneasiness. It happens that I sent this morning to the Public Printer for fifteen copies (I think that was the number) of this report for my own use. When they were brought to me I found what the Speaker has stated, that they were made up of proof-sheets, showing that the report was not yet ready to be issued.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. SHANKLIN,] who prepared the minority report, whether he has sent for the proof of his report.

Mr. SHANKLIN. I have not.

The SPEAKER. Probably if the gentleman sends for it he will obtain it.

Mr. SHANKLIN. The copy of the majority report which I had was furnished to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL.]

Mr. BROOMALL. At the gentleman's request.

POST ROAD BRIDGES.

Mr. HOGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to repeal the second section of an act to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of Norman Wiard.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is a just claim, and ought to be passed. It has been fully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and met with their entire approval. It provides for the payment to Mr. Wiard of the balance of money due him for money expended in furnishing two steamers to the Government, and which were delivered at Hilton Head. The whole amount of money has been expended for the use of the Government; and, as I understand, this claimant is now suffering for the want of that which has justly been found due him.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. There is not a quorum present, and this not the time to pass a bill of this character.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to suspend the rule in order that the Committee of the Whole House may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The rules were suspended.

The bill appropriates the sum of $25,511 12 to pay the claim of Norman Wiard for the delivery of steamers at Hilton Head.

Mr. BINGHAM. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARD. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no report.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is a report in preparation in the hands of the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. MARSTON.] I will, with the permission of the House, say one word. If there ever was a fair claim against the Government I believe this to be one, a case in which the gentleman named in the bill has suffered to the amount of thousands of dollars by no wrong of his own, but because he has been unable to get a settlement from the Government which is justly his due. It has been thoroughly considered. Cart loads of paper have been sent from the quartermaster's department, in which there was the highest testimony of the claim. He contracted for two steamers. He offered them to the Government at $90,000 apiece. They jewed him down to $80,000 apiece. They were vessels of light draught. They then kept him waiting. He then agreed if the Government would pay $50,000 apiece on the steamers leaving New York he would deliver the steamers at Fortress Monroe, which was provided in the original understanding to be the place at which they were to be delivered. They never paid the $50,000 at once, I think, but made partial payments afterward. Instead of delivering the vessels at Fortress Monroe, he was compelled to deliver them at Hilton Head; and before they arrived there one of them was beached, causing him great loss in various ways. They were the vessels by which James Island was captured. He has only received a partial payment, and the committee report this balance to be due him.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope my colleague will yield to me.

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly.

Mr. STROUSE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, whether he knows the fact in this case to be true.

Mr. SCHENCK. They all appear by the papers in the case. I state them as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The committee fully examined the whole matter and found this amount of money to be due this man, and recommended it should be paid to him.

Mr. STROUSE. That is all we want to know. I believe this man ought to be paid, and shall vote for the bill.

Mr. HIGBY. Why has this claim been sent to the Committee on Military Affairs and the claims of all other naval contractors sent to the Committee of Claims?

Mr. SCHENCK. I never knew anything about this claim until the memorial was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. I can answer one part of the question of the gentleman from California. This Mr. Wiard had been connected in the most interesting way, before this contract, with the War Department, by his improvements and inventions in fire-arms. Every steel gun fired in the late war against the rebels, with the exception of a few from England, were those invented and manufactured by himself. He invented what is known as the Wiard gun, and he has gone on spending money in improving it. His relation to the War Department arose in that way. His subsequent arrangement was in consequence of his known skill as a machinist and inventor. He has been connected with some of the most interesting features of the war as an inventor. I think there are not many claims which demand more rapid rendition of justice than this one.

Mr. WARD. I do protest against passing claims of this character at this time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If the claim is just, it is good to pay it at any time.

Mr. WARD. Has this ever been investigated by the Committee of Claims, or has it only been before the Committee on Military Affairs, and does it stand exclusively before the House on the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe it has been before the Committee on Military Affairs exclusively.

Mr. HIGBY. I want justice done, but I want it done equally to all claimants. As fair claims as ever came before this House have been objected to and referred to the Committee of the Whole. When all other claimants are denied I cannot see the justice of singling out one particular claim and granting it favors not accorded to all other claims. A resolution came here which had been fully considered by a committee, and instead of being taken up and acted on it was sent to the Committee of the Whole House. I refer to the case of the Camanche, where the Government took the machinery out of the vessel and put it into another vessel on account of the exigencies of the times. Justice should be done equally in all cases.

Mr. SCHENCK. As I said before, this memorial came to the Committee on Military Affairs. The claim of Mr. Wiard was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs because I suppose that was deemed to be the appropriate committee. It has been ordinarily the habit of the Committee on Military Affairs to send purely private claims, seeming to have nothing special to do with matters connected with the War Department or the Army, to the Committee of Claims. When a claim comes to us arising out of military affairs we feel bound to take charge of it. This was one of that character. We did not ask to be discharged from its further consideration, but took it up and were at great pains to ascertain all the facts from the quartermaster's department and the War Department. We did all that we could do in order to arrive at a just conclusion. The War Department sent us an enormous quantity of documents. They were all examined by the committee, but more particularly by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. MARSTON,] and we came to the conclusion if there ever was a just claim for an unpaid balance this was one. The committee accordingly reported this bill to pay him what is justly due, not a cent of which he has received. I suppose a great deal of wrong has been done in withholding the sanction of the House in other cases, but that ought not to induce us to do wrong here.

Mr. HIGBY. I will not do injustice in this case, because justice has not been done in reference to the claims of gentlemen equally meritorious, whose bills have been killed because it was alleged there were only thirty-six hours of the session left, and we had no time to consider them. I have no spite, no revenge to satisfy, but I only wanted to say that there were other cases as just as this one which had received no favor. If this be a just claim I shall cheerfully vote for it.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the facts are correctly stated by the gentleman from Ohio it seems to me the War Department ought to have paid it.

Mr. SCHENCK. It has only been denied on some mere technical ground, and the intervention of Congress is necessary to enable this man to get the money which all must admit to be due him.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Members are sleeping upon sofas and in chairs and all around the Hall, and I would like to know whether they are to be counted in making up a quorum. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. They are all present and are all entitled to vote when waked up. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. My demand for the yeas and nays was on the passage and not on the engrossment of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 67, nays 25, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Bronwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Driggs, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Glessbrenner, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Schenck, Shellabarger, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Whaley, and Williams—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Bidwell, Cobb, Cullom, Deftrees, Eldridge, Farquhar, Johnson, Ketchum, Koontz, William Lawrence, Leftwich, Marshall, Mercer, Morris, Phelps, Price, John H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Trimble, Van Aernam, Ward, and Wright—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Finck, Good-year, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Morrill, Moulton, Niblack, Noel, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Scofield, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—94.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. LAURIE.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement to the House, if I can get its attention for a few moments, in order to make an effort in behalf of a most worthy lady of this city. I refer to the case of Mrs. Laurie. Her bill has passed the Senate after having been thoroughly investigated. It gives her some two thousand seven hundred dollars for the use of her house and lot by the military. While it was in the use of the Government she was compelled to rent property for her own use in the city of Georgetown. Her property suffered great dilapidation from the military.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Has the gentleman any personal knowledge of the property alleged to have been injured?

Mr. ORTH. I have, and I will state what that personal knowledge is.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object to the whole thing.

Mr. ORTH. I move to suspend the rules so that the Committee of the Whole House may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of Mrs. Laurie.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 32, nays 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANCONA. I insist on a further count. The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. ORTH and Mr. ANCONA.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 50, nays 47.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

BALMER AND WEBBER.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of Balmer & Webber. With the consent of the House I will make a brief statement of what it is.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object to everything of this kind during the remainder of this session.

Mr. HOGAN. It is a claim for payment for musical instruments furnished by order of General Frémont when he came to command the army of Missouri. There were ten regiments from Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, and I think one from Indiana. General Frémont ordered that these regiments should be furnished with brass instruments.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object to anything that will get up any more bills to take money out of the Treasury.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, (at seven o'clock a. m.) moved that the House take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope not. I understand that the committee of conference are ready to make their report on the civil appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the civil appropriation bill.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BANKS. I present the following privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 16, 19, 32, 33, 43, 49, and 55.

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered 4, 14, 15, 17, 24, 25, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the eighth amendment of the Senate.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the ninth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their amendment to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: at the end of said amendment add the following: "And provided further, That the pay of the Speaker shall be $3,000 per annum."

That the House recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out the words following: "for the continuation of the work upon the north portico of the Patent Office building, $50,000." And also recede from so much of their amendment to the twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out as follows: on page 7, line eight, from the word "for" down to and including the word "dollars," in line fourteen, with an amendment as follows to said last clause: in line thirteen of said clause strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty." And that the Senate agree to so much of the amendment of the House to the said twenty-second amendment of the Senate as proposes to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line two, on page 7, down to and including the word "necessary," in line eight on the same page.

That the House recede from their amendment to the fifty-second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: at the end of said amendment add the following:

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 19th day of April, 1861, for a period of not less than three years, and having served his time of enlistment, has been honorably discharged, and who has received or is entitled to receive from the United States under existing laws a bounty of $100, and no more, and any such soldier entitled for not less than three years who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States or of disease or wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid the additional bounty of $100 hereby authorized.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That to each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 19th day of April, A. D. 1861, for a period of not less than two years, and who is not included in the foregoing section, and who has been honorably discharged, after serving two years, and who has received, or is entitled to receive, from the United States, under existing laws, a bounty of $100, and no more, shall be paid an additional bounty of fifty dollars, and any such soldier enlisted for not less than two years, who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States, or of disease or wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid the additional bounty of fifty dollars hereby authorized: Provided, That any soldier who shall have bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not be entitled to receive any additional bounty whatever; and when application is made by any soldier for said bounty, he shall be required, under the pains and penalties of perjury, to make oath or affirmation of his identity, and that he has not so bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, exchanged, loaned, or given away either his discharge papers or any interest in any bounty as aforesaid, and no claim for such bounty shall be entertained by the Paymaster General or other accounting or disbursing officer, except upon receipt of the claimant's discharge papers, accompanied by the statement under oath, as by this section provided.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the payment of the additional bounty herein provided for, it shall be the duty of the Paymaster General, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to cause to be examined the accounts of each and every soldier who makes application therefor, and if found entitled thereto, shall pay said bounty.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in the reception, examination, settlement, and payment of claims for said additional bounty due the widows or heirs of deceased soldiers, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be governed by the restrictions prescribed for the Paymaster General by the Secretary of War, and the payment shall be made in like manner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

That the House recede from their amendments to the Senate amendment No. 54, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line two, after the word "clerks," insert "committee clerks." In line three, after the words "messengers and," insert "all." In same line, after the word "Senate," insert "and House of Representatives, and to the Globe and official reporters of each House, and the stenographer of the House, and to the Capitol police, and the three superintendents of the public gardens, their clerks and assistants."

JOHN SHERMAN,
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
IRA HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. P. BANKS.

WILLIAM E. NIBLACK,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask for a separate vote on the different propositions.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order, as the report of a committee of conference must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. BANKS. If there is to be any question of order upon the propositions contained in the report, it ought to be made now.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I make the point of order that there must be a separate vote taken on the propositions.

The SPEAKER. That is impossible; it has never been known in reference to reports of committees of conference.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Can it not be done by a motion?

The SPEAKER. It cannot.

Mr. BROOMALL. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us what the increased cost to the Treasury will be from the additional compensation of members of Congress?

Mr. BANKS. It was my purpose to state what I knew about this bill, and when I have made my statement I desire to move the previous question. I do not intend to defend the report by argument, but to leave it to the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I desire to know if it is a laudable exercise of capacity to place us in the condition of voting either to increase our salaries or of voting against equalizing the bounties. I have no respect for capacity exercised in that manner.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. That remark is in violation of the rules.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Take my words down, and let us see.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that he has no respect for capacity exercised in this manner, which places the House in the dilemma of voting either for raising the pay of members or of voting against the equalization of bounties. It is the order of the House that this subject should be considered by the conference committee. The Senate sent to the House an amendment increasing the pay of members. That was referred to the committee of conference. The House sent a resolution in regard to bounties. That was sent to the committee of conference. That committee were instructed to reconcile, if possible, the disagreement between the two Houses. The Chair is compelled to say this in vindication of the conference committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has ever known a committee of conference where there has been such a decisive vote as has been taken in this House—120 to 4—against a proposition, bring in a report in favor of it.

Mr. BANKS. I will answer the gentleman by making a statement. The report is signed by but two members of the committee. I was appointed upon the committee late in the session of this day, without any previous knowledge of the subject. The committee on the part of the House insisted upon the recognition of the bounty for the soldiers as a sine qua non. The Senate committee was not authorized to accept it, but reported to the Senate and asked for instructions. They received instructions, in pursuance of which they assented to the demand of the House on the question of bounty, and the result is the provision which is embraced in this report, and which I think is entirely satisfactory to the friends of the bounty. I believe it is carefully drawn and will be found to be as just as any simple proposition can be to the soldiers and to the Government.

The second proposition relates to the compensation of members. These two were the only matters upon which the committee deliberated. It was not until the very last moment, certainly within forty-five minutes, that I was called upon to decide, not upon this question merely, but upon the question whether there should be an agreement on the part of the two committees on this subject, and my difficulty was increased from the fact that the House had been waiting a very long time and that the hour for the close of the session was near at hand. I felt constrained to yield my judgment to the wishes of the committee with which I was in conference.

I ought to say that the committee of the Senate did not deem as a sine qua non the passage of this proposition in regard to salaries, but they expressed the strongest belief that any other proposition than the two coupled together would be unsatisfactory to the Senate, and they had supposed from what had transpired between the two committees and what had been stated to the Senate, that the House would accede to the provision in regard to the salaries. At the last moment I was called upon to decide. It was left for me to say whether I would leave the committee-room and report an entire disagreement on this question or assent to the proposition. Thereupon I took the responsibility of assenting to the Senate's proposition. Had the affair been in my management at the commencement of the conference I should not have reported it. Being called upon to decide it the last moment, I thought it my duty to report it, and I have signed, with my colleague on the other side, [Mr. NIBLACK,] this report. The chairman of the committee [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa,] has not signed it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKS. I want to move the previous question, but I will listen to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish merely to state that as one of the members of the committee I opposed from the beginning the Senate amendment increasing the salaries. As regards the provision in relation to bounties, though it is not as complete as I desire, still I think it is really better than we had reason to expect from the Senate. But it is because of my opposition to the increase of salaries that I withheld my signature to the report.

Mr. BANKS. I feel it my duty to say that had I understood from the chairman of the committee at the commencement of our deliberations that such was his determination, I never should have made the report; or, at all events, it would have been different from what it is. But the Senate committee expressed a feeling that it would be dealing with them somewhat in bad faith if they were compelled at the last moment to forego this provision, and therefore we reported it, leaving it for the House to accept or reject it.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. NIBLACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts feels somewhat embarrassed in this matter. The report does not meet my entire approbation. But this question of salaries was brought to the attention of the House by the action of the Senate, and it has got before the country; and I must say that I have heard enough to convince me that it was the intention of the present Congress to increase the salaries of members before the 4th of March next. In that view I thought we might as well test the question now as at any time. As to the bounty question, the proposition does not come up to my views, but as a compromise I accept it. And as a compromise I consented to the entire report, believing it would be better to pass the bill in its present shape if we intended to pass the bill at all.

Mr. BANKS. I understood the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] at the first to be precisely as now expressed. I do not intend to enter into any debate.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to inquire, as a matter of fact, whether, in order to come to a report which might be presented to the House, the managers on the part of the House found it necessary to agree to this provision for the increase of salaries.

Mr. BANKS. At the last moment I felt it my duty, against my judgment under other circumstances, to report this to the House for its action. I now move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKS. I decline.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 69, noes 31.

On ordering the main question,

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, demanded tellers. Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. LAWRENCE of Ohio, and NIBLACK.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 25.

So the main question was ordered.

Mr. PHELPS. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 50, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Sidney Clarke, Cullom, Driggs, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Kelley, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Leftwich, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Patterson, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scheuck, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, and Whaley—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Cobb, Conkling, Deffrees, Eggleston, Eliot, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, James R. Hubbard, Kasson, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lynch, Mercur, Morrill, Morris, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stokes, Taber, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—50.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Ashael W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jones, Julian, Kelo, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Moulton, Neill, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Rollins, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—85.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, said: I cannot get what I want for the soldier, and so I will take what I can get. I change my vote to "ay."

Mr. DRIGGS. I hope the gentlemen who are in favor of bounties to the soldiers; but who are loath to vote to increase their own salaries, will contribute the surplus of their salaries to the soldiers.

Mr. BERGEN. On account of the soldiers, I change my vote to "ay."

Mr. O'NEILL. I vote "ay," so that we may get a bounty bill. I am opposed to raising the compensation of members.

Mr. FERRY. I rise to express the embarrassment in which the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses places me in determining my vote upon the question. Steadily and invariably I have voted against increase of pay to members of Congress, because I am opposed to any increase in the present condition of our finances. Three times, upon this very proposition, has my vote been recorded against it. Now it appears coupled with the increase of bounty to our gallant soldiers, which I heartily favor, but which I cannot vote for without also voting for the increase of congressional pay. The Senate insists upon this increase at the peril of increase of bounty to our soldiers. There is no alternative but to vote for both or vote against both. It is unfair to be compelled to meet a proposition which is approved with one not approved, in one inseparable act. But the dilemma is unavoidable and the issue must be met. From what I observe I am satisfied the vote upon the question will be a very close one. It may be that the adoption of the report may hang upon a single vote. Duty to brave men who have periled life for the Republic rises above the expediency to which I unwillingly commit myself by the change of action I now propose to follow. It is bounty or no bounty to the soldiers that must now be considered. Let me here reply to the proffered suggestion, that members need not be so sensitive about voting themselves adequate pay, for their surplus can be contributed to the soldiers, that that suggestion shall reconcile my action. It shall not go unheeded. My vote shall be fortified by acts. I therefore ask to change my vote, and will hold myself answerable to the benefit of soldiers to the extent of such surplus. I now vote "ay."

Mr. CULLOM. For the purpose of securing the soldiers' bounty I vote "ay."

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The state of business is such that the House may now adjourn to meet again at eleven o'clock. If the Senate is not able to finish its business by twelve o'clock I understand it will reciprocate the request of the House for an extension of the session till four and a half o'clock.

The motion to adjourn was accordingly agreed to; and thereupon (at seven o'clock and fifty minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

MEMORIAL.

The following memorial was presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of 200 prominent and influential citizens of Louisiana, for the aid of the Government of the United States in repairing the levees of the Mississippi.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 28, 1866.

The Senate met at nine o'clock a. m.

On motion by Mr. RAMSEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

CERTIFICATES OF NEW JERSEY SOLDIERS.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a joint resolution on the table from the House of Representatives which I hope will be disposed of now. It is a small matter, for the transmission through the mails of certificates to soldiers of good conduct by the authorities of New Jersey. It is House joint resolution No. 193.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) authorizing the transmission through the mails, free of postage, of certain certificates, by the adjutant general of New Jersey. It authorizes the adjutant general of New Jersey to transmit through the mails, free of postage, certain certificates of thanks awarded by the Legislature to the soldiers of that State, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may direct.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PITTSBURG AND CLEVELAND RAILROAD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 537.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 537) to promote the construction of a line of railroad from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Cleveland, Ohio; which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate reassembled at ten o'clock a. m.

SEWARD A. FOOT.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution for the payment of Seward A. Foot for services as clerk of a committee, have directed me to report it back to the Senate without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. We find that the money is due to him, but cannot be paid without a resolution. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Seward A. Foot, the sum of $180 in full for services as clerk of a committee.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the second conference committee on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 818) for the relief of Norman Wiard, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ROBERT BALDWIN.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a little bill on the table which a member of the House asks me to call up. It is a House bill. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and reported back by them favorably yesterday morning. It is House bill No. 693. I hope the Senate will consider it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 693) for the relief of Robert Baldwin. The preamble recites that on the 5th of December, 1849, Robert Baldwin located at the land office at Milan, in the State of Missouri, three military bounty land-warrants, issued under the act of 1847, each for one hundred and sixty acres, numbered 2,847, 26,801, and 40,263, and received from the register duplicate certificates of location, and that those warrants were lost from the mail in their transmission from the land office to Washington, and have not since been heard from; and the bill, therefore, directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause patents for the lands entered under those warrants to be issued to Robert Baldwin upon his surrendering to the Commissioner the duplicate certificates of location.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there a report in that case? If there is, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a report accompanying the bill from the House of Representatives which can be read. It is very short.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Robert Baldwin, beg leave to report the following facts:

That on the 5th of December, 1849, the said Baldwin located three land-warrants, each for one hundred and sixty acres, on the land mentioned in the bill, surrendering the warrants and receiving from the register duplicate certificates of entry. The warrants were lost in the mail while in transit from the land office at Milan, Missouri, to the General Land Office, since which they have never been heard from. The Commissioner of the General Land Office refuses to issue patents for the land without special authority from Congress; and satisfied that it is but justice to the party, the warrants having been lost while in possession of the Government, and that no loss can possibly result therefrom, the committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUTY ON IMPORTED WOOL.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 793.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us hear the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. "A bill to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that bill will not be taken up for consideration. It would be, in my judgment, manifestly improper to take it up at this period of the session.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has it been referred?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir. I will state the facts with regard to it. The bill came into the Senate yesterday or the day before yesterday, I do not know which; and the Presiding Officer stated that it would be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] moved that it be laid upon the table, without moving that it be reprinted, and prevented its being referred. It has not been referred to our committee or any committee; it has not been examined by the Senate at all, and has not been printed so that we might see it, but it laid on the table and has not been called up till now, when we are within two hours of the time of adjournment. It is a bill of some eight or ten pages, a tariff bill; and now within two hours of the time of adjournment, after being up all night, exhausted as we are and utterly unable to comprehend the bill by its terms in a reading at the desk, we are called upon to take it up for action. I have glanced my eye over it, but I am unable from a casual glance to say what it contains, except that I believe, as is said by the honorable Senator from Ohio, it is confined exclusively to wool and woollens. It is said that it is taken from the tariff bill that was laid over by the Senate. How that is I do not know. No Senator has examined it; no committee has examined it. It covers but one single interest under the tariff bill, and that is the woolen interest, leaving out all others. Now, sir, if we are to have a tariff bill let us have one that unites all interests, and not a bill picking out one interest that may be of consequence to some particular section of the country and leaving all others unprovided for, especially at this time, when we are certainly not in a fit state to give it any consideration and cannot know anything about it. I hope it will not be taken up. I think it would be very wrong.

Mr. WADE. I am very sorry to hear an objection coming from that quarter as to the sectional operation of this tariff bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I said nothing about its being sectional at all.

Mr. WADE. You said it only affected certain sections.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I said it only affected certain interests.

Mr. WADE. Now, sir, this bill, I am told, and have no doubt, by gentlemen that have compared it and know all about it, is a literal transcript from the other tariff bill on the subject of wools and woollens.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. WADE. I am telling you how I know it. I have not compared it myself; but I am so told by gentlemen who, I have every reason to believe, tell me the truth. I have run my eye over it, as I did over the other bill. It reads to me like the other bill, and I have no doubt it is the same thing. Now, sir, this is about the only attempt that has been made at any time to protect the agricultural interest of the Northwest and other sections. That interest has become an immense interest in all the northwestern part of the country; and this bill undoubtedly would be of the highest importance and greatest advantage to the wool-growers of that region of the country; and thus, in my judgment, it would enhance the interests of every other part of the country; for I never argue these questions as sectional ones; I do not believe they are. I am not one of those who talk about New England having particular benefits in this way. I am glad that they have, and I always aid, so far as I can, in it.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to make an appeal to the Senator from Ohio and the Senate. We are to adjourn at twelve o'clock, and if this bill is going to excite discussion, a few speeches upon it will consume the whole time remaining, and there are a few bills that can be disposed of by unanimous consent, which everybody is willing should pass. I am in favor of the measure which the Senator from Ohio has charge of; I do not know whether I am in favor of that particular bill or not; but if it is going to be discussed and opposed, we shall lose that and a number of small bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. WADE. I am not going to argue at length, especially on the question of taking it up. I know, as the gentleman says, we have not a great length of time, although, in another sense, we have all the time there is, if we see fit to occupy ourselves with it. There is no absolute necessity of our adjourning at a moment's warning. If there are any interests to be protected by our staying a little after twelve o'clock, the House has passed a resolution extending the session until four and a half o'clock, and we can concur in that, which would give us ample time to pass this bill. I have no doubt that it would be of the highest benefit to the whole country, and especially to that part of the country from which I and many others come. I was in hopes that it would be permitted to pass without any particular objection. I know very well that anybody can defeat this bill if he sees fit to do so. It depends upon the view gentlemen take upon it. It is no time for me to argue it. I know that it is in the power of anybody to defeat it by his mere ipse dixit if he chooses. I think it would be very ungenerous to do it and very detrimental to the interests of the country. The House has taken great pains to get up the bill with a view to do some degree of justice to the people on this subject. That is all I have to say about it. I leave it in the hands of the Senate to do as they please.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Ohio to let this measure be laid aside in order to permit me to take up House bill No. 801, providing for the distribution of the rewards for the captors of the assassins of Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward. I trust that the Senator will allow that measure to be taken up. It affects nearly five hundred soldiers, giving them small amounts. The subject has undergone the revision of the Judge Advocate General, of the Assistant Adjutant General of the Army, of a committee of the House of Representatives, and of the House of Representatives. The bill to which I refer has passed the House and been reported regularly from the committee of the Senate, who have examined it as critically and as attentively as they could, and it seems to me to be the wisest award that could be made. I hope, therefore, that the Senator will permit it to be taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island. I think we ought not to let that bill be hung up during our vacation. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. HOWARD. I think so, too.

Mr. WADE. The question is on taking up this bill. Let us decide one thing at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as an opportunity offers.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must express some little astonishment at the proposition of the Senator from Ohio to take up a bill of this importance and act upon it within an hour and three quarters of the close of this session. Certainly it is a very ungracious thing to vote against a proposition of this sort, especially where one is representing a constituency interested in it. I have no doubt that something ought to be done on this subject; but when the tariff bill was before us the other day we concluded to postpone it until December, with a view of taking up the whole subject then and disposing of it as it ought to be disposed of; to let the Finance Committee examine it, scrutinize it as it deserves to be, and report to us a bill that will take care of the interests of the people in every section of the country. After having done that, I must express some little astonishment that a bill singling out one particular interest should be brought forward and Congress should be asked to take that one interest into consideration during the last few hours of the session. It is not a sectional interest. New England is interested in it. Vermont is, perhaps, one of the largest wool-growing States of the Union. I know that Ohio is interested in it. I know that Wisconsin is interested in it. I know that my own State is interested. But, sir, I do not think the people who are deeply interested in the growth of wool will expect us within two hours of the close of the session to mature a measure of this importance; and I do hope that Senators will not press a measure of such vast importance upon our consideration at this hour. It ought to be carefully examined by a committee and reported to this body. Now, sir, when you have secured this one interest I should like to know, when other interests are taken up next winter, how those interests can expect anything more than simple stern justice at the hands of this particular interest that has already been protected. I think it is better to take them up altogether and consider them. I cannot understand this bill. It has not been printed, as I understand. It is a bill of ten pages, which has not been printed, and it is expected that we shall act upon a tariff measure on a mere reading at the Secretary's desk. Why, sir, such a thing is unheard of. It cannot be expected of Senators that we shall consider it.

Mr. HOWE. Of course the Senator from Missouri is entirely right in saying it would be impossible for us to mature a bill upon a question as important as this in an hour and three quarters. The advantage of this measure is that it was matured more than twelve months ago, has been pending, has been reported by two committees, passed one House, twice been reported by the Finance Committee in this body, as I understand. ["Oh, no."] This is the same bill precisely, as I understand.

Mr. WILSON and Mr. HENDERSON. They did not report it.

Mr. HOWE. They reported the tariff bill, did they not?

Mr. HENDERSON. Never that I heard of.

Mr. HOWE. It was postponed, then, before it was considered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill was brought in and read at the desk, and the Presiding Officer said it would be referred to the Committee on Finance; but the gentleman himself said "No, let it lie on the table." It never went before the committee and they have not seen it.

Mr. HOWE. I know this identical bill in this shape never went to your committee; but this is, as I understand, copied from the tariff bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So some people say, but we do not know anything about it. It is no way to legislate upon what somebody says. There is no member of the Senate who has read it.

Mr. HOWE. I suppose that can be made certain in a very short time. I did not understand that any Senator here wanted the bill referred to the Finance Committee. I did not hear any request for a reference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the ordinary course, but the Senator objected and had it laid on the table. I supposed he would have it taken up again and referred.

Mr. HOWE. That is the ordinary but not the invariable course.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Always. I never knew of a tariff bill, large or small, that was not referred.

Mr. HOWE. I cannot recall an instance myself; but a bill of this kind affecting only one subject, and that a subject which has been before the country so long as this has, and discussed so extensively and widely as this has, I suppose might very well be made an exception of, inasmuch as nobody asked to have it referred. The Presiding Officer did remark, as is usual, that the bill would be referred to the Finance Committee; and supposing the Committee on Finance did not care to consider it, I thought it was just as well that it should lie on the table until we could take it up. This I understood to be the fact; that it is a transcript of the provision on this subject which passed the House in the tariff bill and came to the Senate some time ago. I understand that that measure was matured upon consultation with those most familiar with it and most deeply interested in it, the manufacturers and the growers of wool.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And the consumers.

Mr. HOWE. How far the consumers have been consulted I do not know; but we understand, in reference to this interest, that they represent the consumers also.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope Senators will let us take up some bill. If we occupy the whole time with debating the question of whether we shall take up this bill we shall not take up any.

Mr. HOWE. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate. I hope, under these circumstances, that the Senate will act on this bill.

Mr. WADE. It is objected that it is very uncertain what the provisions of this bill are and where it originated, and a great deal of mystery is cast over it. Sir, there is nothing in that. You passed bills to-day that you never read; that you know nothing about. There is that military bill which not a Senator here, except the gentleman who reported it, knows anything about. You took his word for it; and so it is with most of the proceedings of the Senate at this time. These important bills come in here, and we rely upon the information given us by some two or three gentlemen who are on a committee of conference; we know nothing about them; and we are very safe in taking their word, for they never deceive us about it. Mr. BINGHAM, a gentleman who is perfectly competent to deal with this subject, a very prudent man, carefully transcribed this bill from the other bill, and informs us that this is just as it was in the other bill that you are all acquainted with. We know as much about it as we do of anything else. You may give it the go-by if you will; but I trust the Senate will consider it.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to suggest that the rules require this bill to be read at length, and any Senator can take the tariff bill which was before us some time ago, while this bill is being read, and ascertain while it is being read whether it is a transcript of the other bill or not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The honorable Senator from Ohio says that we know as much about this bill as we do about anything else.

Mr. WADE. About the military bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. "About anything else" was the closing remark.

Mr. WADE. Very well; have it so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I have to say is, that that remark unquestionably is true, as applied to himself, but I will thank him not to apply it to me. Now, sir, what is the argument of the gentleman? A tariff bill containing some eight or ten pages, not taken from any particular place in the tariff bill that was under discussion, if it is taken from it at all, because matters in relation to wool and woollens were scattered all through the length and breadth of that bill, comes in here on the last day but one before the close of the session, with all these provisions in it. It is laid on the table; it is not referred to a committee; and it is called up an hour and a half before the time fixed for the adjournment, after we have been up all night acting upon the business of this session, and the demand is made that all other business, to which there is no objection, must stop, if there is any other business, that this may be taken up and discussed; and on what authority? There is not a man in this body who pretends that he has read the bill or knows what is in it. The gentlemen themselves who are in favor of taking it up and passing it do not pretend that they know what is in it or that they have read it; and yet the Senate of the United States is now called upon to pass an important tariff bill containing all these provisions, many of them intricate provisions, at this time. I have cast my eye over them. Many of them I cannot understand at all, and are entirely new in relation to this matter, not such as we have had before us. But we are asked, on the information that Mr. BINGHAM, a member of the House, considers it the same bill, to act upon that sort of information, and pass an important bill within an hour and a half of the close of the session.

Mr. HOWARD. I was about to suggest to my friend from Maine that we will not take up the bill about which he is speaking, and I beg that we may take a vote upon the motion, so that we may afterward take up the bill distributing the rewards among the captors of Booth and the other assassins.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. WADE. Give us a vote upon it. I object to its being laid aside without a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is argued that this bill ought to be taken up at this time because it is a copy of some portions of the tariff bill. That tariff bill has never been read in the Senate, never been considered in the Senate, and never any part of it approved by the Senate. It never went to the Committee on Finance. Just as quick as it was brought in from the House a motion was made to postpone it until December next, and it was so postponed. I never examined it I know. It is no argument to say this is copied from that bill unless the argument is conclusive that because the House has passed a bill the Senate must pass it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Maine said that no Senator in this body had read this bill. I must correct him as to that fact. I have read it myself carefully, because it interests my constituents. I do not claim from that that the Senate ought to take my say-so as to what it contains; but the bill has been of sufficient interest to me to cause me to study it, so that, so far as my means of action go, I am perfectly ready and willing to pass it. I only mention this to correct the Senator as a matter of fact, but not as asking the Senate to act on my information.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was mistaken in my recollection as to the tariff bill when it first came in here. Before it was referred to the Committee on Finance, before any motion was made to refer it, a motion was made to postpone it to the next session of Congress, and it never came to the Committee on Finance of this body, and has never been examined in that committee. We do not know what is in it. We have had no chance to examine any part of it; and everybody conceded, a great many members of the House conceded and hoped that the Committee on Finance would examine it and correct its many errors before it was suffered to pass this body. The argument in favor of taking up this bill is that it is copied verbatim from that bill which we never saw!

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; let us pass the bill about the assassination awards first.

Mr. CONNESS. We will not remain long in executive session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You had better withdraw that motion, and let us take a vote on this question.

Mr. CONNESS. If you will come to a vote, I will.

Mr. WADE. Let us have a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOWE. I just want to correct—

Mr. CONNESS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no occasion to renew it. It is already made.

Mr. HOWE. I want to correct the Senator from Maine, and I want to ask him—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is, Shall the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not withdrawn.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not want to withdraw it if this question is to be further discussed; but if we can come to a vote I will withdraw it. Everybody knows whether he is willing to take this bill up or not.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to lay the pending motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not before the Senate in a way to be laid on the table. The motion before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from California, to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. I withdraw it if the Senate will come to a vote.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now renew my motion. Mr. HOWE. I will give way to a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill is not up. How can it be laid on the table?

Mr. SHERMAN. As a question of parliamentary law any member has a right to move to lay a pending motion on the table, and there is no exception to that except a motion to adjourn or to go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the opinion of the Chair which was given some days since, although with some hesitation, and the Chair will continue to follow that decision. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is to lay the pending motion, which is the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 793, on the table. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. WADE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg leave to say that while I presume I am in favor of this bill, I shall vote to lay the motion on the table from the utter impossibility of considering it at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. I am in favor of laying this motion on the table, but I think the motion to do so is utterly unparliamentary, and I shall therefore vote against it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conness, Creswell, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Edmunds, Howe, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sherman, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—17.

So the motion was agreed to.

NORMAN WIARD.

The bill (H. R. No. 818) for the relief of Norman Wiard was read twice by its title.

Mr. WADE. I ask the Senate to put that bill upon its passage now. Mr. Wiard is a gentleman, as is well known to most Senators, who has made great sacrifices on the subject of guns and in his inventions, and very useful ones in the Navy, which have been of great advantage to the country. The Government now owe him a large debt and he is suffering for the want of it. He is a bankrupt and used up. The House, in consideration of the great merits of this man, for what he had done, passed this bill, in a hurry to be sure; but it is perfectly just, and, as I believe, does not contain a tenth part of the amount that is justly due him. I hope that the Senate will consider it at once. They may think it is sudden, and they may say they want time to consider it further; and if they do I shall not deny that the request is reasonable enough; but I believe that Mr. Wiard is suffering very much for some portion of the very large debt that is undoubtedly due him, and I hope at this late period of the session this House bill will be suffered to pass. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I must object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill cannot be considered.

ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now renew the motion to take up House bill No. 801.

Mr. CONNESS. Has not that bill been reported to-day?

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir; yesterday.

Mr. CONNESS. Did it not come from the House to-day?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward.

Mr. CONNESS. Is not one objection sufficient to arrest the consideration of that bill to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. CONNESS. When did it come into the Senate?

Mr. HOWARD. It came here yesterday, and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and has been reported back from that committee.

Mr. CONNESS. Was it not reported back to-day?

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I submit to the Chair whether this is not the same day on which that bill was reported. There has been no adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not the same, in the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. CONNESS. There has been no adjournment. I submit the question as a question of order to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it came from the House on the 27th of July.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I submit that, according to our days, the 27th of July does not expire, unless there be an adjournment, until noon of the 28th. On the 3d of March we continue in session until twelve o'clock on the 4th, and it has been so settled by the practice of the Government, unless there is an adjournment. We have had no adjournment, and the Journal will show that all the business we are now doing is done on the 27th. I think that is the way the Journals have always been kept, unless there is an adjournment.

Mr. McDUGALL. If that be so I should like to understand it definitely. It is a strange thing to me if our adjournment stands on the 27th.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Certainly. It is always so on the 3d of March. The 3d of March reaches to twelve o'clock on the 4th. The session of to-day does not begin until twelve o'clock. That is the standing rule of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. The Clerk corrected the Journal. The Senator from Maine moved that the Senate take a recess this morning until nine o'clock, but the Journal was corrected, so that it reads that the Senate adjourned at seven o'clock to meet at nine o'clock to-day; so that this is the next day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My motion was to take a recess from seven until nine o'clock.

Mr. HOWARD. I should like to know what is before the Senate. Will the Chair decide the question of order?

Mr. POMEROY. I was in the chair, and the motion of the Senator from Maine was corrected so as to make it an adjournment instead of a recess, because it seemed to be necessary, as we had agreed to adjourn on to-day, that we should have a session to-day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The record stands corrected then, does it?

Mr. POMEROY. The Journal is correct.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The question as to when the day ends was settled by a decision under Fillmore's administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill before the Senate will be read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before that is done I ask permission to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it, if there be no objection.

SOLDIERS' INCOME TAX.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I found in the room of the Committee on Finance a joint resolution, which was sent there yesterday, entitled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby. We have had no time to examine it, and I ask leave to report it back and it may lie on the table, unless gentlemen, in consideration of their love for the soldiers, appeal to us to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table, no objection being made.

Mr. WADE. I move that we proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The award bill is before the Senate.

Mr. WADE. Let us pass this bill exempting pensions from taxation.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This is far more important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered at the present time.

ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of House bill No. 801, authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. HOWE. I will submit a motion which I suppose is in order without the reading of the bill, and that is, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the first Monday in December next. That motion is in order, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill provides for the distribution of a sum of money which was promised by the Government of the United States to the captors of the murderers of Abraham Lincoln and also to the captors of Jefferson Davis. The money is acknowledged to be due, and it is due to soldiers every one of whom spent days and nights of faithful labor in earning this reward promised by the Government. The award has been made by the concurrence of the legislative and military authorities after the most critical examination that was ever made of any claim. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives after a full debate; and now for us to deny these men this justice, it seems to me, is very harsh treatment. I have seen within two days some of these soldiers about the galleries, who have been waiting here for this little sum of money; in some cases only $250, in some cases $150. One of those soldiers bears two wounds upon his body; he is pale and emaciated; he has not got five dollars in his pocket; and yet his brain and activity captured Booth; and he is now here awaiting the action of this body on this claim. I do not believe there is on the Calendar a more meritorious claim to a more deserving set of persons, or a claim as just and well founded as this. I hope that the Senate, as the last act of this session, will do justice to this class of people. All the beneficiaries except one, and that is Mr. Baker, are men who are poor and need this money, and delay is very harsh and severe treatment to them. Many of them are soldiers of Ohio, Michigan, and Indiana; the great body of them, I believe, from the State of Michigan. It seems to me but an act of justice, and I hope the Senate will pass the bill. The great bulk of the bill consists simply of the names of soldiers and the amounts set opposite their names. The bill is not a very long one with the exception of the list of names, which nobody can desire to have read unless it be for the mere consumption of time.

Mr. HOWARD. I really hope that the Senate will not postpone this bill, but that they will take it up and pass it. I think simple justice requires that we should proceed with it and distribute the rewards which have been honestly earned by these officers and soldiers, so that they may know what is theirs. There are many of them who are necessitous. I am well acquainted with the gentleman to whom the Senator from Ohio refers. I know him to be a brave and honest and honorable officer. He is deserving of the money; he is now waiting for it; he is poor, languishing even now under the wounds he received in the service, needing this money to pay his honest debts and even to pay his fare to get out of the city. I hope the bill will not be postponed.

Mr. HOWE. I have no sort of objection to the amount of this award paid for the capture of Booth and his accomplices being distributed to-day or to-morrow or any other day. I have no interest in it and care nothing about it. I do not know but that that award has been carefully considered; I do not know but that it is just; but this bill distributes another sum of money awarded for the capture of Jefferson Davis.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to say to the Senator that the gentleman who made this report, Mr. DELANO, my colleague in the House, suggested to me that if there was any question about the distribution of the reward in regard to the capture of Jefferson Davis, that, which is the bulk of the bill, might be stricken out, if you could do it in time to send it back to the House to concur in the amendment, leaving that distribution to come up hereafter. The persons interested in that award are not here, but at a distance, while the others are soldiers employed about here and lying in wait for this money. If the Senator desires that course, I should be sorry for it, but still I am willing that he should make such an amendment.

Mr. HOWE. If that part of it can be stricken out, I have no objection to make to the passage of the residue of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Move to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Let it be stricken out.

Mr. HOWE. Very well; proceed with the bill and let that amendment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to postpone is withdrawn.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that by unanimous consent the reading of the names be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

Mr. HOWE. Now, if the Clerk can report that part of the bill which refers to the capture of Mr. Davis I will submit a motion.

The SECRETARY. "For the capture of Jefferson Davis: to private Cornelius Carroll, $166 76 7/8—"

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words read and all succeeding, including the names of the soldiers who are to share in that award.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to amend the bill by striking out what will now be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is hardly necessary to read all the names. There are some two or three hundred of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill be amended by striking out that portion of it which provides for payments to the captors of Jefferson Davis.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope that amendment will not be made. This reward was offered by proclamation of the President of the United States, and the capture was made by three or four hundred men of the Army, and the award was made pro rata. It is a just claim against the Government of the United States. The reward was solemnly offered, and the award was properly and judiciously made, as I believe. I trust the bill will not be amended.

Mr. HOWE. I understood it was agreed that that should be struck out. I will simply say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I have examined the question very carefully myself, and I have the most thorough conviction that only a small portion of the parties who did capture Jefferson Davis share in this award. Two different bodies of men were employed in that arrest, a part of the fourth Michigan cavalry and a detachment of the first Wisconsin cavalry. Some six hundred men, as I believe, of the fourth Michigan cavalry were employed in the capture of Mr. Davis, and some hundred and odd men of the first Wisconsin cavalry. Now, of those who share in the award, the whole of the first Wisconsin cavalry is omitted, and about half of the Michigan cavalry. There are some very remarkable facts connected with this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there ought to be no controversy about that. The chairman of the House committee told me that in regard to the awards for the capture of Jefferson Davis, they took the report of the military commission on that subject, they had not the means of making a personal examination; but I will vote with the Senator to strike that out, if there be objection to it. Let the motion be put, and I think it will be agreed to. That is a controverted matter. I do not think it ought to embarrass the passage of the rest of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. In the hope that the bill will pass, even with this clause stricken out, I shall vote for striking it out; but I beg to say at the same time that the claims of the Michigan soldiers and those of Wisconsin have been very fully and thoroughly examined by a military commission with a view to the distribution of the reward, and this bill is based entirely upon the finding of that commission. I suppose that they examined the whole subject fairly and candidly and equitably, and we have before us the result which is contained in the bill. But in order to save something at the present session, I am willing to have that portion of the bill stricken out, so that at the coming session of Congress we may call up the subject in relation to the captors of Jefferson Davis. I do not regard this vote as prejudicial in any way to the claims of these men, or as settling the question between the Michigan and Wisconsin soldiers in that behalf, but merely for the purpose of saving the rest of the bill.

Mr. McDUGALL. Without discussing the question as to the rewards for the capture of the assassins of the late President, who was my personal friend, I desire to remark that this whole subject has been trifled with. What was promised has not been performed; and men have been compelled to remain here dancing attendance upon the Government who were promised high favors for their achievements. I wish to express my sorrow and indignation at the want of prompt action on the part of the Government in doing what they had promised to do, and which they are bound to do, and which they are not doing now upon half of the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion before the Senate is that that portion of the bill proposing a reward for the captors of Jefferson Davis be stricken out of the bill.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like some Senator to give the Senate some assurance that Abraham Lincoln's murderer was in fact killed. I have never seen myself any satisfactory evidence that Booth was killed.

Mr. HOWARD. In order to prove it demonstratively, perhaps we should be compelled to send for Boston Corbett, who shot him. I suppose the honorable Senator is speaking of Booth.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit to my friend from Kentucky that there are some things that we must take judicial notice of, just as well as that Julius Caesar is dead.

Mr. DAVIS. I would rather have better testimony of the fact. I want it proved that Booth was in that barn; I cannot conceive, if he was in the barn, why he was not taken alive and brought to this city alive. I have never seen anybody or the evidence of anybody that identified Booth after he is said to have been killed. Why so much secrecy about it? Why was not his body brought up publicly to Washington city and exposed to the gaze of the multitude, that it might be identified? It may be that he is dead; but there is a mystery and a most inexplicable mystery to my mind about the whole affair. He may come back some of these days and murder somebody else. [Laughter.]

I merely got up to make this suggestion. I supposed that some gentleman was in possession of facts going to show that Booth was identified. Identify Booth, and these men ought to have their reward, but I doubt whether this man Baker ought to have anything. I believe he was a much bigger villain than any man he was pursuing. I do not doubt that at all; and I believe he is just such a man as to get up now a story of the capture of Booth when Booth had not been overtaken at all. [Laughter.] If gentlemen will refer me to where I can get a narrative of facts to prove the identity of Booth, I will at my leisure read it with much interest. I want to be assured of the facts, not with a view to vote on this bill but with a view to the history of the transaction.

I do not see why, if Booth was in the barn, he should have been shot. He could have been captured just as well alive as dead. It would have been much more satisfactory to have brought him up here alive and to have inquired of him to reveal the whole transaction, to have implicated all who were guilty and to have exculpated all who were innocent. I do not see any reason why the matter had not taken that course. Bring his body up, carry it to the City Hall, expose it there to public gaze, let all who had seen him playing, all who associated with him on the stage or in the green room or at the taverns and other public places, have had access to his body to have identified it. That was the way, where $100,000 was offered as a reward for capturing the man. I am certain I was as innocent of that murder as the child that is yet unborn; but I should have disliked to have $100,000 offered for me as an accomplice in that murder; it would have caused me to be hung or shot just as certain as fate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNESS. That would be a big price. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt that the honorable Senator from California could have had me captured or shot for $2 50 by some of his myrmidons. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I am happy to relieve my friend from Kentucky by informing him that a small part of the skeleton of Booth is in the anatomical museum of the Surgeon General.

Mr. JOHNSON. Who knows that?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know how it is identified, but it is certified to be that.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope we shall have the question.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SPRAGUE, the title was amended by striking out the words "Jefferson Davis and."

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to take up the resolution which came from the House extending the time of adjournment. It will take some hours to finish the enrollment of bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, received yesterday from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the present session of Congress be, and hereby is, extended until Saturday, the 28th instant, at four and a half o'clock p. m.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am notified by the Clerk of the House that the enrolling of the several bills that have been passed and comparing them, cannot possibly be got through with in less than from two and a half to three hours. In addition to that, there is a very large number of bills before the President, and some he cannot get for some hours: so that, in the opinion of the Clerk of the House, four and a half o'clock is the earliest hour which we can safely fix for an adjournment. I therefore move a concurrence in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York;

An act (S. No. 43) to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen;

An act (S. No. 353) for the relief of the trustees and stewards of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians;

An act (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 131) for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine.

NEUTRALITY LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 806, in regard to the neutrality laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no such bill on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be taken up.

Mr. POMEROY. It cannot be considered to-day if there is any objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know whether this motion is made in earnest.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is made in good faith, as I always act.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says it is made in good faith. Then I am obliged to say to the Senator that he cannot expect to pass that bill unless after a debate that must extend beyond our session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to extend the session long enough to give time to pass this bill. I want to pass it.

Mr. SUMNER. I dare say the Senator is willing to extend the time, but the Senate, I think, will not be willing. Others must be consulted besides the honorable Senator. I am not disposed to enter into this discussion now, unless it be necessary. I think it is hardly advisable for us to open it.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope we may pass some bills that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that would be a more profitable employment of our time.

Mr. POMEROY. If the committee be discharged from the bill, one objection will throw it over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; we excuse the committee for the purpose of proceeding to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. But it cannot be considered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. NYE. We can pass the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a very important bill, and I hope we shall pass it before we adjourn.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a privileged question. I move that Hon. David T. Patterson, Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, be permitted to qualify according to the Constitution and laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator-elect will come forward and take the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

Mr. PATTERSON stepped to the desk, and the prescribed oaths having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 188) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 265) to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

FENIAN MEETINGS.

Mr. WILSON. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia House joint resolution No. 208, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the use of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Fair building in Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was read.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL. There is a preamble to the resolution reciting certain facts of which I am entirely ignorant. I ask if any gentleman here can certify that they are correctly recited.

Mr. CONNESS. It is all right.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is satisfactory.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that the resolution be read for information. I happened to be out for a moment and do not know what it is.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas this House has been informed that certain peaceable and law-abiding citizens, while assembled at and within the building recently erected in this city for the benefit of orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors of the United States, situate on the corner of Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, have been illegally and improperly dispersed by the mayor of this city for the alleged reason that they belonged to a Fenian organization, and thus prevented from exercising their rights and privileges as citizens of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said citizens are hereby authorized, whenever permitted so to do by the Speaker of this House or the President of the Senate, to use and to occupy said building for the purpose of holding public meetings for every proper and lawful purpose, and particularly in reference to the liberation of Ireland.

Mr. JOHNSON. This seems to me to be a singular resolution. It proposes to appropriate a public building of the Government for the meetings and discussions of those who are called Fenians, whose avowed purpose it is to make war upon England. You might as well give them the use of this Capitol for the same purpose. I think England will have good reason to complain of such conduct. Whether she acted toward us during our domestic troubles in a spirit consistent with absolute neutrality is one question. Whether, if she did not, we are thereby justified in acting toward her in a like spirit is a question which, in my judgment, touches our national honor. I do not think that in the career of the United States their name has ever attained a higher eminence in the estimation of the world than because of the recent steps taken by the Executive to prevent outrages upon the possessions of England, outrages prohibited by laws coeval almost with the Government, emanating in the patriotic foresight of Washington, draughted by Hamilton, and afterward continued in 1813—laws which have eminently contributed to preserve the peace and maintain the true honor of the United States.

The only just influence which we can have upon the other nations of the world is in the example of our own free institutions, the moral influence consequent upon those institutions, the persuasive influence with which they appeal to the approval of mankind. But such influence will be very materially impaired, instead of promoted, if we suffer within our territorial limits any assemblage of men for the purpose of warring against a nation with which we are at peace, and a nation which now acknowledges, as we have recently seen, not only through the ministry which have just gone out of power, but through the ministry which have just been inducted into power, their admiration of the conduct of the United States; and an admiration expressed in such terms as satisfies me that the time is near approaching, if it is not now at hand, when England will wake up to her own default, if she was guilty of a default, as we think she was, in preserving her neutrality, and repair all the damages consequent upon that default.

The whole European world is now in a state of convulsion. When it is to end, how far it is to extend, we are unable now to tell; but in my judgment it is the true interest of the United States, because it is connected with the true honor of the United States, that we should abstain from doing or suffering to be done any act which shows that we are willing in any way to participate in the struggles. We have happily emerged from one of our own, not only unharmed in physical and moral strength, but (greatly to our happiness and good name) with both much enhanced; and here let us firmly stand. Those citizens who come from other nations to seek protection and happiness under our flag, owe it to duty, to the Government that has received and protected them, that they take no step inconsistent with the laws of the United States. Change the laws, if you think proper, but as long as they remain they should and will be vindicated by the whole power of the United States. What that power is the past four years have exhibited to an astonished world.

Our fearful strife is ended, and now our first and paramount duty, instead of pursuing a course which may involve us in difficulties with foreign nations, is to heal our own disorders, to conquer as rapidly as we can the prejudices which have arisen out of them, and to make ourselves what we were under the Administration of Washington and for many years afterward, brothers. A sacred duty this is, a duty which, fully performed, will challenge the admiration of the civilized world. Let us satisfy mankind that the peace of other nations shall not be endangered by any acts contrary to the obligations that our citizens owe to our Constitution and laws.

The language of the resolution before the Senate is that those who think proper, those who suppose—whether correctly or not, in my judgment, is immaterial—that they have suffered wrongs in their persons or in the persons of their ancestors which they ought to redress or avenge, may use a public building of ours to assemble in to inaugurate or advise such proceedings as they may think proper, looking to the attainment of that object. To authorize this by congressional action is to say to the world that here, within the limits of the United States, our laws are not considered as obligatory. England, with all her faults—and nobody is more persuaded than I am that prior to the war of 1812 and after its termination, and recently during our domestic troubles, she has committed faults—England is the only constitutional Government now upon the face of the habitable globe, except our own, where personal liberty and personal rights are maintained. I would regard, therefore, with great distrust, under any circumstances, any effort to revolutionize a Government of that description; but I would especially regret that we, Senators of the United States, sworn to support our Constitution and the laws which have been passed in pursuance of it, should encourage assemblages of people, whether native or alien, whose avowed object is to violate the very laws which we are sworn to support.

Politicians who suppose or act as if they supposed that mere party is patriotism, who think or seem to think that temporary success is permanent fame, may lend themselves to encourage lawless proceedings, and may be found professing friendship for and alluring on an impulsive class who, smarting under the injustice they honestly believe has been done them and their ancestors in their native land, are tempted to violate our laws or disregard our national duty in order to obtain voters at a coming election; but such motives cannot, for they should not, influence statesmen. It is their almost sacred province to maintain against all sinister or misleading appliances the Constitution and laws of their country inviolate, to frown on all efforts in disregard of either, to prevent them, if that can be done, and enforce the laws, if that becomes necessary.

Honor is as essential to a nation as to an individual. Lost to either, the immediate result is character impaired, and if not soon vindicated and redeemed the consequence sooner or later is ruin.

Mr. NYE. I am a little at a loss to know why this resolution has aroused the ire of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.] It is simply a question whether citizens of this country shall have the right to assemble together for peaceful purposes within the boundaries of the capital of this nation. In the discussion of that question the distinguished Senator has seen fit to inform us what England is going to do in the future in regard to the wrongs she has done us in the past. I believe that the time of the Senate could not be better occupied in the few hours that remain than by taking up the House bill to amend the neutrality laws and passing it here. It presents, in all its features, just such a law as England has in regard to us. I am at a loss to know from what facts, past or present, the distinguished Senator draws the conclusion that England will be magnanimous and do unto us what she ought to do for the wrongs she has inflicted upon us. He must remember, I remember vividly, that not long ago at St. Albans, in Vermont, outrages were perpetrated by armed men who found protection under the British flag, and that British authorities refused to surrender them to us for punishment for the wrongs they had done. I remember that under the protection of the British Government, but a few months since, conspirators against the life of this nation plotted all manner of outrages upon our people, even to poisoning at the fountain the water we drink. When the English Government and the English laws were appealed to we obtained no redress.

Sir, in this matter the policy pursued by the mayor of this city is not the policy which has been pursued by this Government in regard to any nationality, and especially in regard to the struggles of the South American republics. Instead of the Senator from Maryland having any sympathy for the downtrodden Irish, his sympathy all goes out toward the strong, the defiant, I had almost said the impudent, spirit that England has manifested toward us. Sir, I sympathize with any people, white or black, that are struggling for freedom. The example of this country, its institutions, its attractive beauties, have almost depopulated Ireland; and her people, coming here and breathing the air of this free Republic pant for the freedom and independence of their native land, so long ago wrested from them. Shall we defer to the wishes of England after the exhibition she made during our troubles, when her almost every workshop was busy with the labor of the mechanic fitting out and arming piratical ships to seize upon our merchantmen, and prey upon our commerce? The distinguished Senator from Maryland can see in all this nothing but good will and good intentions toward this Government on the part of England.

Sir, the fact is patent, and he that runs may read it, that England sought the overthrow of this Government, and was the ally of the confederacy and by no means the weakest one. And yet we are told that out of deference to England persons who have fled from her jurisdiction, who have kissed the last tear from off the cheeks of relatives in Erin and turned their backs upon the graves of their ancestors forever, shall not convene in this boasted land of freedom, shall not hold counsel together, shall not return even in memory to the traditions of the former glory of their native land! Away with such affectation! Upon what meat hath this mayor been feeding that he hath grown so great that he can wave his wand and every Irishman must at once hunt his hole? [Laughter.]

Fenianism is not as popular now on the other [Democratic] side as it was. These men begin to find that they have linked their political destinies to the wrong car. The Senator from Maryland justifies the mayor of this city in preventing these people meeting, and he says the law is as old as the District that the mayor should keep order. So it is; but what right had the mayor to assume that this would be a disorderly meeting? Who knew but that it was a meeting to indorse "my policy?" I presume that if it had been it would not have been considered disorderly or worthy of the interruption of the mayor. Sir, I insist that on this little remnant of the former ten miles square, the very hearthstone of this nation, the mayor or any other power shall not assume to say that a meeting is of a disorderly character till it manifests some evidence of it. The Irish had as good a right to convene here now as they had on the 22d of February last; and this meeting was far more orderly than that, and I presume the speaking was quite as good.

I hope this resolution will be passed and the mayor given to understand that, although he is mayor here, and mayor, too, by the voices of the very people whom he disbanded that night, he has no right to thwart or pervert the highest privilege granted to American citizens of peaceably assembling upon any and all occasions for the purpose of conferring together in regard to personal, individual, or collective rights. This outrage has been perpetrated; that cannot be helped; but its recurrence can be prevented, and I insist that it is the duty of Congress to say that right here in their faces such usurpation shall not be tolerated. My friend from Maryland having recently joined the Democratic party, is not fully versed in their traditions and history up to the present time; but heretofore Irishmen could be as thick around the Democracy as they pleased, and not create any alarm; but as soon as they begin to see, when they get nine days old and like young dogs get their eyes open, and think of leaving the Democracy, it is disorderly for them to convene.

It is the duty of this Congress to say that such an outrage shall not occur again. By a resolution of Congress we granted the materials out of which this building was put up for a humane public purpose. It has accomplished that purpose and it is to stand now for the gathering of all parties. If my friend from Maryland should want to speak there, no man would dare to say the meeting would be disorderly. I suppose the building will be kept up at least until after the coming gathering at Philadelphia, to be preserved for a ratification meeting, perhaps. My friend from Pennsylvania

[Mr. COWAN] would not like to have the mayor declare such a meeting disorderly; and the same measure that I would mete out to him I want meted out to any peaceful citizens who desire to congregate there.

There seems to be a great propensity in this District to lord it over somebody. Heretofore they have been able to gratify that spirit by lording it over the blacks. Now, the blacks being free they have taken another race in hand, and attempted to use their power to enslave the tongues and fetter the action of as noble and generous a race as ever breathed. The attempt will fail. Let them see that they cannot gag freedom of speech or liberty of thought.

I hope that the resolution will pass. I am sorry that it has incurred the displeasure and dislike of the distinguished Senator from Maryland. Above all other men in this body, I should have supposed he would be the warmest supporter of such a resolution. I know his great gushing heart must shrink from any such outrage as this; and when he arose I expected to hear him denounce it as it ought to be denounced; but instead of that, lo! he went on to sing pæans to the coming magnanimity of Great Britain. He tells us that we have just emerged from a great struggle. Yes, sir, and England made that struggle more fearful than the rebels themselves. I recommend that our Government make out its account of the millions we suffered at the hands of England and send the Senator as special minister to settle those accounts, he having the confidence he professes to have in Lord Derby. Why, sir, Lord Derby would be as insolent to him as the mayor was to the Fenians. England never did display toward this country one streak of magnanimity that she was not obliged to. We taught her the first lesson of respect to us in the Revolution; we gave her stripe for stripe in the war of 1812; she tried us twice; she does not want a contest with us again. The only way I submit is to clothe my friend from Maryland with full powers of negotiation, and when he has exhausted his arts of persuasion on Lord Derby we will say, "If you do not pay our bill we will make you," and that argument will prevail much quicker and be much more successful than all his arts of persuasion.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have been taken a little by surprise at the reception this resolution has met with. I thought it was a very harmless thing. I wish the Clerk would send it to me. It relates to the use of a certain public building in this city, in this District over which we have the exclusive right of legislation; a building that belongs to the Government of the United States, and is within the control of Congress; and the only disposition it proposes to make of that building in this District is this: "said citizens are hereby authorized, whenever permitted so to do by the Speaker of this House or the President of the Senate, to use and occupy said building." For what? "For any proper and lawful purpose, and particularly in reference to the liberation of Ireland." Upon what clause in this resolution is the indictment against it founded? Is it wrong to permit a public building to be used for holding public meetings? I take it not. Public buildings have been too often and too long appropriated to such uses to be now stigmatized for the same here or elsewhere. Is it founded upon the fact that these meetings are to be held for any proper and lawful purpose? I take it not. If public meetings can be held at all, most assuredly they can be held for proper and lawful purposes. But is it because they are to be held "in reference to the liberation of Ireland?" Is that the gist of the charge made against the resolution? Sir, I put the question to you and the Senate, is it improper or unlawful to hold a public meeting in a public building in the District of Columbia in reference to the liberation of Ireland? Since when was it that it became improper in this country to consider the question of freedom in Ireland or elsewhere? I thought there was one country in the world wherein the question of freedom might be fearlessly discussed and debated, and I did fondly think that one country was the one over which still hang the stars and the stripes, and I continue to cherish that belief.

Sir, is the freedom of Ireland so odious a thing that it may not properly be considered by American citizens, either to the man born or born abroad? I know not myself why the freedom of Ireland should be more odious than the freedom of any other country. I know not myself what license an American citizen has to call freedom anywhere odious.

But if the freedom of Ireland were not a desirable thing in itself, are we bound by any law of right, or of courtesy even, to be so circumspect in reference to what we shall discuss here touching the real or the supposed interests of Great Britain as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] seems to argue? Sir, those four black years when six millions of the American people stood in arms to overthrow the liberties of this country, was England so very circumspect as to what she should do and as to what she should say touching that great controversy? Did it happen to you, sir, did it happen to any Senator on this floor, to hear of any public building within the realm of Great Britain which was not open to the discussion of every question affecting the interests of that great rebellion with which we had to deal? Was there any public building subject to the control of the Government of England in which every sentiment calculated to cheer on that rebellion was not openly applauded to the echo? If there was such a building, I never heard of it.

Mr. President, it was said by the Senator from Maryland in the outset that by the discussion of such simple propositions as this before the Senate we were in danger of weakening the attachment of the American people to their own laws, that we are especially in danger of putting in peril what are known as the neutrality laws of this country, and the Senator from Maryland indulged himself in eulogy upon the achievements of the Administration in recently enforcing those laws. Mr. President, let me say a few words on that point. The Administration did enforce those laws. The Administration is not to be arraigned or condemned for the execution of any law upon your statute-book. For the simple work of executing your laws or enforcing them, this Administration and all Administrations are to be commended and not condemned. But, Mr. President, it does happen that the two parties to that controversy agree in one respect, that the two parties interested in the enforcement of those neutrality laws agree in two particulars. Great Britain says, by the mouths of her leading organs, that the Administration did more than could have been expected of it. The Administration was not bound to do more than to enforce the law of neutrality. That could naturally and reasonably have been expected of it. The London Times says that the Administration did more than could have been expected of it; and while they pour out upon the Administration that praise, the Fenians say that the Administration did a great deal more than they expected of it or had any reason to expect. Upon that point they are agreed, and upon that point I am inclined to think, from what I know, that both are right.

Let me call your attention to a very few incidents connected with that short struggle. I remember that on the 28th day of May—it was Wednesday, I believe—a telegraphic dispatch from Cleveland announced that two companies, I think—I am not sure about the force—two companies of Fenians left the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, armed. That was on the 28th day of May. The country had been rife with rumors that a raid was contemplated on Canada; but the Government made no demonstration to check it. If a force did leave Cleveland for the purpose of invading Canada, that was a violation of our neutrality laws. The Government was notified through the public dispatches of that fact, but the Government did not lift a finger to interfere with it. On the 1st of June the telegraph announced from Buffalo that large parties of Fenians armed were in that city, and that it was rumored an attack was to be made upon Canada that night. But the Government did not move to interfere with it. On the 2d of June the telegraph announced that a party of Fenians had invaded our neighboring Province, but so far as I learn the Government was quiet; at all events, the Government never uttered a word of caution or of admonition against these demonstrations. At the same time the telegraph informed the Government from every quarter of the Union that the Fenians were hurrying armed to the assault, but no word of admonition was addressed to them; the Government never said to them, "You must stand back."

An attack was made; I think on the 2d of June some fighting occurred; I forget the precise dates; but on the 2d or 3d of June we were told that General Meade was proceeding to the frontier and that the steamer Michigan was taking up its position in the Niagara river, and presently we began to learn that detachments of Fenians going to reinforce their brethren on the other side of the river were being arrested; but we heard no word of admonition from the Government itself, the central power.

The controversy went on, and small detachments, amounting, perhaps, to two or three thousand men, having gone across the river, the military force of the Government was deployed upon the boundary line, and all reinforcements were cut off. What then? Of course the small force that had crossed was crushed and dispersed at once. What then? They returned. What then? Your newspapers and your telegraphs were busy detailing to you the incidents of that short and considerable struggle; but it was not until the 7th of June, days after every vestige of the raid was crushed out, that the President of the United States issued his proclamation, telling the Fenians that they must keep the peace and obey the neutrality laws. It seems to me that that was a great deal too late to benefit either the Fenians or Great Britain. Our Army and our Navy had intercepted all reinforcements four days before that; the small detachment that had gone into Canada were utterly crushed; four days before that Fenianism was a mere phantasm; and I cannot, for my life, conceive what good the proclamation did either to Canada, to Great Britain, or to the Fenians. In that sense the London Times might well say that the Government of the United States had done more than could have been expected of it, because while it had uttered no admonition to warn the Fenians from moving on Canada, it had so employed the military force of the country as that Fenianism must be utterly harmless in Canada; and in that point of view the Fenians themselves may be entirely warranted in saying that the Government did a great deal more than they expected, because it did not only all it was required to do by law, but did it under such circumstances as to put them at disadvantage, while it gave no possible advantage to their opponents.

Mr. President, one word more. As to the merits of the Fenian movement I have only this to say: freedom must be as dear a thing in Ireland as in America or elsewhere; Ireland dislikes her union with Great Britain; I am not here to defend or to attack it; but I will say that if Ireland had a representation in the British Parliament proportionate to her population as our rebels had more than the representation which their population entitled them to in the Congress of the Republic, then I should think the effort of Ireland to break up that union was as unjustifiable as was the effort of our rebel States; but she has not that proportionate representation; to the extent that is denied, no man who loves equity and justice and fair dealing can fail to sympathize with Ireland and all who struggle for it. And whatever you may say of the Irish character, I want to say here in my place that I know of no people on God's earth who have given higher evidence of love of country than these very Fenians who, after having abjured their native country as a place of residence because of the oppressions by which they were overborne there, still cling to it, their affections still cluster about it, and you saw them here, three thousand miles from the land of their birth, mustering for it, ready to do and to dare and to die for that country from which oppression drove them years ago. If you can find in the history of the present experience of the world a higher evidence of patriotic love than that, produce it; but till you do find it, give credit to the Irish character for one merit at least—that of patriotism.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, it is a nice thing to use elegant words; it is convenient to use convenient words; it is popular to use popular words. All these things have been accomplished by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Outside of the gentleman from Wisconsin and his companions, Ireland has long been understood. I venture to say that I know more of Ireland than he does. It is difficult for some to comprehend the complicated ideas of a nation. The people of Ireland are to-day a nation; they were a nation ages before the Government of England was established on its present basis. They were the first people who established an organized civilization in what is now known as the empire of Great Britain and Ireland. This fact is well known to all conversant with history. Ignorant people deny it, and ignorant Irishmen sometimes deny it themselves, but it is a fact nevertheless.

That there is a discord between the people of Great Britain and those of Ireland is a fact that all careful observers have noticed; a discord that must be continued; that can only be determined by the establishment of the right; by the sovereignty of Ireland as an independent Government, or by her acknowledgment by England as an independent kingdom, under partial subjection, perhaps, to a common rule. Her people cannot submit to the system under which they have been governed; and therefore they have been driven into far and distant lands; to our own land, if you please. There is no man who has read the tales of their ancient history, who has read the stories of their former fame, who has not wept as he has gone over the tale of savage tyranny imposed on them by Saxon and by Dane from across the sea. Would to God that they might even now, with what assistance they could procure, triumph and establish the Green Isle again as a little empire by itself, independent of Great Britain.

I am no Irishman; if I go to my antecedents I am a Scotchman; but the outrages that have been committed upon Ireland by England are beyond all the outrages that have been perpetrated in modern or middle ages, beginning seven hundred years ago and running down to the time of the Union which was secured by England by the unsparing use of English gold. So English gold is making this fight against Ireland now. It is easier for England to give a hundred thousand pounds ($500,000) to save a fight, and to distribute another hundred thousand pounds among those who help her to achieve a bloodless victory. This is the way she wins her battles.

I wish that Ireland, the beautiful land of Hesperides of the old song, the great, the beautiful island of the western seas, might redeem herself into an independency; and I am for seeing it done, and it will have my full assistance whenever any reasonable proposition shall be made.

I will vote for this resolution to give the building contemplated for the discussions of Irishmen. There is more eloquence in an Irishman than there is in an Englishman, and more than there is in a Yankee anyhow, and more than you will find anywhere about unless you go to Kentucky, and perhaps the Philadelphia convention will bring the Kentuckians out. [Laughter.] This resolution only involves a question of sentiment, but I say let the Fenians have a full show and have a chance here to say what they think.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to have this question disposed of at the earliest possible moment. This resolution came to us from the House of Representatives, where it was introduced by a gentleman from the State of Ohio, distinguished for personal character and for great moderation—I refer to Mr. DELANO. When it came here and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I sent for Mr. DELANO to learn the facts of the case. I learned that he had been waited upon by a deputation of gentlemen who were at this meeting which was broken up or threatened to be broken up in case it did not disperse. The House of Representatives based its action upon this information. So far as I am concerned, wherever I see any people struggling for the restoration of lost nationality or for the enlargement of their own individual rights, no matter to what race they belong, I give them my sympathy and bid them God speed.

In regard to the action of our Government with reference to the late movement in Canada, I do not suppose anybody expected that our Government could do otherwise than enforce its neutrality laws, but in doing that it should not act in an arbitrary manner or violate the rights of the citizen. I do not know that it did that, but it is charged by many of the people interested in that movement that the same action by our Government was pursued on the Canadian frontier that was pursued in the rebel States during the civil war. Whether that be so or not I do not know. So far as England is concerned I have not and never had any affection for her. I was never awed by her splendor or charmed by her power. During the four years of our war her influence was against us, and I must confess that when I saw her anxieties during the last few months I did not suffer any on that account. I hope, sir, that the Senate will pass the resolution as it came from the House of Representatives. I see no reason why it should not be passed. It certainly can do no harm.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will give way, I should like to move an executive session. There are certain messages that ought to be referred.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I yield the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON. I hope my colleague will allow me to call up and put on its passage a little bill which lies on the table that is of a good deal of importance to many soldiers. I am sure no one will object to it.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

SPECIAL INCOME TAX OF 1864.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BESTOR AND McCORD.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 145) for the relief of George C. Bestor and Charles W. McCord. It provides for the organization by the Secretary of the Navy of a board of three competent persons to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war Shiloh, built by George C. Bestor, and Utah, built by Charles W. McCord, and their machinery, cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work; and on the Secretary of the Navy approving the report of the board the amount found due is to be paid, not, however, exceeding twelve per cent. upon the contract price.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ought to state, perhaps, that these parties are just like the other iron-clad contractors for whom we passed a bill, but their contracts were not completed in time for them to go before the board that sat last year on those claims. This resolution provides for an examination by a board, and if the board report favorably, and the Secretary of the Navy approves the report, the amount found due is to be paid, not, however, exceeding twelve per cent., as in the other cases.

The joint resolution was read three times and passed.

INTERNAL TAX ON PENSIONS.

Mr. YATES. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 787.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Chair understands that that bill has not been reported back from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. YATES. I hope it will be read at the desk. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Move to discharge the committee from its further consideration.

Mr. YATES. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 787) exempting pensions from internal revenue tax. It authorizes any person receiving a pension from the United States to deduct, in addition to the $600 now exempted, the amount of such pension in making a return of his or her income required under the internal revenue law.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This question was before the Finance Committee, and they considered it; but they did not deem it proper or wise to make the proposed change. We believed that the income tax laws should be left to stand as they are. If you begin making these exceptions, you will pare them down to nothing, and you will not obtain the necessary income to pay the interest on the public debt. I think the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. YATES. This bill only affects the lame, the disabled, the wounded, and the widows and orphans to whom we have given these pensions, and I do not think the Government ought, in justice, to ask them to pay a tax, and thus take back from them what the Government has already given to them. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution, if it is objected to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was not aware when the title of the bill was read what its character was. I believe it was referred to the Committee on Finance. We considered it in our committee, and I believe were unanimous in the opinion that it ought not to pass. In the first place, there is an exemption of $600 in the law, and $600 is a great deal more than the ordinary run of pensions. This bill, therefore, could only apply to officers of high grade in the Army. There is no need of any such law. It is a mere ad captandum affair. It is very rare that a pension amounts to $600. All under that are exempt; the general law applies to them. If a pensioner happens to have property and that his pension brings up his income to over $600, there is no reason in the world why he should be exempted on the surplus any more than any other citizen. We take it from everybody; we take it from all the officers in the public service, and all the clerks in the Departments. If we give $100 as a bonus or gift to certain clerks in the Departments, five per cent. is taken out of it from day to day. Now, in addition to giving the pensions, if they happen to have property, why should we make pensioners a privileged class and excuse them from the payment of tax on what they have over and above the amount that is exempted by law? All the class of pensions that the Senator refers to are exempt already, because their pensions do not amount to the sum that is by law exempted. There is nothing in this bill except the word "pension" in reality. That is all the charm there is about it. There is no reason why we should select any portion of the community and make them a privileged class to be exempted from the payment of taxes, because the pensioners proper pay none now, and probably never will be able to pay any. Therefore, on principle, as connected with the internal revenue, which it is very dangerous to break in upon, the Committee on Finance thought that, as the thing was useless in point of fact, it would be a dangerous precedent, and we had better avoid it.

Mr. YATES. I simply desire to save the Government from appearing to do an ungenerous thing, a mean thing toward the persons to whom it has granted a pension. It is but a small amount that is given to the soldier or to his widow or orphans, and if the Senator from Maine is correct, the tax will be nothing. The bill was passed in the House unanimously, and I think it would be a compliment to the soldiers to pass it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment; and on the question, "Shall the joint resolution be ordered to a third reading?"

Mr. YATES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Conness, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Davis, Dox- little, Fessenden, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, Morgan, Norton, Nye, Patterson, Poland, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Foster, Fowler, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wright—24.

So the bill was rejected.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that he had approved and signed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith, and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 247) donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell;

An act (S. No. 265) to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. WADE. I wish to make another effort in favor of Norman Wiard, a bill for whose relief has come from the House. I presume the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] will withdraw the objection that he had to the consideration of the bill. Mr. Wiard is a creditor of the Government. He built two light-draught steamers for them to operate on the rivers in the southern country, which were principally used at James Island. The Government purchased them of Mr. Wiard. They have never paid him a dollar of the expense to which he has been subjected. This has entirely broken him down and ruined him and left him almost bankrupt, without any form of relief. Two of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House (Mr. SCHENCK and another member whose name I do not remember)—and I say this because we have not time to investigate this matter in the usual way—came to me and urged upon me, if it was possible, to have this bill passed. They say that the Military Committee of the House have considered it most carefully, and that the amount they have awarded him in the bill that passed the House is certainly his due and ought to be paid; and it would be a cruel thing and, to use their own language, an outrage upon him to withhold it longer. Under these circumstances, although I know nothing about it myself except what they state to me, I appeal to the Senate to let it pass. I have no doubt those gentlemen were perfectly competent to consider it and have considered it well; and I wish, for that reason, that it might be permitted to pass.

Mr. CONNESS. What amount does it call for, I should like to inquire of the Senator.

Mr. WADE. I have not read the bill even. I do not know how much it is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Thirty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. WADE. On a careful investigation they say that is due. They were to pay $50,000 on delivery to the Government, which they never paid, and I believe about $100,000 in all. These gentlemen say, after the most careful consideration, that this sum is undoubtedly his due. I know it would be more satisfactory, if we had time, to allow our Military Committee to review their doings and come to the usual conclusion; but I think the case is a strong one, probably exceptional; and the poor man has got to go off without anything, although the Government is absolutely his debtor, unless you will let the bill pass in this way.

Mr. CONNESS. As I understand it the transactions of Norman Wiard have been principally, if not entirely, confined to the Navy Department or to naval gunnery, and experiments and inventions in connection therewith, and not with the War Department to such an extent, if any. If the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs were present he would be able to tell you all about this case. There is a great deal of it. Mr. Wiard has professed—

Mr. FESSENDEN. One objection carries it over.

Mr. CONNESS. I was explaining rather than objecting, because my purpose was to satisfy the Senator from Ohio that it is a case that ought to be examined. I would be willing to pay Mr. Wiard the last farthing due to him, but I cannot believe, and do not now believe, that the Government owes him a debt. He has professed at various times upon the most scientific principles to present improvements in gunnery, in the construction of heavy ordnance, and I believe the result has been that his experiments have not been successful, and consequently his contributions have not been accepted. There is a great deal in the case. He has published a great many illustrated works. They have been laid on our desks here for three or four years past. His discussions with the Navy Department were about as constant as those of Mr. Dickerson. I mean to run no comparison between them, because my object is not to condemn Mr. Wiard at all. I am not sufficiently informed to have an opinion in the case; but I have a decided opinion that it should be investigated and that it should not be voted upon blindly.

Mr. WADE. If that committee, which is a thorough-going committee to investigate, and very competent to do so, had gone it blind, I should not expect the Senate to adopt their proceedings. But this has nothing to do with gunnery. As they inform me, it is a contract for the purchase of two small war vessels to run up the rivers in the southern States, and they were most instrumental in some of the most successful enterprises we had. It is connected with nothing else, they tell me; it is an amount due upon this transaction. But if gentlemen will not believe them and want further time to investigate it, of course I can do no more.

Mr. CONNESS. It appears that Mr. Wiard is full of these inventions; but they are mostly abortive, I think.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I believe that the gentleman from Ohio has withdrawn his motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not submit any motion.

Mr. SUMNER. I will now insist on my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky was recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

ENTOMOLOGICAL COLLECTION.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the purchase of a certain collection of museum and the transfer of certain funds, therefore by the Commissioner of Agriculture, to report it back without amendment, and I desire to have it acted upon now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution. It authorizes the Commissioner of Agriculture to purchase of Townsend Glover, entomologist of the Department of Agriculture, his collection consisting of specimens of natural history, including modeled fruits, vegetables, fungi, reptilia; also glass cases of porcelain and other flowers, colored plates of insects, noxious and useful, mode of classification, and many other articles and specimens too numerous to mention, but more particularly specified in his communication, dated May 15, 1866, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives; but the Commissioner is to find the same to be a valuable acquisition to the Department of Agriculture, and desirable at the price for which the same can be obtained, which is not to exceed the sum of $10,000; and no purchase is to be made unless it shall be found that the sum required for the purchase can be spared from the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, in which case the Commissioner is authorized to transfer the amount necessary from the appropriations, making due returns thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall object to the consideration of that resolution. It has just been reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Kentucky has had it for some days in his possession, ready to report.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have been trying to report it for two or three days, but I have always been unable to catch the eye of the Chair.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose it can only be read once to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Does the Senator object?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object to its consideration. The Senator from Kentucky asked leave to report it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. That will enable the Senate to consider it. I hope the Senate will agree to consider it and dispose of it now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it a waste of the public money.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing to discuss it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I interpose my objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. My motion to discharge the committee from its further consideration will get rid of that. That dispenses with the rules and brings the subject before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has reported this resolution from the committee. The committee are not in the possession of the resolution; the resolution is before the Senate. The report being made for the first time to-day, and objection being made to the consideration of the resolution, it cannot be acted on to-day.

THOMAS D. BURRALL.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to call up a bill to which there will be no objection. It is House bill No. 591, for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall. It is a little bill that has passed the House of Representatives, and I would be very much accommodated if it were allowed to pass.

Mr. SUMNER. I have made a motion for an executive session.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will give way to allow this bill to be taken up, I shall be very much obliged to him. A friend of mine wrote to me specially to have it passed—an old friend who did me a service when I was a boy. I should like to get it up.

Mr. SUMNER. Is it a good bill?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; a good bill, reported from the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has been proceeding with business by unanimous consent. There is now, properly, another bill before the Senate. The Senator from Nevada can proceed only by unanimous consent. Is there any objection?

Mr. WILSON. I shall object to taking up any patent bills.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be read, and then see if you will object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, it cannot be considered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The treaty with the Cherokees having been confirmed, I desire to call up a resolution which I submitted some time since, and which is on the table.

Mr. STEWART. I think there is no objection to my bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question: Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WILSON. Let it be read, and then objection can be interposed afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being interposed, the bill is before the Senate and will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the letters-patent granted to Thomas D. Burrall on the 6th day of December, 1845, for improvements in corn-shellers, and which was extended by the Commissioner of Patents, and afterward surrendered and reissued, which reissue bears date the 10th day of October, 1855, and which will expire on the 6th day of December, 1866, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the term of seven years, commencing on the said 6th day of December, 1866, and ending on the 6th day of December, 1873, for the benefit of the said Burrall, his heirs, and legal representatives upon the conditions hereinafter set forth. And the Commissioner of Patents is hereby directed, upon the presentation of said patent, and the payment of the fees and charges provided by law, to extend said patent by making a certificate thereon, or upon a certified copy thereof, of such extension in the name of the said Thomas D. Burrall, if in his judgment, upon full hearing, the same should be granted. And the said Commissioner is hereby further directed to cause said extension, if perfected, to be entered on the record of the Patent Office. And the said patent so extended shall have the same effect as if originally granted for the term extending to the end of the term to which it is extended by this act: Provided, however, That said extended patent shall be open to legal inquiry and decision in the same manner as if issued under the general law relating to patents: And provided further, That all persons enjoying the lawful use of the improvements secured by said patent, and the purchaser of any machine so in use, may continue to use the same as if this act had not passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When was that reported?

Mr. STEWART. Two or three weeks ago.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We do not want to pass any patent bills to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Another subject being before the Senate, it can only be proceeded with by unanimous consent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object.

INDIAN RELATIONS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now call up the resolution I submitted some time since declaring simply the opinion of the Senate on the subject of our Indian relations, which I deem necessary to declare for its proper effect upon some of the Indian tribes. It will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate, from the relations existing between the United States and the various Indian tribes which by treaty they are bound to protect from domestic strife, the United States have the right, and it is their duty to intervene to preserve the peace and good order of the same, and, whenever it may become necessary so to do, to separate hostile parties into distinct nations or tribes, and to cause a just division of territory, and to establish separate and exclusive jurisdictions.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I presume there is no objection to the resolution, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

The resolution was adopted.

OFFICE OF SURVEYOR GENERAL OF IOWA.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 491.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 491) to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska. It provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, as soon after the passage of this act as may be, to cause the office of surveyor general of Iowa and Wisconsin to be removed to Plattsmouth, in the Territory of Nebraska, and to make the necessary provisions for immediate and effective operations, and when so removed the duties and jurisdiction of the surveyor general are to be co-extensive with the limits of the Territory of Nebraska, and include the States of Iowa and Wisconsin, and they are to constitute a surveying district.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend this bill in line ten by striking out the final "s" in the word "States," and in line eleven to strike out the words "and Wisconsin."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill to remove the office of surveyor general of the State of Iowa to Plattsmouth, Nebraska."

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented the credentials of Hon. JAMES HARRIS, chosen by the Legislature of Iowa as a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1867; which were read and ordered to be filed.

CAPTAIN JAMES STARKEY.

Mr. NORTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Captain James Starkey, to report it back with a recommendation that it pass, and to ask for its present consideration. It is a very short bill and will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUMNER. What is it?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is a small claim, only $100.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want to hear the bill read first, so that I may know whether to object or not.

The Secretary read the bill, which appropriates $100 to pay to James Starkey, late captain of the St. Paul light cavalry, the amount by him paid to Richard Postel, for the loss of a horse, killed in a fight with Indians in 1857.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there any written report with the bill?

Mr. NORTON. There is a report accompanying the bill from the House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is it a House bill?

Mr. NORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Has it been passed upon by a committee here?

Mr. NORTON. Yes, sir; both here and in the other House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What committee?

Mr. NORTON. The Committee on Claims of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will not object to its consideration. I should like to hear the report, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I shall object.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is a report with the papers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of James Starkey, submit the following report—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall object to it. It did not go to the proper committee. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims and not the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Committee on Indian Affairs had no business with it.

Mr. NORTON. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House, but here it was sent to the Committee on Claims, and has been reported by them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I withdraw my objection again. Let the report be read.

The Secretary continued the reading of the report, as follows:

The committee have examined the case and find the following state of facts: In August, 1857, certain bands of the Chippewa Indians committed some depredations upon the frontier settlements of Minnesota, and a serious outbreak was threatened. To quell the same and restore peace and order Hon. S. Medary, the then Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, ordered out the St. Paul light cavalry, of which James Starkey was captain. This company, under the command of the captain, at once marched to the frontier, and during a fight with the Indians the horse of Richard Postel, a private in said company, was shot and so wounded that it died. Captain Starkey, believing the Government liable to pay for the loss, paid Private Postel $100 in full satisfaction of his claim, and took his receipt. It appears that the horse was worth a much larger sum. The accounts connected with the expedition, and growing out of the same, were afterward sent to the War Department, and most of them, except this, have since been paid. Postel has left the country, and his place of residence appears to be unknown. Under the circumstances, the committee believe the Government was liable to pay Postel the value of his horse, and as Captain Starkey has discharged that liability they can see no good reason why he should not be substituted to the rights of Postel and be repaid the $100.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It strikes me that this is beginning a matter which, if begun, we do not know where it will end. This is really no claim on the Government at all, not the slightest in the world, and it has been so decided, and now Congress is called upon to pay this man because, without authority, he paid a claim which was not a claim against the Government.

Mr. RAMSEY. It is only $100.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have no more right to give away $100 than $100,000.

Mr. RAMSEY. He has been waiting for it for nine years.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It makes no difference about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill cannot be proceeded with except by unanimous consent. Does the Senator object?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir, I object.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SUMNER. Now I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and after spending one hour and twenty-five minutes in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened at twenty-five minutes past two o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 787) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 693) for the relief of Robert Baldwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of the assassins of the late Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution (No. 77) approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the farther payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) authorizing the transmission through the mails free of postage of certain certificates by the adjutant general of New Jersey.

FENIAN MEETINGS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that the House have taken a recess giving the Speaker authority to call them together whenever it may be necessary as messages come in; and unless there is some further business to be transacted, I will make a similar motion here.

Mr. WADE. I desire to have the resolution in regard to the use of the fair building for Fenian meetings disposed of. Let us have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution, which was laid aside to consider executive and other business, is now before the Senate.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the use of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Fair building in Washington.

Mr. STEWART. I am glad that this resolution is offered, not so much for the particular purpose of giving the Fenians a hall, for I presume they can maintain a hall and hold a meeting without this; but after all that has occurred in the last five years on the part of England toward this Government, the unfriendly position she has assumed, taken in connection with the action of this Government toward the Irish people in enforcing the neutrality laws, I think it due to take some action in Congress as expressive of the sentiment of the nation, that we do have sympathy with the Irish rather than with Great Britain that has treated us so badly. I believe there is a warm sympathy on the part of every American in favor of the Irish people, in favor of that desire of liberty which is manifesting itself from year to year on the part of that people, and sympathy with their sufferings for the last two hundred years under the oppressions that have been brought upon them by Great Britain. I believe there is a sympathy in the United States and among all republicans in favor of them and their cause; but the vigorous enforcement at this time of our very severe neutrality laws, of which I am not here to complain, is liable to be misunderstood. Great Britain may come to the conclusion that we are in full sympathy with all her oppressive acts toward Ireland; and I believe that some resolution ought to pass Congress expressive of the proper sentiment of the American people.

I offered a resolution the other day, which I propose when this is disposed of to call up, calling upon the Government to use its good offices in favor of the release of those prisoners in Canada who were taken in the late Fenian raid. I think it no more than right that this Government should use its good offices for the release of those prisoners. They would not have been prisoners in Canada but for the action of this Government. If we had observed the same rules that Great Britain did, if we had administered the same neutrality laws as she did, there would have been no Fenian prisoners in Canada; the Canadians themselves would have been prisoners; that we all know. It was by the armies of the United States that they were enabled to make prisoners of those Fenians; we enforcing our laws and taking from them the burden of defending their own territory. I believe it is not more than right, therefore, that we should now ask Great Britain to release them, and I offered a resolution for that purpose.

I hope this resolution will pass that I may have an opportunity of calling up the other resolution. I think a similar resolution has also passed the House, and perhaps we had better take up the House resolution. I believe this sentiment of the nation should be expressed, and Great Britain should understand it. I think it is wrong that we should stand in a false position before the world and that our sympathies and feelings should be misunderstood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on ordering the resolution to a third reading.

Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Fowler, Harris, Howard, Lane, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomeroy, Ross, Stewart, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Guthrie, Johnson, Patterson, Riddle, and Van Winkle—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Sprague, Trumbull, and Wright—24.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

DISBURSING AGENTS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859."

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the proviso to the seventeenth section of the act referred to, so as to read as follows:

And provided further, That where there is a collector at the place of location of any public work herein specified, the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to appoint a disbursing agent for the payment of all moneys that are, or may be hereafter, appropriated for the construction of any such public work, with such compensation as he may deem equitable and just, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF KIDNAPING.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire whether any further legislation is necessary to protect in their freedom persons escaping from involuntary service in Cuba or other foreign countries to the United States, and to provide for the punishment of any citizens of the United States who may in any manner aid or abet in the recapture, detention, or return of such persons, and that the committee be instructed to report by bill or otherwise.

COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer this resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee on ventilation be continued for the next session.

I will simply say that that select committee expire with this session, and it is necessary that they should bestow attention to the hydration of the air in the Chamber. It does not lead to any expense.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, there being now no business before the Senate I rise to do what I have seldom done in this body—make a personal explanation. It will be remembered that my colleague some time ago thought proper to present to the Senate without notice from me—indeed, in my absence from my seat—certain resolutions of the Legislature of Wisconsin, reflecting severely upon me as a member of this body, and instructing me to resign my seat.

These resolutions are in no manner addressed to the Senate. It can take no action upon them whatever. They are purely personal. Had my colleague done as I think I should have done, he would have given me notice of his intention to present them, or waited a reasonable time for me to be present. But, sir, I never stand upon small things. If he had not presented them I certainly should.

These resolutions are of such a character that it is due to the State of Wisconsin; due to the truth of history; due to the cause of republican liberty in which for many years I have been engaged; due to my character, the only legacy I have to leave to my children; and due to the members of the Legislature who voted for them, and to the Governor who approved them, that I should not allow them to pass in silence.

However reluctant a public man may be to speak of himself and for himself, however unbecoming it may be on ordinary occasions, these resolutions impose it upon me as an imperative duty, and I could not avoid it if I would.

I am therefore compelled to speak of myself and for myself to-day. I shall do so in all sincerity, frankly, earnestly, it may be without fear, without favor—"more in sorrow than in anger."

But the sorrow I feel is not for myself. It is rather for those who, in the hurry and excitement of the moment, without waiting to hear or to consider the reasons for my action, rushed to a conclusion under the tyranny of caucus dictation as unwarranted as it is unjust. And, sir, what are these charges against me?

1. Inconsistency, in having declared in the Senate, just after the passage of the civil rights bill in that body, that if I had been present I should have voted for it, and some weeks afterward, after a long discussion in the House, and after the veto of the President had come in, I refused to vote to pass that bill over the veto.

2. That I refused to obey legislative instructions.

3. That I have united with the President to oppose "measures to secure peace, liberty, and justice among all the people."

4. That I maintain the right of representation in "Congress of the southern people as the inhabitants of States."

5. That I maintain the Lincoln-Johnson policy of reconstruction.

6. That I have deserted the cause of human rights and republican government, and therefore it is my duty to resign my seat in this body.

I will answer these charges briefly, and in their order. And first, of this charge of inconsistency. Of all charges against a statesman this is the terror of small and sharp minds. To avoid criticism a public man may have a decent regard to the consistency of his record. But the statesman who, as questions arise, feels himself bound hand and foot by some previous vote or opinion, so that he cannot freely reconsider his opinion or change his vote, as his convictions of duty shall require, is a moral coward, a cringing slave, unworthy of his position, and unfit to represent the people of a great State.

But this inconsistency in voting, or what was the same thing, declaring that had I been present I would have voted for the civil rights bill upon its passage in the Senate, and then after some weeks of discussion and consideration in the House, and after the veto of the President, voting against passing it over the veto, if there be in that any inconsistency at all, it is more apparent than real. Voting for a bill on its passage is one thing. Voting for its passage over the veto of the President is another and a very different thing. A hundred reasons based upon principle or policy, or founded upon political considerations alone, might be given for refusing to pass a law over the President's veto which do not apply to it upon its original passage. Then no human being can be so blind as not to see that it was of the greatest importance that this law, the object of which was to secure the freedom of those emancipated by the amendment to the Constitution, should be so framed as to receive the sanction of all three departments of the Government—of Congress, of the Executive, and of the Supreme Court.

This law had, it is true, received the sanction of Congress, but not of the President, who was to execute it; and whatever gentlemen may say in the heat of political excitement, it is very doubtful, to say the least, whether some of the provisions of the law will ever receive the sanction of the Supreme Court. Every mind free from passion and guided by reason alone, in so great a matter as this, must desire to harmonize all three departments of the Government. And that is precisely what I labored to accomplish—to frame a law which should enforce to the fullest extent this new amendment to the Constitution and secure to the freedmen every right which it gives, and so drawn as to receive the sanction of every department—legislative, executive, and judicial.

Sir, why did not these gentlemen in Wisconsin wait, before condemning me, to read the law which I proposed, and which cost me severe and careful study to frame, which I feel assured would have received the sanction of the judges of the Supreme Court and of the President, and which I know would have defended the freedman in every right the constitutional amendment gives or authorizes by the whole power of the Government?

Is it just, dignified, or becoming the Legislature or government of a great State like Wisconsin thus to condemn unheard one of its Senators? I read:

A bill to provide appropriate legislation to enforce article thirteen of the amendments to the Constitution abolishing slavery in the United States.

Whereas slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, has been abolished and prohibited by article thirteen of the amendments to the Constitution, lately ratified and adopted by the Legislatures of three fourths of all the States within this Union, which amendment is in the words following, namely:

"ARTICLE XIII.

"SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Therefore, Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons heretofore held to slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted under the laws of any State of the United States, or of any of the Territories thereof, are hereby declared to be free persons, and they and their descendants shall be, and remain forever, free from slavery or involuntary servitude, except in punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, anything in any law, statute, regulation, custom, or constitution of any State or Territory to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all laws and customs having the force of law in any State or Territory heretofore or hereafter establishing, recognizing, maintaining, or regulating the right of property in slaves, or the relations of master and slave, are hereby declared to be abrogated and abolished.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall unlawfully and in violation of the said thirteen amendment to the Constitution, and of the provisions of this act, restrain or cause to be restrained of his or her liberty, with intent to subject, or cause to be subjected, or to hold or to cause to be held to service as a slave or involuntary servant any person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall unlawfully, and in violation of the provisions of the said thirteen amendment to the Constitution, and the provisions of this act, restrain or cause to be restrained of his or her liberty, with intent to hold or cause to be held to service as a slave or involuntary servant, any person who has heretofore been held to slavery or involuntary servitude under the laws of any State or Territory, and has been emancipated by the said thirteen amendment to the Constitution, commonly called a freedman, shall, in addition to the pains and penalties provided in the last preceding section of this act, be liable to be prosecuted by the person injured, who shall be entitled to recover the sum of $1,000, in addition to all damages sustained by such person, together with the costs of the prosecution; and in case any such freedman shall, as party to any suit or legal proceeding, civil or criminal, in the courts of the State or Territory where he may reside, be denied any right secured by article thirteen of amendments to the Constitution, he shall have a right to remove the said cause or proceeding into the district or circuit courts of the United States, which shall thereafter take cognizance of the same, under such rules as may from time to time be adopted by such court; and the said State courts thereupon shall have no power to proceed further in said cause or proceeding; and the said district or circuit courts shall also be empowered by writs of mandamus and prohibition to stay all further proceedings in the State courts, or under any judgment or decree of the same, until the same shall be finally determined in the courts of the United States; and the said district and circuit courts shall have power, by writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibitions, and certiorari, or other writs or process, to take cognizance of the rights secured by said amendment to the Constitution to such freedman, and to adjudge, decree, and enforce what shall be right in the premises; anything in any law, statute, custom, or regulation in any State or Territory notwithstanding.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall kidnap or carry away any other person, whether negro, mulatto, or otherwise, with the intent that such other person shall be sold or carried into involuntary servitude or held as a slave; or if any person shall entice, persuade, or knowingly induce any other person to go on board any vessel or to any other place, with the intent that he or she shall be made or held as a slave or sent out of the country to be so made or held, or shall in any way knowingly aid in causing any other person to be held, sold, or carried away, to be held or sold as a slave, he or she shall be punished, on conviction thereof, by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both of said punishments.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if the master or owners, or person having charge of any vessel, shall receive on board any other person, whether negro, mulatto, or otherwise, with the knowledge or intent that such person shall be carried from any State, Territory, or district of the United States, to a foreign country, State, or place, to be held or sold as a slave, or shall carry away from any State, Territory, or district of the United States any such person, with the intent that he or she shall be so held or sold as a slave, such master, owner, or other person offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both of said punishments. And the vessel on board which said person was received to be carried away shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the district courts of the United States, within their respective districts, shall have cognizance of all crimes and offenses committed against the provisions of this act, and also, concurrently with the circuit courts of the United States, of all civil causes under this act. The jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters hereby conferred on the district and circuit courts of the United States shall be exercised and enforced in conformity with the laws of the United States, so far as such laws are suitable to carry the same into effect; but in all cases where such laws are not adapted to the object, or are deficient in the provisions necessary to furnish suitable remedies and punish offenses against law, the common law, as modified and changed by the constitution and statutes of the State wherein the court having jurisdiction of the cause, civil or criminal, is held, so far as the same is not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, shall be extended to and govern said courts in the trial and disposition of such cause, and, if of a criminal nature, in the infliction of punishment on the party found guilty: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any State or Territory from providing by law for the trial and punishment, in the courts of such State or Territory, of any person who may be adjudged under the laws thereof to be guilty of false imprisonment or kidnapping, or prevent any person from bringing a prosecution in such courts to recover damages sustained by him by reason of such false imprisonment or kidnapping, under the laws of such State or Territory.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the district attorneys, marshals, and deputy marshals of the United States, and the commissioners appointed by the circuit and territorial courts of the United States, in case any person heretofore held to slavery or involuntary servitude, commonly called a freedman, shall be restrained of his liberty by any person, with intent, in violation of the thirteen amendment to the Constitution and of the provisions of this act, to subject him to slavery or involuntary servitude, shall, at the expense of the United States, apply immediately for the writ of habeas corpus to bring such freedman before the proper court or officer, to the end that speedy justice may be done in the premises.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of all marshals and deputy marshals to obey and execute all warrants and precepts issued under the provisions of this act, when to them directed; and should any marshal or deputy marshal refuse to receive such warrant or other process when executed to, or to use all proper means diligently to execute the same, he shall, on conviction thereof, be fined in the sum of $1,000, to the use of the persons to whom the same is alleged to have been committed; and shall have authority to summon and call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of the proper county, and they may apply to the President of the United States, who is hereby authorized to employ such portion of the militia, or of the land or naval forces of the United States as may be necessary to the execution of such warrants or other process in conformity with the provisions of this act; and said warrants shall run and be executed by said officers anywhere in the State or Territory within which they are issued.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct, hinder, or prevent any officer or other person charged with the execution of any warrant or process issued under the provisions of this act, or any person or persons lawfully assisting him or them, from arresting any person for whose apprehension such warrant or process may have been issued, or shall rescue or attempt to rescue such person from the custody of the officer, or other person or persons, or those lawfully assisting as aforesaid, when so arrested pursuant to the authority herein given and declared, or shall aid, abet, or assist any person so arrested as aforesaid, directly or indirectly, to escape from the custody of the officer or other person legally authorized as aforesaid, or shall harbor or conceal any person for whose arrest a warrant or process shall have been issued as aforesaid, so as to prevent its discovery and arrest after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of such person, shall, for either of said offenses, be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, by indictment and conviction before the district court of the United States for the district in which said offense may have been committed, or before the proper court of criminal jurisdiction, if committed within any one of the organized Territories of the United States.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the district attorneys, the marshals, their deputies, and the clerks of the said district and territorial courts shall be paid for their services the like fees as may be allowed to them for similar services in other cases; and in all cases where the proceedings are before a commissioner, he shall be entitled to fees as now allowed by law for similar services, not exceeding ten dollars in full for his services in any case, inclusive of all services incident to such arrest and examination; such fees to be made up in conformity with the fees usually charged by the officers of the courts of justice within the proper district or county, as near as may be practicable, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States, on the certificate of the judge of the district within which the arrest is made that the same are reasonable in amount, and to be recoverable from the defendant as part of the judgment in case of conviction.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That final decrees and judgments in all cases arising under the provisions of this act may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court, upon writ of error issued as now provided by law in other cases: Provided, That no such review shall be had except upon the certificate of the judge presiding upon the trial or hearing that the constitutionality of some law or proceeding under the authority of the United States or of this act has been drawn in question on such trial or hearing.

There is not a single right or remedy which the courts of the United States will hold to be constitutionally given to the freedmen under the civil rights bill which is not equally secured under this.

Again, sir, I deemed it to be my duty to the Union cause at that time, and to that party which claimed to represent it, and which I was struggling to save from suicide at the hands of its professed friends. Those considerations of public duty, and of the highest expediency, constrained me to vote against passing the civil rights bill over the veto.

I felt bound to make one more effort to save that irreparable breach between the majority of Congress and the administration of the national Union party, which I then foresaw was coming, which I did all I could to prevent, but which has now come.

For that reason alone, if I had no other, in my opinion, every true friend of the Union party should have approved and not condemned my course. At all events, my judgment was convinced that it was neither just nor wise to vote to pass that bill over the President's veto, and therefore I refused to do so.

As to the second charge, that I refused to obey legislative instructions I shall go into no explanation upon that subject. I have only this to say: that my duty and the oath require me to obey the Constitution of the United States. They do not require me to obey the changing opinions of any body of men who may be elected to the Legislature of Wisconsin during the term for which I was chosen. And, sir, in the present condition of the country I would be false to my highest convictions of duty to resign my place here or to surrender the position to which, in the providence of God, I have been assigned in this momentous period of our history. No, sir, no. However much the storm of political denunciation may rage around me, if God, the Almighty, give me health and strength I intend to remain here a sleepless sentinel at the post of duty, to warn my countrymen of their impending dangers, which, unless wise counsels prevail, threaten to overthrow their constitutional liberties, or, it may be, to plunge them into the horrors of another civil war, to be waged not upon the fields of the sunny South but among the people of the northern States.

For me to resign my place now would, I fear, bring upon my soul that crime, moral cowardice, of which I pray God I may never be guilty.

It is charged that I have united with the President to oppose "measures to secure peace, liberty, and justice among all the people." Certainly no man who knows me and knows President Johnson can think for one moment that he and I can have any such purpose. What has the President done or refused to do to give color to a charge like this?

He refused, it is true, to impose negro suffrage as a basis of reorganization of State governments in the southern States, and left that where it belongs—to the States themselves. That is the head and front of his offending.

In the speech of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] in reply to mine of the 17th of January, he most distinctly approved of Mr. Johnson's course, so far as he had gone. He admitted that he had carried out Mr. Lincoln's policy; that he had improved upon that policy; in short, that it was what he had not done, rather than what he had done, that he condemned. It was all summed up in a word—he had not imposed negro suffrage upon the southern States as one of the bases of reconstruction.

I repeat, sir, that was the head and front of the whole of his offending in the beginning. Both Senators from Massachusetts, and all the men whom they represent, responded warmly and earnestly to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] when he proposed as the basis of reconstruction "universal suffrage and universal amnesty."

The Senators from Missouri accepted the same. And, Mr. President, what had I done to merit this condemnation? I will tell you, sir; it is a short tale and easily told. In Wisconsin last fall the Union party held a convention at Madison. I had the honor of being a member and chairman of the committee on resolutions, and made the report of the majority, which was unanimously adopted. A half crazy old gentleman, by the name of Paine, reported two minority resolutions, one in favor of negro suffrage in Wisconsin, and the other in favor of imposing negro suffrage upon the southern States as a condition precedent to the admission of their representatives. I opposed the adoption of these two resolutions into the creed of the Union party, and they were laid on the table by a large majority. For that opposition, and for that alone, unrelenting war was declared against me. This man Paine told the convention that my colleague declared himself in favor of those resolutions.

The editor of the Janesville Gazette says that my colleague called upon him and denounced the action of the convention under my lead as cowardly in laying those resolutions upon the table. There was immediately called at Janesville, Wisconsin, a bolting convention, for the purpose of denouncing the action of the Union convention in refusing to adopt those resolutions, and my colleague attended and made a speech. At this convention I was denounced in most unmeasured terms. For my course in resisting the interpolation of this new dogma into the Union party I have been most bitterly and persistently denounced by a partisan and unscrupulous press, from Boston to St. Paul, from that day to this. I have borne all this denunciation without once retorting upon my assailants.

My colleague has more than once during this session gone out of his way to assail my course in that connection. I have never assailed him; I shall not now. I have waited in patience, knowing that truth in time would vindicate herself.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President—
Mr. DOOLITTLE. I prefer that my colleague should wait till I have finished. He can answer then.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, Mr. President, have I waited in vain? Her vindication and triumph have come, and sooner than I expected. I have seen an utter abandonment by Congress, and even by the radicals in Congress of negro suffrage as a condition precedent to reconstruction at the South.

With an overwhelming majority—a majority of more than two thirds against the President—every Senator in this body, except Mr. SUMNER of Massachusetts and Mr. BROWN of Missouri, on Saturday, by a deliberate vote, surrendered negro suffrage as a condition of reconstruction; surrendered the point, the very point, of difference and of war on me, the ground, and only ground, of principle upon which this war was begun and has been waged by Congress upon the President. All the world knows that all else is but an after-thought—mere pretexts seized upon after the war was actually begun.

Yes, sir, I have seen every Senator in the majority except the two I have mentioned, and among them I have seen my colleague, and even the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] and one of the Senators from Massachusetts, surrender negro suffrage as a condition precedent to reconstruction. And yet, sir, I do not question the motives of my colleague, nor charge his action as cowardly or inconsistent. He has, I doubt not, arrived at the conclusion that it was unwise to insist upon this thing longer; at least that before doing so again he had better wait until the next fall election. But I ask those men in Wisconsin who condemn me as abandoning the cause of liberty and republican government for refusing to insist upon negro suffrage, a thing which was abandoned when the struggle came, and Greek met Greek in the tug of war. If it be wise in my colleague and the Senator from Ohio to give it up now, after a long and final struggle which has resulted in open war between the majority in Congress and our Administration, was it not wisdom in me thus to foresee the evil and do my utmost to prevent it? Who does not know that if we had yielded in that convention and admitted the Paine resolutions into that platform there would have been no Republican majority in Wisconsin? There would have been a Democratic Governor and a Democratic Legislature. There would have been no tyrannical Republican caucus able to control a majority of the Legislature, and to denounce in such unjust terms either the President or myself.

As to the other charges, that I maintain that the southern people are the inhabitants of States, and as such, upon obedience to the laws and Constitution of the United States, are entitled to representation in Congress whenever they send Senators and Representatives properly elected and qualified under the Constitution and laws, I have said upon other occasions all I desire to say. My opinions are unchanged, and my conviction of their soundness remains unshaken. They are, in my opinion, based upon truth and justice, and they are born of God.

I will only add that this famous story of State suicide, that the southern States have become Territories, and should be organized and governed as such, have almost ceased to have advocates. It strutted its brief hour and has passed from the stage.

The position of my colleague, with which he began the session, to establish territorial governments for the southern States, is utterly abandoned. The truth is, they are not Territories and cannot be made such. They are States under the Constitution. The very amendment proposed to the Constitution, and for which he voted, admits them to be States capable of the highest acts of States under the Constitution, namely, not only of governing themselves and making their own constitutions, but of taking part in amending the Constitution, and thus help to frame the fundamental law of all the States.

Sir, this abandonment of negro suffrage as a condition-precedent, and of this doctrine that the southern States are not States, but in the territorial condition, is either sincere or hypocritical. I am bound to think it is sincere, and yet there are some persons like Wendell Phillips who declare that it is abandoned only for the present, and for a purpose; to tide over the fall elections. In short, that it is both hypocritical and cowardly. But I do not say that. I think it is sincere. It is because, after a long and earnest struggle, gentlemen have come to the conclusion that the only wise and practical theory, the only possible adjustment after all, is substantially to adopt the Lincoln policy of restoration, improved as it has been by the logic of events under the Administration of his successor.

To submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to the ratification of the Legislature of a State, and at the same time to contend that there is no State to have a Legislature; to say that a Legislature which can ratify an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and at the same time cannot elect Senators, is a monstrous absurdity. With all respect for others, I think if I should say that, my friends would say I had lost my reason.

Sir, I shall not pursue this subject further at this time. I have briefly answered these charges, and shall upon some other occasion be prepared, before the people of Wisconsin, to answer any further explanation which may be proper.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President—

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 491) to remove the office of surveyor general of the State of Iowa to Plattsmouth, Nebraska;

A bill (H. R. No. 612) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1869;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Fair building in Washington.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to take up the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of drafted men. I believe the Senator from Missouri is willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to hear the bill read.

The Secretary read the bill, which is to authorize the Secretary of War to refund the $300 commutation money paid by persons drafted under the calls of February 1 and March 14, 1864, and who being again drafted within a year were held to service or required to furnish substitutes, and also to refund the $300 commutation money in cases where it is satisfactorily proved that the person was entitled to a discharge from the obligation to render personal service.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let that bill lie over. I thought there was a limitation in it of $25,000, but I find there is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I should like to be informed what is the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) There is no pending question. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] rose to a personal explanation and has proceeded with that view.

Mr. HOWE. Well, I suppose "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander," and as my colleague has had the floor for a personal explanation, I can have the floor for a personal explanation. I regret that I was not here at the opening of this explanation for I imagine from the little I heard of it that I am somewhat interested in it, if not implicated by it. That my colleague should take this hour or any other in the calendar to make a personal explanation is entirely proper, and for that act I have not the slightest disposition, as I believe I have not the slightest occasion, to criticize him; but that he should take this very late hour in this very protracted session to make an attack upon me, I think is not so free from criticism. But after all I am not disposed to complain of that, for my political life has been so brief and so inconsiderable that I should be poorly off if I were not prepared to defend the little there is of it anywhere, at any time, and upon any notice, however brief. What my colleague has said in defense of himself I shall allow to pass with but very slight comment, if any. What he has said in my hearing touching myself, I must be ready now to make some observation upon.

And first—it was the first I heard of this criticism upon my own course—he presents me as having been not in fact, but as having been reported to be an advocate and an indorser of two resolutions which were offered by a very distinguished gentleman in the State of Wisconsin and submitted to the last State convention held by the Union party for their acceptance. I allude to the resolutions presented by General Paine. My colleague says that General Paine declared that I indorsed those resolutions and recommended them to the convention. That General Paine did not so say, of course I shall not avouch; I cannot be supposed to know what he said, for I was not there. What the fact is in regard to myself, I am supposed to know and can speak by authority on that point, and so speaking I say that General Paine certainly never had any authority to say that I ever proposed or suggested that the convention should take a position on the question of negro suffrage, except further than when appealed to for my own opinion I stated for myself, that as we had a law submitting to the people of the State for their approval or rejection the question of admitting the negroes in our State to the right of suffrage, I recommended that the convention should indorse that act, and I did distinctly say to all who paid me the compliment to consult me on the point that I thought that was as far as the convention ought to go; that the question whether the suffrage should be extended to the blacks in the rebellious States or any other State than Wisconsin, was not legitimately before us; that the other question was legitimately before us; that I believed it was right that suffrage should be extended to the negroes in our State. The Legislature had invited the vote of the people on that subject, and I thought the convention ought to take ground upon it on the one side or the other, and as I believed there was but one right side I did desire that the Union party should occupy that side, which was in favor of the suffrage. I did distinctly discourage, as I said before, all who consulted me on the point, against going further than that, against making precedents in the particular state of things in which we then found ourselves.

But, Mr. President, I should be doing injustice to myself and to my convictions, perhaps I should do some injustice to my colleague and to his convictions, if I did not say a word further, since I am arraigned upon the point, since I am charged in the indictment; if I did not take this opportunity to contest before the Senate and so much of the world as is now attending upon the sittings of the Senate, that I have never known an hour since I considered the question at all when I did not believe in my inmost heart that not only the highest and the truest justice, but the highest and truest policy, requires that the ballot shall be put into the hands of every freeman for his own protection, be his race what it may, and his shade of color what it may.

I heard my colleague quote the Janesville Gazette; but before I pass to that I will not allow the designation that my colleague has given to General Paine, of Wisconsin, to pass without correction. He has taken occasion here in this body, to which General Paine, I suppose, is an entire stranger, to characterize him as a crazy man.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. "A half crazy old gentleman."

Mr. HOWE. "A half crazy old gentleman." Sir, he is a gentleman. So much truth there is in what my colleague affirms of him. He is somewhat aged; I think a little older than my colleague and myself, but not so much older that either of us can put on airs to his discomfiture; but as for his being a crazy man, that statement must be discounted upon full one hundred per cent., for he is not at all crazy. An honest, a more excellent, a more sincere man does not live anywhere than General Paine. So much for him.

Then my colleague quotes the Janesville Gazette to the effect that I had denounced the action of the last State convention as cowardly. Mr. President, I cannot plead to that indictment very well. I do not know whether the Janesville Gazette so quoted me or not. And that is not the only embarrassment I labor under. I do not just now know whether I did say so or not. Being upon the point I will take this occasion to say that I did think the action of the last State convention was not characterized by that courage which had characterized every step of the Union party up to that hour, and which I hoped would characterize every one of its steps until it should cease to exist; but I am not in the habit of charging cowardice upon individuals, and I do not think I ever charged cowardice upon that body.

Mr. President, my colleague next charges me with having on repeated occasions gone out of my way to assail his course in that convention. I think upon that charge I can venture to plead the general issue and go to trial upon short notice. I do not believe I ever spent a moment of my time or of my breath in assailing his course in that convention. I remember that in the very first remarks I ever made publicly in reference to that convention I did distinctly say to my friends that we had no time to spend in useless complaints about the course of my colleague. So I thought; so I felt; and I do not recollect nor do I believe I ever called in question his course in that convention publicly. I did regret his course in that convention most sincerely, and he knows it; and he knows that to him I first made that regret known. I do not know that he knows this fact that I am now about to state, but I know it, that but for the fact that I knew or was informed that my colleague was going to attend that convention for the purpose of giving the advice upon which the convention acted, I should not have been at Madison, where the convention was held, myself; but I did go there to see and to remonstrate with him. That purpose accomplished, I had no further connection with the convention.

But, Mr. President, my colleague was not content with charging me with the espousal of the doctrine of negro suffrage as a method for the cure of all political disorders in every part of the Union, but he charges me now with having surrendered that which he affects to tell the Senate was a cardinal principle with me. I fondly hope, sir, that my colleague is mistaken when he cherishes the idea that I have given up any cardinal principle or pet of mine, whether it be negro suffrage or otherwise. The acquaintance that he and I have had together should have taught him that I do not readily surrender cardinal theories or cardinal ideas. I do not know when I have surrendered one. But if I have, let me tell my colleague as I tell the Senate, that this is not one of them. I believe to-day that the ballot in the hands of all guiltless men is the best security for the public peace and the best security for individual right and justice that law has ever devised. The world is six thousand years old. In every quarter and section of it you have tried to get along without doing justice, but wherever you tried it you have miserably failed. There is no other way given under heaven or among men whereby national life can be saved and secured but justice and equal rights. If you think there is, try it on for another six thousand years, and then tell me.

Mr. President, my colleague taunts me and the party with which I act that if we or those with whom I act in Wisconsin had been guided by our own feelings and convictions, if he had not beneficently and benignly stood over us, the guardian angel of the Union party in the State of Wisconsin, and saved us in spite of ourselves from the rocks on which we seemed determined to rush, we should have had no Union majority in the State of Wisconsin. That is an assertion; not exactly a prediction, because it does not relate to what is to take place hereafter; but it is an assertion relating to what has transpired heretofore, and the truth of which there are no present means of ascertaining, and so I must content myself with opposing my opinion to that of my colleague, and telling him that he is, in my judgment, terribly mistaken when he flatters himself that it was to his sage counsels that the Union party owes its control of the State of Wisconsin.

Again, Mr. President, my colleague tells me—and I thought he seemed rather to congratulate himself and to hug himself, so to speak, on the fact that the theory of State suicide has passed away forever. I should be glad to know that the fact of State suicide had passed away forever; but my colleague cannot demolish a theory by an assertion. I suppose the simple fact to which my colleague had reference was to that rather antiquated fact that a great while ago—I cannot just now tell how long ago, but in the early part of this session; it seems to me I was a much younger man then than I am now, though just as wise—I did propose to the Senate a joint resolution declaring it to be the duty of Congress to organize territorial governments for the communities between us and the Gulf which had destroyed or abdicated the government of American States. I suppose it is to the idea contained in that resolution that my colleague alludes when he refers to the theory of State suicide; and if that is so I think he is quite too early in congratulating himself that that theory has passed away forever. It is very true that the Senate and the House of Representatives have not acted upon that theory, but it is equally true that the President of the United States, whose steps my colleague follows exactly, and whose doctrines he espouses instantly and always here, has adopted that theory and has acted upon it.

The facts are undeniable, patent to the whole world, that every form of local government which has existed over every one of these communities from 1861 down to the present time has been treated by the President precisely as if it owed its life, as well as its authority and its vigor, to him. Whenever he saw fit to take that life he has seemed to suppose that he might take it; whenever he saw fit to clasp his hands tighter upon the throat of any one of those communities their breath must stop, and they could only breathe with his permission and only act by his consent. Thus it was that he not only, in the first instance, as I have before remarked, actually wiped out of existence with a single wave of his hand every vestige of local government which he found there when their armies surrendered, but it was thus and thus, alone, that he went on to rebuild governments after a model of his own, fashioned by his own wit—to rebuild governments in the place of those displaced. It was thus, and thus alone, that he has from time to time in every stage of their history, from the time their armies surrendered down to this moment, interfered and stopped the functions of each or every one of the departments of those governments which he built himself and ought to warrant, whenever he thought proper to do so. One of two things is true, either he has handled those governments as territorial governments existing by virtue of Federal authority, and only Federal authority, wielded by the Executive and not by the Legislature, or he has been guilty of usurping the functions of State governments, such as no predecessor of his ever attempted, and such as no predecessor of his ever could attempt, and no successor of his ever can attempt without subjecting himself to the pains and penalties of impeachment.

Mr. President, I touch now upon a question which concerns not merely the existence of parties here to-day, but takes hold of the foundations upon which your Government rests. You must stand there. No President can go into a State and dissipate a Legislature without committing an act of revolution, and you know it. No President can go into a State and by his own word and his own authority depose even a justice of the peace without committing a revolutionary act, and you know it. If you concede that authority to this President or any other, you surrender every single right and prerogative of a State not merely to the nation as represented by its representatives, but to the nation represented in the person of a single individual as its Executive. Sir, if the Senate and the House of Representatives have ignored the theory of State suicide, the President is true to it.

I have occupied, sir, more of your time than I meant to do, and more than I think was absolutely necessary for a personal explanation. There is one other point that is not exactly in the character of a personal explanation; that is to say it does not tend to explain my personal conduct, though it may have some bearing on the personal conduct of my colleague. There is one comment of that kind that I feel called upon to make. Judging from the whole drift of the remarks made by my colleague after I came into the Senate—for, as I have said, I was not here when he began—I was led to the conclusion that it was the end and aim of his effort to convince somebody, if not himself, that he had been, after all, and all this time, acting in the interest of the Union party which sent him here, and acting for the protection and preservation of that party whose representatives in the State of Wisconsin asked him to leave here last winter. That that has not been the aim of my colleague, I cannot positively affirm; but if it has been, either he or his constituents in the State of Wisconsin have made a very great mistake. It is very certain that his constituents in Wisconsin, those tried and true men who sent him here—and I beg leave right here to say, by way of interpolation, and in the hearing of my colleague, just as true to-day as they ever were—have not understood him as acting in the interests and for the safety and security of the Union party; and it is equally certain that that other constituency in Wisconsin, who opposed his coming here, have made the very same mistake; for, by all the evidence they could give on any point in issue, they do testify that they conceive him, instead of being the saviour of the Union party, to be precisely the genius raised up in these evil times to destroy the Union party; and so they hail him with open public acclaim everywhere. Sir, who is mistaken upon this point? The patent fact is—I am not talking of the motive or sincerity of my colleague; I am not questioning that, and never have—that my colleague came here the accredited representative, the chosen agent of the Union party of Wisconsin, and here he met a majority of this body accredited by the same party in different States. I simply appeal to the personal knowledge of every man that surrounds me to know whether, for the last four or six months, my colleague has acted with that party, counselled with it, accorded with it, aided it, or done anything else in the wide world but to employ himself, so far as I can judge, to the utmost extent of his capabilities, in pulling it down and utterly demolishing it. That is a question which his own personal observation will enable every Senator of any party on this floor to answer satisfactorily to himself, and, I think, satisfactorily to me.

Mr. President, I must say one thing more. I was impressed with the belief—I hope I do my colleague no injustice by the conviction—that he had allowed these resolutions to lie upon your table from the time they were presented until this time, while he was doing such work here as seemed to him fit and proper for him to do, whether in the interest of the Union party or of the State of Wisconsin or of the President of the United States, I shall not stop to discuss; but having allowed these resolutions to lie upon the table until this time without comment, it did seem to me as if he had sought this very late hour, when all work here is accomplished, when there is nothing more to be done in the sight of the President or of the Senate, to state his account and be prepared to meet his constituents. Whether that was his view or purpose or not I cannot definitely state till I have more carefully considered not merely what I did hear but what I did not hear of his remarks. If that was his view, I want to do one thing more and close.

My colleague and myself came here the representatives of the same party, and I am going back to Wisconsin believing that I myself am still the representative of that party, true to what I understand to be their convictions; and I want to say here to the Senate, for the encouragement of you all, that I believe in the State of Wisconsin there has been a more deliberate and more systematic effort to demoralize the party which sent my colleague and myself here than has been put forth in any State of the Union, but at the same time it is my proud satisfaction to believe that there is nowhere in the Union or upon the face of the earth a constituency that stand more solid, more compact, more resolute, more unflinching, more determined to adhere to the end, wherever that end may be or whenever it may come. This is the constituency which sent me here and to which I am about to return.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. COWAN. I move now to take up the bill (H. R. No. 811) for the relief of certain drafted men. I think there is no objection to it.

Mr. CRESWELL. I believe one section of that bill provides that the claims paid under it shall be confined to those now on file in the War Department. I ask what number there are now on file in the War Department.

Mr. COWAN. I think about seventy, it is said.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, about seventy.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think we know enough about that bill to consider it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York object to its consideration?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside.

BESTOR AND M'CORD.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons whose duty it shall be to inquire and determine how much the vessels-of-war Shiloh, built by George C. Bestor, and Utah, built by Charles W. McCord, at St. Louis, Missouri, during the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, and their machinery, cost said contractors over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work paid by the Government of the United States, and report the same to the Senate at its next session.

I introduced this morning a joint resolution on this subject which the Senate passed, but in the House it has been referred to a committee. I notice that the Senate passed a separate resolution similar to this last year; and I ask that this be passed so that the testimony can be taken.

Mr. HENDERSON. I remember that a resolution was passed just at the close of the last session, and the consequence was a report by a board, and upon that report a bill was introduced appropriating, perhaps, $2,000,000 to pay the iron-clad contractors. The only justification for that bill was the report of a board organized under a simple resolution of the Senate. I object to this resolution, and I hope the Senate will have nothing to do with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution must go over.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state to the Senator that that resolution would have covered this case, and Mr. Bestor and Mr. McCord could have taken their testimony but for the fact that the action of the board was before they completed their contract. They only want an opportunity to take the testimony. I do not know that I shall vote for the claim eventually; I do not commit myself to that; I only desire to allow these parties to present their case.

Mr. HENDERSON. I object to the resolution. I wish to lay no foundation for another iron-clad bill at the next session of Congress by a resolution of this kind at the heel of the session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution cannot be considered.

MILITARY SERVICE ABROAD.

Mr. WILLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not in his opinion deemed incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence not heretofore published, between the Government of the United States and the Governments of France and Prussia since the 4th of March, 1857, touching the claim to military service asserted by those Governments in reference to persons born in those countries and who have since become naturalized under the laws of the United States.

PREPARATIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HARRIS (at fifteen minutes past four o'clock) submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed on the part of the Senate, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress, having finished the business before them, are ready to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Messrs. HARRIS and NESMITH were appointed.

REV. C. B. BOYNTON.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 210) to authorize the payment of Rev. C. B. Boynton as Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

At the suggestion of Mr. SPRAGUE, the joint resolution was, by unanimous consent, read three times and passed.

Mr. McPHERSON presently returned and announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 210) to authorize the payment of Rev. C. B. Boynton as Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress; and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

After a pause—

Mr. HARRIS. The committee on the part of the Senate who were charged with the duty of waiting upon the President and informing him that the Senate was ready to adjourn unless he had some further communication to make, have performed that service, and the President was pleased to say that he had no further communication to make.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore having vacated the chair,

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Clerk, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate be presented to Hon. J. A. FAYETTE S. FOSTER, President of the Senate pro tempore, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The Chief Clerk put the question on the resolution, and it was unanimously adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore took the chair and said:

SENATORS: I thank you heartily for this most gratifying token of your approbation. The duties with which I have been charged, though responsible, have been made pleasant and agreeable by your uniform support, by the courtesy and kindness manifested toward me by every member of the body. I shall cherish these associations in grateful remembrance as long as I live.

The time designated by the concurrent vote of the two Houses for the close of this session of Congress having now arrived, wishing you all a prosperous journey to your homes and families, I now declare the Senate adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 28, 1866.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON, made the following prayer:

Accept our thanks, O God, that in circumstances of peace and mercy Thou hast brought these men once more together on this the closing day of the session. We pray, O God, that this important chapter of American history may, through wisdom and grace granted unto them to-day, be worthily brought to a close. We thank Thee for all Thou hast enabled them during this session to do; for all that has been accomplished in the cause of right and freedom; for the benefits that have been conferred upon the masses of the people in this land, and for the encouragement that has been given to those in all other lands who are struggling to gain and establish their rights. O God, grant unto them that reward which is due. And now that they are about to separate when the duties of this day are over, O God, we pray that it may not be a final separation. We commend them all individually to the holy keeping of our God. Will the Lord guard them on their homeward journey from all the perils of the traveler, watch over all their interests, and may they meet their friends in peace and health. O God, guard in safety every family circle, and every dear home, that they may meet each other in peace, and feel that God has guarded and blessed them. We beseech Thee, O Lord, that they may all be spared to meet again when another session shall commence to celebrate a new triumph for the right, to perfect that which remains undone in bringing all the policy of the Government in accordance with the eternal principles of Thine own. Will God bless all the officers of the Government to-day. Bless the whole country. And when next a prayer shall be offered before Thee here, may we have still greater cause for thankfulness to God for all that He has done for the United States. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

Mr. STEVENS. It is evident to all that the Journal of yesterday's session cannot have been made up by this time; I therefore move that the reading of the Journal of yesterday be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States;

An act (S. No. 265) to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the enrolling of the bills which were passed just before the adjournment this morning, and their examination and comparison by the Committee on Enrolled Bills cannot be completed in less than two and a half or three hours. The Senate have been informed of that fact, and they will probably agree to the request of the House to extend the session to half past four o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. MILLER asked and obtained leave to have printed with the debates a speech he had prepared upon the general political questions of the day. [The speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS. I had laid down to get some sleep when the vote was taken upon agreeing to the report of the last committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the civil appropriation bill. I now ask leave to record my vote in the affirmative.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. ROLLINS asked and obtained leave to record his vote in the negative upon the same bill.

Mr. SPALDING asked and obtained leave to record his vote in the affirmative upon the same bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked and obtained leave to record his vote in the affirmative upon the same bill.

DEATHS OF PRISONERS OF WAR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for a report of the number of deaths of Union and rebel soldiers while held as prisoners of war; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEVENS. If it will prevent the doing anything worse, and the House will indulge me, I will make a few remarks on House bill No. 623, to enable the States lately in rebellion to regain their privileges in the Union, and which was under consideration when we were last in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think I must object.

Mr. STEVENS. I will yield the floor whenever anything else comes up. I do not want any action whatever.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I supposed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] would want some action by the House. I never knew him to make a speech without having some purpose in view.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course he has some purpose in view.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will not object, if there is to be no action.

Mr. STEVENS. Before making the remarks I have to submit, I desire to indicate some amendments that I wish to have made in the bill. And that they may be properly understood, I propose to include in my remarks the bill as I desire to have it read when perfected, and which will be as follows:

Whereas the eleven States which lately formed the government called the confederate States of America have forfeited all their rights under the Constitution, and can be reinstated in the same only through the action of Congress: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the eleven States lately in rebellion may form valid State governments in the following manner:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the State governments now existing de facto are hereby acknowledged as valid governments for municipal purposes until the same shall be duly altered, and their legislative and executive officers are hereby recognized as such.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall within six months, and as often thereafter as he shall deem proper, issue his proclamation directing conventions to be called to form legitimate constitutions for the respective States. He shall direct an election to be held on a certain day to choose delegates to a convention, which shall meet at the time fixed by him at the capital of the State and form a State constitution, which shall be submitted to a vote of the people, and if ratified by a majority of the legal voters shall be declared to be the constitution of the State.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the persons who shall be entitled to vote at both of said elections shall be as follows: all male citizens above the age of twenty-one years, who have resided one year in said State, and ten days within the election district.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the word citizen, as used in this act, shall be construed to mean all persons (except Indians not taxed) born or duly naturalized in the United States. Any male citizen above the age of twenty-one years shall be eligible as delegate to said convention.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all persons who held office, either civil or military, under the government called the "confederate States of America," and who voluntarily swore allegiance to said government, are hereby declared to have forfeited their citizenship and to have renounced allegiance to the United States, and shall not be entitled to exercise the elective franchise or hold office until three years after they shall have filed their intention or desire to be reinvested with the rights of citizenship, and shall swear allegiance to the United States and renounce allegiance to all other governments or pretended governments; the said application to be filed and oath taken in the same courts that by law are authorized to naturalize foreigners.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That no constitution shall be presented to or acted on by Congress which denies to any citizen any rights, privileges, or immunities which are granted to any other citizen in the State. All laws shall be impartial, without regard to language, race, or former condition. If the provisions of this section should ever be altered, repealed, expunged, or in any way abrogated or disregarded by any State, this act shall become void as to said State, and the State shall lose its right to be represented in Congress. There shall be three officers of election at each of the polls; two of them shall be called inspectors, who shall receive and deposit the votes in the box when undisputed. If any vote shall be challenged the other officer, to be called judge, shall decide the question if the inspectors disagree. The officers shall be chosen as follows: on the morning of the election, at the hour of nine o'clock, the legal voters present at the polls shall nominate three or more candidates, and proceed to elect by dividing into two or more bodies, according to the number of contesting parties. The majority shall elect. The officers thus chosen shall appoint two clerks, who shall truly record the votes when the votes are received, and the votes when counted by the officers aforesaid. Any fraud in conducting the election shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That whenever the foregoing conditions shall be complied with the citizens of said State may present said constitution to Congress, and if the same shall be approved by Congress said State shall be declared entitled to the rights, privileges, and immunities, and be subject to all the obligations and liabilities of a State within the Union. No Senator or Representative shall be admitted into either House of Congress until Congress shall have declared the State entitled thereto.

Notwithstanding surrounding discouragements, the exhortation, "Be not weary in well doing," encourages me to make one more—perhaps an expiring—effort to do something which shall be useful to my fellow-men; something to elevate and enlighten the poor, the oppressed, and the ignorant, in this great crisis of human affairs. I do not feel that this august body, this grand council of a nation of freemen, has done anything worthy of its glorious opportunity, worthy of its duty to the immortal beings whose destinies for good or evil, for happiness or woe, it holds in its hands; when I reflect with how few acts of justice, with how few wise enactments, most of us seem content to close our labors and disperse to the periphery of the nation in search of cool shades, purling trout streams, and to see our bulls and bees. I beg it to be understood I do not claim a right to speak this reproachfully or complainingly; especially when I consider my own life, too much of which has been spent in idleness or frivolous amusement, and find myself almost ready to yield before every man is secured equal rights and impartial privileges. I cannot avoid feeling humbled, I cannot escape the pangs of self-condemnation. Sir, is this to be the poor result of the labors of an assembly clothed with the sovereignty of the only real republic that ever existed, and which, from its position, its trials, and the inspired teachings of the fathers, ought to be wiser and juster than the Amphictyonic Council, or any other assembly, ancient or modern? Congress has certainly done some good legislation to aid the white man, if he choose, to protect the poor of all races and colors. But nothing has been done to enable any but the white man to protect himself. How precarious and worthless is that protection which depends wholly on the will of others, and leaves one's self defenseless! In a peaceful, well-governed republic, the only protection consists in the right to participate in the government; to aid in the formation of organic and other laws; to have a voice in the election of officers, and to influence the legislation of the country. They must have the ballot or they will continue, virtually, to be slaves; they will be servants and tools of the rich. But give them political power and they will find friends who will recognize their manhood, because they will receive in return a boon which none but men could bestow. With less than this, it were a pity that their bonds were broken. A bondman may have some intellectual elevation. A freeman, deprived of every human right, is the most degraded of human beings.

This bill proposes to give the right of suffrage, in forming their State governments, to every man alike, without regard to race or color. When they form their constitution it leaves them free. This, it must be remembered, applies only to the rebel States. No one denies the right of Congress to fix the status and terms of admission of those States. No man of common sense and common honesty pretends that the present governments, of at least ten of them, have any elements or features of legitimate governments. Their old constitutions were utterly overthrown and have never been revived. Their present constitutions were not of their own choice, but were imposed upon them in the midst of arms, when the "laws were silent," by a military ruler playing the part of a mighty conqueror. Not one of their organic laws was ever submitted to the judgment of the people. We have passed a law giving the right of suffrage to all men in the Territories. Let us now authorize the outlawed States to become republican by freely forming their constitutions by the action of all their free men. If they then deprive any portion of the people of their equal rights, let them be content with their present exterior condition until they shall become fit to discharge the duties of true republicanism.

Thus will the elective franchise be properly bestowed on all within the rebel States. The loyal men will be protected. Now they are proscribed without regard to color. Reject this bill, and I see no way of ever giving equal rights to the South. Reflections like these have induced me to propose a direct vote (which I hope will be allowed) on the vital question which alone can give protection to the colored race and the loyal whites in the rebel States. Left as they now are without the protection of the ballot-box, overwhelming evidence shows that they are the mere serfs and will be the victims of their former masters. The objection to the insertion of such imperative provisions in an amendment to the Constitution does not exist to this bill. In the Constitution it would have operated equally in every State.

While that would have been just, it was not deemed possible. In many of the free States deep-seated prejudice, the offspring of ignorance and habit, obstructed the cause of justice. In copperhead States where justice to the colored race has no domicile, and in States nearly balanced, such reform was thought to be impracticable at present. Those States had done nothing to forfeit their rights and authorize the nation to impose such new conditions. Nor had the workings of our institutions shown such provisions to be absolutely necessary for the protection of that class or the safety of the country. The deprivation of the elective franchise to so few, though a great wrong, was not thought dangerous or intolerable. How different the condition of the rebel States! The concentration of the whole political power in the hands of a few tyrannical and disloyal men has shown itself dangerous to liberty and fidelity to the Government, and unless restrained must again soon produce bloody insurrections. Their right to dictate the terms of their participation in national affairs all agree to have been forfeited, and whatever different theories are held, all concur in the main conclusion, whether Republicans, Copperheads, Apostates, or that unamiable hermaphrodite race called Conservatives; as the conditions of readjustment are to be fixed by the Government, none can deem it severe if we put the loyal freedman on an equal footing at the polls with the disloyal white man. If the wise management of the government of the country; if the protection of the loyal men in the rebel sections; if the election of patriotic Union men to the State and national offices requires the full enfranchisement of the colored race; if justice to all demands it, why shall we hesitate?

The only way in which Congress can grant such power by legislation is through enabling acts, as provided by this substitute. When these people become States Congress cannot either alter or amend their State institutions. A constitutional amendment can alone reach it. As Congress can dictate any mode of reconstruction which it deems best, it may pass enabling acts authorizing these outlawed districts to form republican State governments fit to partake in the government of the nation. In forming such governments Congress always fixes the qualifications of the electors. It has lately, as I have said, given the right of suffrage to the colored race in the Territories. This bill is intended to give the loyal colored men, as well as the loyal white men, a right to participate in the Government under which they are to live; it excludes none but the most guilty rebels; that is necessary in order to enable the loyal men to live in the land of their birth; otherwise the proud, persecuting rebels will exile them from their native land. Such is the united evidence of all the true men of the South.

When this is done we shall have done but partial justice to the descendants of an oppressed race. God may yet visit us with further punishments. Certainly we deserve it. Why have we not given them homesteads? Their rebel masters owe it to them. As all agree that Congress must restore the lost States, let it be done upon true principles. Republics must stand upon the basis of universal suffrage. Any departure from that is a departure from republicanism. Exclusion for crime does not violate the rule.

This bill treats the confederate States as every branch of our Government treats them. They are all under military surveillance. No statesman looks upon their present governments as anything but temporary, imposed by arbitrary power until the people could form free governments. It provides that within six months conventions shall be called of all the free male people of the States above the age of twenty-one years—with certain exceptions on account of crime—to form constitutions to be submitted to the judgment of the people. Upon the ratification of such constitutions they may be admitted into the Republic, provided, always, that such constitutions shall not violate the fundamental principles of republicanism by discriminating against any citizen or class of citizens in favor of any other under similar circumstances.

Now, sir, if there be any State that does not desire such organic law, let it remain in a state of pupillage until it shall have learned the elementary principles of justice and freedom.

All who choose to deal fairly by all men may thus be represented in this body in the next Congress. Those who do not choose to give equal rights to all men, will, with my consent, never enter this Hall except as Delegates.

A large class of the rebels under oath renounced their allegiance to the United States and swore allegiance to the confederate States of America. I consider such oaths void. But the subjects of it have no right so to treat it. This bill opens a door to enable them to absolve themselves from such oath without perjury. The time fixed is short enough. The loyal men should have some time to consolidate their government. I assure gentlemen that without such provision the fate of the Union men in all the ten of the eleven States will be deplorable. I rejoice that Tennessee has provided against such horrors, and that she has a Governor with energy to enforce it. Those temporarily excluded from the elective franchise by the sixth section are excluded because they have committed the highest felony. They may thank the tender mercy of Congress that the punishment is so light. Had they been left to Andrew Johnson "as he was" they would have mounted the block or fled to foreign climes.

The balance of the bill provides for the admission of Tennessee, which deserves special favor as the birth-place or residence of one of the most extraordinary men in his time that has ever appeared on earth. I do not pretend that she is loyal. I believe this day that two thirds of her people are rank and cruel rebels. But her statesmen have been wise and vigilant enough to form a constitution which bridle licentious traitors and secures the State government to the true men. And she has an Executive fit to ride upon the whirlwind. I know that two thirds of the congressional districts will send us secessionists, which will greatly impair our two-third votes. But she has two or three men in her delegation who would have saved Sodom. In the Senate, at least, one man deserves the favor of Congress. Of the other I say nothing, as I know nothing, and I would not do injustice to one who has never done injury to me, or, as far as I know, to the country.

I have done in this matter what I deemed best for humanity. It may be thought I am showing too much anxiety on a question in which I can have no separate personal interest. I know it is easy to protect the interests of the rich and powerful; but it is a great labor to guard the rights of the poor and downtrodden; it is the eternal labor of Sisyphus forever to be renewed. I know how unprofitable is all such toil. But he who is in earnest does not heed these things. I know, too, what effect it has on personal popularity. But if I may be indulged in a little egotism, I will say that if there be anything for which I have entire indifference, perhaps I may say contempt, it is that public opinion which is founded on popular clamor.

In this, perhaps my final action on this great question, upon a careful review, I can see nothing in my political course, especially in regard to human freedom, which I could wish to have expunged or changed. I believe that we must all account hereafter for deeds done in the body, and that political deeds will be among those accounts. I desire to take to the bar of that final settlement the record which I shall this day make on the great question of human rights. While I am sure it will not make atonement for half my errors, I hope it will be some palliation.

Are there any who will venture to take the list, with their negative seal upon it, and will dare to unroll it before that stern Judge who is the Father of the immortal beings whom they have been trampling under foot, and whose souls they have been crushing out?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the concurrent resolution of the House to extend the present session of Congress to half past four o'clock p. m. of this day.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, House bill No. 801, authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and of the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward; in which amendment the concurrence of the House was requested.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. RAYMOND having been called to the Speaker's chair,
Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following resolution, which was unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That the thanks of the members of the House of Representatives are eminently due to Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Speaker, for the dignified, impartial, and decorous manner in which, during the present session of Congress, he has discharged the duties of his position; and truthful recognition of such services is herewith given.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. ROGERS, in pursuance of permission previously given by the House, presented a report from the minority of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, which had been ordered to be printed with the majority report if presented in time.

PAYMENT OF ASSASSINATION REWARDS.

On motion of Mr. DELANO, the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward, was taken from the Speaker's table, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the list of awards for the capture of Jefferson Davis, as follows:

Mr. DELANO. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF DRAFT COMMUTATION.

Mr. ANCONA called for the regular order of business.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of House bill No. 811, for the relief of certain drafted men, which had been postponed to and made the special order for to-day immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The bill was read at length. The preamble sets forth that certain persons drafted into the military service of the United States, under the calls of the President of the United States of February 1, 1864, and March 14, 1864, paid the sum of $300 each, that being the amount of commutation fixed for such service in the fifth section of the amendatory enrollment act of February 24, 1864; and the same persons were afterward again drafted under the call of December 19, 1864, or within less than one year of the previous draft, and before the filling up of all the quotas assigned under the two calls first named above, and were then required to enter the service or furnish substitutes; and the true intent and meaning of the fifth section of the amendatory act of February 24, 1864, being to exempt persons thus paying commutation until the quotas assigned under such calls were full, not exceeding one year, the Secretary of War is directed to refund the sum of $300 so paid by persons for commutation who were afterward again drafted as above stated.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by striking out these words:

Provided, That this section shall apply only to claims received at the War Department prior the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF ACTS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ANCONA introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House ten thousand copies of the acts of the present session of Congress.

PENITENTIARIES IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved that the rules be suspended and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House (No. 715) setting aside certain proceeds from internal revenue for the erection of penitentiaries in the Territories of Nebraska, Washington, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Arizona, and Dakota, for the purpose of having the same considered in the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read at length. It provides that the net proceeds of the internal revenue of the Territories of Nebraska, Washington, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Arizona, and Dakota, for the fiscal years severally ending on June 30, 1866, June 30, 1867, and June 30, 1868, be set aside and appropriated for the purpose of erecting, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, penitentiary buildings in the several Territories, at such places therein as have been or may be designated by the Legislatures thereof and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, provided the moneys so set aside and appropriated in each of the Territories shall be devoted exclusively to the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory in which the same has been and shall be collected, and not in any other, and that the same shall not exceed in amount the sum of $20,000 in the Territory of Washington, and $40,000 in each of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Arizona, and Dakota.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I have been unable to get this bill before this House at an earlier day for the reason that it was not reached upon the Calendar. It is a matter of very great importance to the Territories and to those who represent the Territories in this House, and it is exceedingly necessary that it should be passed. I trust there will be no objection to it. I call the previous question.

Mr. CHAVES. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. RICE] yield to allow me to move to amend by inserting "New Mexico" after "Colorado?"

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I cannot yield for that purpose at this stage of the session.

Mr. CHAVES. Will the gentleman allow me to say a few words?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Certainly; I will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVES] for five minutes.

Mr. CHAVES. There was an appropriation of $60,000 made in 1861 by the Congress of the United States to complete the public buildings in the Territory of New Mexico. The condition of the appropriation was that the $60,000 should finish the buildings. The buildings were started upon a grand scale; upon a grander scale, perhaps, than Congress intended. Still the Secretary of the Treasury must have approved the plans. The $60,000 was not sufficient, though at the time the appropriation was made it was in gold, for there was no other legal money of the United States at the time the appropriation was made. Of course if that was not enough then in gold, it is not enough now in currency. Only about eight thousand dollars of the appropriation has been expended; the rest is still in the Treasury; and if the buildings are left in their present condition they will be a total loss to the Government of the United States; and the mere pittance of $40,000 which I now ask to complete those public buildings is nothing at all compared with what should be given for such a purpose, if necessary. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] knows the condition in which those buildings are now.

It should be remembered also that the Territory of New Mexico was invaded by the confederate forces, and lost some two or three million dollars in consequence of that raid. Now, I appeal to the generosity and liberality of this House to allow sufficient money to build up these buildings for my people, who, though they came into this Union not willingly, but by the fortunes of war, and who are a people of foreign extraction, are and have been as loyal as any people in the world.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Under my instructions from the committee, I cannot allow any amendment to be offered to this bill. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 639) for the relief of Robert Baldwin; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) authorizing the transmission through the mail free of postage of certain certificates by the adjutant general of the State of New Jersey.

COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION.

The SPEAKER announced the following as members of the committee on ventilation of the Hall of the House, authorized by a resolution of the House adopted on yesterday: Messrs. HENRY J. RAYMOND of New York, THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, HENRY L. DAWES of Massachusetts, COLUMBUS DELANO of Ohio, and JOHN A. NICHOLSON of Delaware.

COMMITTEE TO CODIFY CUSTOMS LAWS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD, of Ohio, as the committee on the part of the House under the joint resolution of Congress authorizing the appointment of a joint committee of one member of each House of Congress to codify the laws relating to customs.

REISSUE OF PATENTS.

Mr. MYERS. I ask consent of the House that my colleague on the Committee on Patents [Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut,] be now allowed to make a report from the Committee on Patents, which, in consequence of being absent from his seat, he was not able to make last night when the committee was called.

No objection was made.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, accordingly reported, from the Committee on Patents, a bill providing for the reissue of certain patents; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to receive applications from Richard A. Vervalen, Samuel Godfrey Reynolds, John L. White, and Horace L. Emery, respectively, for an extension of their respective patents, issued in 1852, and to hear and determine such applications upon their respective merits, the same as if the time for such applications had not elapsed; provided, however, that no person or persons who may have made use of the improvements specified in such patents, or any of them, since the time of the expiration of said patents respectively, shall be held liable to any person or persons whatever for such use.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I can explain this matter in about three minutes and a half. All these patents were issued in 1852, to run for the period of fourteen years. At the time they were issued the law was so that an application for the extension of a patent could be made at any time before sixty days prior to the expiration of the patent. These patentees, supposing they were governed by that law, made their application within the time specified by the law as it existed at the period when their patents were issued. When they came before the Commissioner of Patents they learned for the first time that in 1861 the law was changed, making the limit of time ninety days instead of sixty days. The law was changed without their knowledge, and now they come to Congress asking for relief from the consequences of this oversight on their part. They are not to blame for it. Indeed it may be a question whether in equity they had not a right to rely upon the law as it existed at the time they obtained their patents, and that the contract made with them by the Government would be carried out. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF BOUNTY LAW.

Mr. LYNCH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives ten thousand copies extra of the bill of the House No. 737, including the provision for equalizing bounties to soldiers, &c.

VOTE ON CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DELANO. I ask leave of the House to record my vote upon agreeing to the report of the second committee of conference on the civil appropriation bill. I desire to vote in the negative; I understand that will not affect the result.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will not object if I am allowed the same privilege.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the rules be suspended, in order that I may record my vote.

The question was taken, and two thirds not voting in the affirmative the rules were not suspended.

Mr. DELANO. I will only say that had I been able to be here I should have voted in the negative.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to state that I left the Hall at four o'clock this morning, after having voted against the report of the first committee of conference, with the understanding that the second committee of conference would not be likely to make a report for some hours. If I had been here when their report was acted upon I should have voted in the negative.

RECESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House now take a recess, subject to the call of the Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would it not be better to take a recess until some definite time?

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my motion so as to take a recess until two o'clock, subject to being previously called together by the Speaker.

Mr. CONKLING. I would inquire of the Chair to what hour, in his opinion, the House might safely take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the House might safely take a recess until three o'clock. It will depend somewhat upon the action of the President in regard to the bills presented to him for his signature.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my motion to take a recess until two o'clock, and that the Speaker be authorized, in the mean time, to take the chair to receive messages from the Senate and the President, and to sign enrolled bills reported from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] by striking out "two o'clock" and inserting "three o'clock."

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL, as amended, was then agreed to.

And the House accordingly (at twelve o'clock m) took a recess until three o'clock p. m.

During the recess, the following messages from the Senate and reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills were received:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States who have been honorably discharged, so as to relieve them from the further payment of the special five per cent. income tax imposed thereby.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 145) for the relief of George C. Bestor and Charles W. McCord, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 693) for the relief of Robert Baldwin;

An act (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 193) authorizing the transmission through the mails free of postage of certain certificates by the adjutant general of New Jersey.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 491) entitled "An act to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska," with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 801) authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of the assassin of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) to prevent the further enforcement of the joint resolution No. 77, approved July 4, 1864, against officers and soldiers of the United States, &c.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 612) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859;" and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the use of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Fair building in Washington.

The House reassembled at three o'clock.

LAND OFFICE IN NEBRASKA.

Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 491) entitled "An act to remove the office of the surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska," were taken from the Speaker's table and read, as follows:

In line eleven strike out the final "s" in the word "States."
In lines eleven and twelve strike out "and Wisconsin."

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

G. C. BESTOR AND C. W. McCORD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (S. No. 145) for the relief of George C. Bestor and Charles W. McCord; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that this resolution be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope that it will not be referred, but will be acted on now.

The joint resolution, which was read, proposes to direct the Secretary of the Navy to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels-of-war Shiloh, built by George C. Bestor, and the Ullah, built by Charles W. McCord, at St. Louis, Missouri, during the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, and their machinery, cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work paid by the Government of the United States, on account of the interference with and detention of said work by the Government, and to report the facts to the Secretary of the Navy. The joint resolution further proposes to authorize and instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Bestor and McCord respectively the amount reported by the board, not exceeding twelve per cent. upon the contract price of the work, provided that the Secretary of the Navy shall approve the report.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. It seems to me that this resolution contains an appropriation, and should, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole. I make that objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it does not contain an appropriation, but will examine it.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. If it is not an appropriation bill, then I move that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I hope that the gentleman from Ohio will not insist upon that motion. I happen to know something about this claim; and I beg gentlemen not to do injustice to these men. I know something of the history of this transaction. I know that these men have sunk every dollar they were worth in completing these gunboats for the Government. This joint resolution is really not for their benefit, but for the benefit of the workmen who built these gunboats, as it will enable the contractors to pay them. This is nothing but a measure of sheer justice.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I must insist on my motion to refer this resolution to the Committee of Claims. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] says that he knows something of this claim. Mr. Speaker, it is very important that some of the rest of us should know something about it; and we cannot be properly informed unless the case be investigated by the appropriate committee of this House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It has been examined by the Committee on Claims in the Senate.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we are not in the habit of passing bills in this House because they have been investigated by committees at the other end of the Capitol. We have our own committees for the examination of measures coming before us. When a committee of this House shall have examined the case the true state of the facts will be developed. Now, in the last moments of the session, it is no time for us to be passing bills, making large drafts upon the Treasury of the United States, and increasing the taxes of the people.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The object of this resolution is that the claim of these parties may be investigated by a proper commission who shall make a report to the Secretary of the Navy. His approval is necessary before any money can be paid under the report of the commission. Knowing something of this case, I believe that the claim is an entirely meritorious one; and I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REISSUE OF THE DUNDAS PATENT.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following joint resolution:

Whereas the papers in the matter of the application for reissue of the Dundas patent for a cultivator have been furnished and printed too late for consideration at the present session of Congress; Therefore, Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to delay the action of the Patent Office, in the said matter, until Congress can, at a future time, devise some legislation to meet the recommendations of the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the reissue of patents.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. CULLOM. I would like to make a statement in regard to this matter.

Mr. JENCKES. I object. The effort for the renewal of this patent is one of the greatest outrages upon the course of justice that has ever come within my knowledge.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to suspend the rules that I may introduce the resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled, a bill (H. R. No. 491) entitled "An act to remove the office of surveyor general of the State of Iowa to Plattsmouth, Nebraska;" when the Speaker signed the same.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the compensation of the clerks of the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be fixed at the same rate as that of the clerk to the Committee on Public Lands, said compensation to commence with the present session of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. I must object unless the amount is named. Let us know what it is.

Mr. O'NEILL. Eighteen hundred dollars per annum.

Several MEMBERS objected; and the resolution was not received.

PRINTING OF BOUNTY LAW.

Mr. LATHAM, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of this House ten thousand extra copies of the act (H. R. No. 737) containing the provisions equalizing bounties for soldiers.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the resolution so as to provide for the printing of only so much of the act as relates to equalizing bounties.

Mr. LATHAM. I accept that amendment as a modification of my resolution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty," so as to provide for printing twenty thousand copies.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not see any necessity for printing these pamphlets. So much of the act as relates to bounties is embraced in a single section, and it will at once be published in every newspaper throughout the country. Hence there is no necessity that this House should order the printing of any copies.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to say only a word. We have expended considerable money in the business of printing, especially in printing the report and testimony in reference to the Memphis mob or riot. I do not know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL] calls it—massacre, I think. I hope the House will not expend money in printing this matter. It is a most important thing to the soldiers themselves, and there is not a newspaper in the country that will not be delighted to publish it. It will be known in every section of the country long before we can have it printed and mailed to our constituents. I will not detain the House any longer.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I believe, myself, that this law in reference to the equalization of bounties of soldiers has such a general interest that every newspaper in the country will publish it; so there is no need of our entailing upon the Government this expense.

Mr. LATHAM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. DEFREES moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. SCOTFIELD (at ten minutes past three o'clock p. m.) moved that the House take a recess until four o'clock p. m., subject to be called together by the Speaker to receive messages from the President or the Senate or reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

During the recess, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. WILLIAM G. MOORE, one of his Secretaries, notified the House that he had approved and signed the civil appropriation bill; and further, that he returned without his approval an act erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district, and for other purposes, with his objections thereto.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the following joint resolution; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 208) in relation to the use of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan's Fair building in Washington.

AFTER THE RECESS.

Agreeably to order, the Speaker, at four o'clock p. m., again called the House to order.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Field & Clay.

On motion of Mr. BIDWELL, leave was granted for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of Jacob P. Leese.

THE MONTANA BILL VETOED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without my approval the bill entitled "An act erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district, and for other purposes."

The bill contains four sections, the first of which erects the Territory into a surveying district, and authorizes the appointment of a surveyor general; the second constitutes the Territory a land district; the third authorizes the appointment of a register and receiver for said district, and the fourth requires the surveyor general to "select and survey eighteen alternate odd sections of non-mineral timber lands within said district for the New York and Montana Iron Mining and Manufacturing Company, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, which lands the said company shall have immediate possession of on the payment of $1 25 per acre, and shall have a patent for the same whenever, within two years after their selection, they shall have furnished evidence, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, that they have erected and have in operation on the said lands iron-works with a capacity for manufacturing fifteen hundred tons of iron per annum; provided that the said lands shall revert to the United States in case the above-mentioned iron-works be not erected within the specified time, and provided that until the title to the said lands shall have been perfected, the timber shall not be cut off from more than one section of the said lands."

To confer the special privileges specified in this fourth section appears to be the chief object of the bill, the provisions of which are subject to some of the most important objections that induced me to return to the Senate with my disapproval the bill entitled "An act to enable the New York and Montana Iron Mining and Manufacturing Company to purchase a certain amount of the public lands not now in market." That bill authorized the same corporation to select and survey in the Territory of Montana, in square form, twenty-one sections of land, three of which might contain coal and iron ore, for which the minimum rate of $1 25 per acre was to be paid. The present bill omits these sections of mineral lands, and directs the surveyor general to select and survey the timber lands; but it contains the objectionable feature of granting to a private mining and manufacturing corporation exclusive rights and privileges in the public domain which are by law denied to individuals. The first choice of timber land in the Territory is bestowed upon a corporation foreign to the Territory, and over which Congress has no control. The surveyor general of the district, a public officer who should have no connection with any purchase of public land, is made the agent of the corporation to select the land; the selections to be made in the absence of all competition; and over eleven thousand acres are bestowed at the lowest price of public lands. It is by no means certain that the substitution of alternate sections for the compact body of lands contemplated by the other bill is any less injurious to the public interest; for alternate sections stripped of timber are not likely to enhance the value of those reserved by the Government. Be this as it may, this bill bestows a large monopoly of public lands without adequate consideration; confers a right and privilege in quantity equivalent to seventy-two pre-emption rights; introduces a dangerous system of privileges to private trading corporations; and is an unjust discrimination in favor of traders and speculators against individual settlers and pioneers who are seeking homes and improving our western Territories. Such a departure from the long-established, wise, and just policy which has heretofore governed the disposition of the public funds cannot receive my sanction. The objections enumerated apply to the fourth section of the bill. The first, second, and third sections, providing for the appointment of a surveyor general, register, and receiver, are unobjectionable, if any necessity requires the creation of these offices and the additional expenses of a new surveying land district. But they appear in this instance to be only needed as a part of the machinery to enable the "New York and Montana Iron Mining and Manufacturing Company" to secure these privileges; for I am informed by the proper Department, in a communication hereto annexed, that there is no public necessity for a surveyor general, register, or receiver in Montana Territory, since it forms part of an existing surveying and land district, wherein the public business is, under present laws, transacted with adequate facility, so that the provisions of the first, second, and third sections would occasion needless expense to the General Government.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 28, 1866.

Mr. BINGHAM moved that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DRIGGS. I suggest that the House take a recess until twenty-five minutes past four o'clock p. m., unless sooner convened by the Speaker.

Mr. CONKLING. What is there now in order?

The SPEAKER. There are several bills which the President has not yet returned.

DETENTION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of twenty-one members be appointed to inquire as to the alleged abduction and detention of members from the sessions of the House while important measures were pending and being acted on and that they be empowered to send for persons and papers, have leave to sit during the recess and report to the Philadelphia convention on the 14th day of August next.

[Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. Where was the gentleman from Chicago when the civil appropriation bill passed? [Laughter.]

Mr. STROUSE. The gentleman has no right to inquire about the private affairs of any member.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move that the House take a recess until twenty minutes past four o'clock p. m.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DRIGGS withdrew the motion.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move the usual resolution, that a committee be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President and inform him that the two Houses having concluded the business before them are ready to adjourn, unless he has some further communication to make to them.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. MORRILL and Mr. FINCK were appointed as such committee on the part of the House.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee on reconstruction on the part of this House be, and the same is hereby, discharged.

Objection was made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ANDERSON. I propose, by unanimous consent, that the member from Chicago shall have five minutes to explain where he was when the civil appropriation bill was passed. [Laughter.]

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that my remarks will cover more than five minutes, and I will write them out and put them in the Globe, with the consent of the House. [Renewed laughter.]

PAY OF THE CHAPLAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. By some strange construction of the Department they hold our appropriation for the Chaplain cannot be paid because we have not named him. I ask that a joint resolution be prepared to cure the defect, otherwise our worthy Chaplain will receive no compensation. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution to authorize the payment of Rev. Charles B. Boynton, the Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. It authorizes him to draw the amount heretofore appropriated.

Mr. LE BLOND. How is it about the Chaplain of the Senate?

Mr. STEVENS. There is no difficulty about the Chaplain of the Senate.

Objection was made.

Mr. STEVENS moved to suspend the rules.

The rules were suspended.

The joint resolution was introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced the appointment by that body of a committee to wait on the President, in conjunction with a similar committee on the part of the House, and that Mr. HARRIS and Mr. FESSENDEN were appointed as such committee on its part.

Also, that the Senate had concurred in the passage of the House joint resolution (No. 210) authorizing the payment of Rev. C. B. Boynton, as Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 210) authorizing the payment of Rev. C. B. Boynton, as Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by WILLIAM G. MOORE, announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution (H. R. No. 210) authorizing the payment of Rev. C.

B. Boynton as Chaplain of the House of Representatives in the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

CLOSE OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. The committee appointed to wait on the President and inform him that the business of the House was concluded, and to inquire whether he had any further communication to make, have waited upon him, and he has informed us that he has no further communication to make.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I cannot speak the word that announces our separation until I thank you, with all the warm emotions of a grateful heart, for the unanimously adopted resolution you have placed on your Journal. Unusual as this is at the close of a first session of Congress, its value is thereby enhanced; and I prize it because I believe it is your sincere indorsement of my endeavors to administer the duties of this responsible and often trying position with an earnest impartiality. To maintain the just rights of a majority, to protect the even more necessary rights of a minority, and yet to hold the scales so fairly poised that every decision shall stand the test of reason and of parliamentary law, watched as a presiding officer always must be by scores of critical eyes, is never less than difficult. And he is fortunate who can impress the body over which he presides with the conviction that his constant aim has been to render justice to all.

Meeting here amid the frosts of early winter, and parting after such a prolonged session amid the torrid heats of summer, friendships have been formed which will brighten as year after year rolls away. Discussing some of the gravest questions ever submitted to a deliberative body in this land, the attrition of mind with mind, and the conflict of thought and action have left but few stings behind, and despite all differences of sentiment no Congress within my experience here has closed its session with more general good feeling among its members. We go back, as our institutions wisely prescribe, to submit to our constituents the issues which have divided us here, and to cheerfully abide by their verdict, as a court from which there is no rightful appeal. Wishing you all a safe journey to your homes, and a happy reunion with family and friends, I do now, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of both Houses, declare the first session of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Ninth Congress adjourned sine die.

THE END.

Message of the President.

SENATE & HO. OF REFS.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

To express gratitude to God, in the name of the people, for the preservation of the United States, is my first duty in addressing you. Our thoughts next revert to the death of the late President by an act of parricidal treason. The grief of the nation is still fresh; it finds some solace in the consideration that he lived to enjoy the highest proof of its confidence by entering on the renewed term of the Chief Magistracy to which he had been elected; that he brought the civil war substantially to a close; that his loss was deplored in all parts of the Union; and that foreign nations have rendered justice to his memory. His removal cast upon me a heavier weight of cares than ever devolved upon any one of his predecessors. To fulfill my trust, I need the support and confidence of all who are associated with me in the various departments of Government, and the support and confidence of the people. There is but one way in which I can hope to gain their necessary aid; it is, to state with frankness the principles which guide my conduct, and their application to the present state of affairs, well aware that the efficiency of my labors will, in a great measure, depend on your and their undivided approbation.

The Union of the United States of America was intended by its authors to last as long as the States themselves shall last. "THE UNION SHALL BE PERPETUAL" are the words of the Confederation. "TO FORM A MORE PERFECT UNION," by an ordinance of the people of the United States, is the declared purpose of the Constitution. The hand of divine Providence was never more plainly visible in the affairs of men than in the framing and the adopting of that instrument. It is, beyond comparison, the greatest event in American history; and indeed is it not, of all events in modern times, the most pregnant with consequences for every people of the earth? The members of the Convention which prepared it, brought to their work the experience of the Confederation, of their several States, and of other republican Governments, old and new; but they needed and they obtained a wisdom superior to experience. And when for its validity it required the approval of a people that occupied a large part of a continent and acted separately in many distinct conventions, what is more wonderful than that, after earnest contention and long discussion, all feelings and all opinions were ultimately drawn in one way to its support?

The Constitution to which life was thus imparted contains within itself ample resources for its own preservation. It has power to enforce the laws, punish treason, and insure domestic tranquillity. In case of the usurpation of the government of a State by one man, or an oligarchy, it becomes a duty of the United States to make good the guarantee to that State of a republican form of government, and so to maintain the homogeneousness of all. Does the lapse of time reveal defects? A simple mode of amendment is provided in the Constitution itself, so that its conditions can always be made to conform to the requirements of advancing civilization. No room is allowed even for the thought of a possibility of its coming to an end. And these powers of self-preservation have always been asserted in their complete integrity by every patriotic Chief Magistrate—by Jefferson and Jackson, not less than by Washington and Madison. The parting advice of the Father of his Country, while yet President, to the people of the United States, was, that "the free Constitution, which was the work of their hands, might be sacredly maintained;" and the inaugural words of President Jefferson held up "the preservation of the General Government, in its constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad." The Constitution is the work of "the people of the United States," and it should be as indestructible as the people.

It is not strange that the framers of the Constitution, which had no model in the past, should not have fully comprehended the excellence of their own work. Fresh from a struggle against arbitrary power, many patriots suffered from harassing fears of an absorption of the State governments by the General Government, and many from a dread that the States would break away from their orbits. But the very greatness of our country should allay the apprehension of encroachments by the General Government. The subjects that come unquestionably within its jurisdiction are so numerous, that it must ever naturally refuse to be embarrassed by questions that lie beyond it. Were it otherwise, the Executive would sink beneath the burden; the channels of justice would be choked; legislation would be obstructed by excess; so that there is a greater temptation to exercise some of the functions of the General Government through the States than to trespass on their rightful sphere. "The absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority" was, at the beginning of the century, enforced by Jefferson "as the vital principle of republics," and the events of the last four years have established, we will hope forever, that there lies no appeal to force.

The maintenance of the Union brings with it "the support of the State governments in all their rights;" but it is not one of the rights of any State government to renounce its own place in the Union, or to nullify the laws of the Union. The largest liberty is to be maintained in the discussion of the acts of the Federal Government; but there is no appeal from its laws, except to the various branches of that Government itself, or to the people, who grant to the members of the legislative and of the executive departments no tenure but a limited one, and in that manner always retain the powers of redress.

"The sovereignty of the States" is the language of the Confederacy, and not the language of the Constitution. The latter contains the emphatic words, "The Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Certainly the Government of the United States is a limited Government; and so is every State government a limited government. With us, this idea of limitation spreads through every form of administration, general, State, and municipal, and rests on the great distinguishing principle of the recognition of the rights of man. The ancient republics absorbed the individual in the State, prescribed his religion, and controlled his activity. The American system rests on the assertion of the equal right of every man to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; to freedom of conscience, to the culture and exercise of all his faculties. As a consequence, the State government is limited, as to the General Government in the interests of union, as to the individual citizen in the interest of freedom.

States, with proper limitations of power, are essential to the existence of the Constitution of the United States. At the very commencement, when we assumed a place among the Powers of the earth, the Declaration of Independence was adopted by States; so also were the Articles of Confederation; and when "the people of the United States" ordained and established the Constitution, it was the assent of the States, one by one, which gave it vitality. In the event, too, of any amendment to the Constitution, the proposition of Congress needs the confirmation of States. Without States, one great branch of the legislative government would be wanting. And, if we look beyond the letter of the Constitution to the character of our country, its capacity for comprehending within its jurisdiction a vast continental empire is due to the system of States. The best security for the perpetual existence of the States is the "supreme authority" of the Constitution of the United States. The perpetuity of the Constitution brings with it the perpetuity of the States; their mutual relation makes us what we are, and in our political system their connection is indissoluble. The whole cannot exist without the parts, nor the parts without the whole. So long as the Constitution of the United States endures, the States will endure; the destruction of the one is the destruction of the other; the preservation of the one is the preservation of the other.

I have thus explained my views of the mutual relations of the Constitution and the States, because they unfold the principles on which I have sought to solve the momentous questions and overcome the appalling difficulties that met me at the very commencement of my administration. It has been my steadfast object to escape from the sway of momentary passions, and to derive a healing policy from the fundamental and unchanging principles of the Constitution.

I found the States suffering from the effects of a civil war. Resistance to the General Government appeared to have exhausted itself. The United States had recovered possession of their forts and arsenals; and their armies were in the occupation of every State which had attempted to secede. Whether the territory within the limits of those States should be held as conquered territory, under military authority emanating from the President as the head of the Army, was the first question that presented itself for decision.

Now, military governments, established for an indefinite period, would have offered no security for the early suppression of discontent; would have divided the people into the vanquishers and the vanquished; and would have envenomed hatred, rather than have restored affection. Once established, no precise limit to their continuance was conceivable. They would have occasioned an incalculable and exhausting expense. Peaceful emigration to and from that portion of the country is one of the best means that can be thought of for the restoration of harmony; and that emigration would have been prevented; for what emigrant from abroad, what industrious citizen at home, would place himself willingly under military rule? The chief persons who would have followed in the train of the Army would have been dependents on the General Government, or men who expected profit from the miseries of their erring fellow-citizens. The powers of patronage and rule which would have been exercised, under the President, over a vast and populous and naturally wealthy region, are greater than, unless under extreme necessity, I should be willing to intrust to any one man; they are such as, for myself, I could never, unless on occasions of great emergency, consent to exercise. The willful use of such powers, if continued through a period of years, would have endangered the purity of the general administration and the liberties of the States which remained loyal.

Besides, the policy of military rule over a conquered territory would have implied that the States whose inhabitants may have taken part in the rebellion had, by the act of those inhabitants, ceased to exist. But the true theory is, that all pretended acts of secession were, from the beginning, null and void. The States cannot commit treason, nor screen the individual citizens who may have committed treason, any more than they can make valid treaties or engage in lawful commerce with any foreign Power. The States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired, but not extinguished—their functions suspended, but not destroyed.

But if any State neglects or refuses to perform its offices, there is the more need that the General Government should maintain all its authority, and, as soon as practicable, resume the exercise of all its functions. On this principle I have acted, and have gradually and quietly, and by almost imperceptible steps, sought to restore the rightful energy of the General Government and of the States. To that end, provisional governors have been appointed for the States, conventions called, Governors elected, Legislatures assembled, and Senators and Representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. At the same time the courts of the United States, as far as could be done, have been reopened, so that the laws of the United States may be enforced through their agency. The blockade has been removed and the custom-houses reestablished in ports of entry, so that the revenue of the United States may be collected. The Post Office Department renews its ceaseless activity, and the General Government is thereby enabled to communicate promptly with its officers and agents. The courts bring security to persons and property; the opening of the ports invites the restoration of industry and commerce; the post office renews the facilities of social intercourse and of business. And is it not happy for us all, that the restoration of each one of these functions of the General Government brings with it a blessing to the States over which they are extended? Is it not a sure promise of harmony and renewed attachment to the Union that, after all that has happened, the return of the General Government is known only as a beneficence?

I know very well that this policy is attended with some risk; that for its success it requires at least the acquiescence of the States which it concerns; that it implies an invitation to those States, by renewing their allegiance to the United States, to resume their functions as States of the Union. But it is a risk that must be taken; in the choice of difficulties, it is the smallest risk; and to diminish, and, if possible, to remove all danger, I have felt it incumbent on me to assert one other power of the General Government—the power of pardon. As no State can throw a defense over the crime of treason, the power of pardon is exclusively vested in the Executive Government of the United States. In exercising that power, I have taken every precaution to connect it with the clearest recognition of the binding force of the laws of the United States, and an unqualified acknowledgment of the great social change of condition in regard to slavery which has grown out of the war.

The next step which I have taken to restore the constitutional relations of the States has been an invitation to them to participate in the high office of amending the Constitution. Every patriot must wish for a general amnesty at the earliest epoch consistent with public safety. For this great end there is need of a concurrence of all opinions, and the spirit of mutual conciliation. All parties in the late terrible conflict must work together in harmony. It is not too much to ask, in the name of the whole people, that, on the one side, the plan of restoration shall proceed in conformity with a willingness to cast the disorders of the past into oblivion; and that, on the other, the evidence of sincerity in the future maintenance of the Union shall be put beyond any doubt by the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, which provides for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of our country. So long as the adoption of this amendment is delayed, so long will doubt and jealousy and uncertainty prevail. This is the measure which will efface the sad memory of the past; this is the measure which will most certainly call population and capital and security to those parts of the Union that need them most. Indeed, it is not too much to ask of the States which are now resuming their places in the family of the Union to give this pledge of perpetual loyalty and peace. Until it is done, the past, however much we may desire it, will not be forgotten. The adoption of the amendment reunites us beyond all power of disruption. It heals the wound that is still imperfectly closed; it removes slavery, the element which has so long perplexed and divided the country; it makes of us once more a united people, renewed and strengthened, bound more than ever to mutual affection and support.

The amendment to the Constitution being adopted, it would remain for the States, whose powers have been so long in abeyance, to resume their places in the two branches of the national Legislature, and thereby complete the work of restoration. Here it is for you, fellow-citizens of the Senate, and for you, fellow-citizens of the House of Representatives, to judge, each of you for yourselves, of the elections, returns, and qualifications of your own members.

The full assertion of the powers of the General Government requires the holding of circuit courts of the United States within the districts where their authority has been interrupted. In the present posture of our public affairs, strong objections have been urged to holding those courts in any of the States where the rebellion has existed; and it was ascertained, by inquiry, that the circuit court of the United States would not be held within the district of Virginia during the autumn or early winter, nor until Congress should have "an opportunity to consider and act on the whole subject." To your deliberations the restoration of this branch of the civil authority of the United States is therefore necessarily referred, with the hope that early provision will be made for the resumption of all its functions. It is manifest that treason, most flagrant in its character, has been committed. Persons who are charged with its commission should have fair and impartial trials in the highest civil tribunals of the country, in order that the Constitution and the laws may be fully vindicated; the truth clearly established and affirmed that treason is a crime, that traitors should be punished and the offense made infamous; and, at the same time, that the question may be judicially settled, finally and forever, that no State of its own will has the right to renounce its place in the Union.

The relations of the General Government toward the four million inhabitants whom the war has called into freedom have engaged my most serious consideration. On the propriety of attempting to make the freedmen electors by the proclamation of the Executive, I took for my counsel the Constitution itself, the interpretations of that instrument by its authors and their contemporaries, and recent legislation by Congress. When, at the first movement toward independence, the Congress of the United States instructed the several States to institute governments of their own, they left each State to decide for itself the conditions for the enjoyment of the elective franchise. During the period of the Confederacy, there continued to exist a very great diversity in the qualifications of electors in the several States; and even within a State a distinction of qualifications prevailed with regard to the officers who were to be chosen. The Constitution of the United States recognizes those diversities when it enjoins that, in the choice of members of the House of Representatives of the United States, "the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature." After the formation of the Constitution, it remained, as before, the uniform usage for each State to enlarge the body of its electors, according to its own judgment; and, under this system, one State after another has proceeded to increase the number of its electors, until now universal suffrage, or something very near it, is the general rule. So fixed was this reservation of power in the habits of the people, and so unquestioned has been the interpretation of the Constitution, that during the civil war the late President never harbored the purpose—certainly never avowed the purpose—of disregarding it; and in the acts of Congress, during that period, nothing can be found which, during the continuance of hostilities, much less after their close, would have sanctioned any departure by the Executive from a policy which has so uniformly obtained. Moreover, a concession of the elective franchise to the freedmen, by act of the President of the United States, must have been extended to all colored men, wherever found, and so must have established a change of suffrage in the northern, middle, and western States, not less than in the southern and southwestern. Such an act would have created a new class of voters, and would have been an assumption of power by the President which nothing in the Constitution or laws of the United States would have warranted.

On the other hand, every danger of conflict is avoided when the settlement of the question is referred to the several States. They can, each for itself, decide on the measure, and whether it is to be adopted at once and absolutely, or introduced gradually and with conditions. In my judgment, the freedmen, if they show patience and manly virtues, will sooner obtain a participation in the elective franchise through the States than through the General Government, even if it had power to intervene. When the tumult of emotions that have been raised by the suddenness of the social change shall have subsided, it may prove that they will receive the kindest usage from some of those on whom they have heretofore most closely depended.

But while I have no doubt that now, after the close of the war, it is not competent for the General Government to extend the elective franchise in the several States, it is equally clear that good faith requires the security of the freedmen in their liberty and their property, their right to labor, and their right to claim the just return of their labor. I cannot too strongly urge a dispassionate treatment of this subject, which should be carefully kept aloof from all party strife. We must equally avoid hasty assumptions of any natural impossibility for the two races to live side by side, in a state of mutual benefit and good-will. The experiment involves us in no inconsistency. Let us, then, go on and make that experiment in good faith, and not be too easily disheartened. The country is in need of labor, and the freedmen are in need of employment, culture, and protection. While their right of voluntary migration and expatriation is not to be questioned, I would not advise their forced removal and colonization. Let us rather encourage them to honorable and useful industry where it may be beneficial to themselves and to the country; and, instead of hasty anticipations of the certainty of failure, let there be nothing wanting to the fair trial of the experiment. The change in their condition is the substitution of labor by contract for the status of slavery. The freedman cannot fairly be accused of unwillingness to work, so long as a doubt remains about his freedom of choice in his pursuits, and the certainty of his recovering his stipulated wages. In this the interests of the employer and the employed coincide. The employer desires in his workmen spirit and alacrity, and these can be permanently secured in no other way. And if the one ought to be able to enforce the contract, so ought the other. The public interest will be best promoted, if the several States will provide adequate protection and remedies for the freedmen. Until this is in some way accomplished, there is no chance for the advantageous use of their labor; and the blame of ill-success will not rest on them.

I know that sincere philanthropy is earnest for the immediate realization of its remotest aims; but time is always an element in reform. It is one of the greatest acts on record to have brought four million people into freedom. The career of free industry must be fairly opened to them; and then their future prosperity and condition must, after all, rest mainly on themselves. If they fail, and so perish away, let us be careful that the failure shall not be attributable to any denial of justice. In all that relates to the destiny of the freedmen, we need not be too anxious to read the future; many incidents which, from a speculative point of view, might raise alarm, will quietly settle themselves.

Now that slavery is at an end or near its end, the greatness of its evil, in the point of view of public economy, becomes more and more apparent. Slavery was essentially a monopoly of labor, and as such locked the States where it prevailed against the incoming of free industry. Where labor was the property of the capitalist, the white man was excluded from employment, or had but the second best chance of finding it; and the foreign emigrant turned away from the region where his condition would be so precarious. With the destruction of the monopoly, free labor will hasten from all parts of the civilized world to assist in developing various and immeasurable resources which have hitherto lain dormant. The eight or nine States nearest the Gulf of Mexico have a soil of exuberant fertility, a climate friendly to long life, and can sustain a denser population than is found as yet in any part of our country. And the future influx of population to them will be mainly from the North, or from the most cultivated nations in Europe. From the sufferings that have attended them during our late struggle, let us look away to the future, which is sure to be laden for them with greater prosperity than has ever before been known. The removal of the monopoly of slave labor is a pledge that those regions will be peopled by a numerous and enterprising population, which will vie with any in the Union in compactness, inventive genius, wealth, and industry.

Our Government springs from and was made for the people—not the people for the Government. To them it owes allegiance; from them it must derive its courage, strength, and wisdom. But, while the Government is thus bound to defer to the people, from whom it derives its existence, it should, from the very consideration of its origin, be strong in its power of resistance to the establishment of inequalities. Monopolies, perpetuities, and class legislation, are contrary to the genius of free government, and ought not to be allowed. Here, there is no room for favored classes or monopolies; the principle of our Government is that of equal laws and freedom of industry. Wherever monopoly attains a foothold, it is sure to be a source of danger, discord, and trouble. We shall but fulfill our duties as legislators by according "equal and exact justice to all men," special privileges to none. The Government is subordinate to the people; but, as the agent and representative of the people, it must be held superior to monopolies, which, in themselves, ought never to be granted, and which, where they exist, must be subordinate and yield to the Government.

The Constitution confers on Congress the right to regulate commerce among the several States. It is of the first necessity, for the maintenance of the Union, that that commerce should be free and unobstructed. No State can be justified in any device to tax the transit of travel and commerce between States. The position of many States is such that, if they were allowed to take advantage of it for purposes of local revenue, the commerce between States might be injuriously burdened, or even virtually prohibited. It is best, while the country is still young, and while the tendency to dangerous monopolies of this kind is still feeble, to use the power of Congress so as to prevent any selfish impediment to the free circulation of men and merchandise. A tax on travel and merchandise, in their transit, constitutes one of the worst forms of monopoly, and the evil is increased if coupled with a denial of the choice of route. When the vast extent of our country is considered, it is plain that every obstacle to the free circulation of commerce between the States ought to be sternly guarded against by appropriate legislation, within the limits of the Constitution.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior explains the condition of the public lands, the transactions of the Patent Office and the Pension Bureau, the management of our Indian affairs, the progress made in the construction of the Pacific railroad, and furnishes information in reference to matters of local interest in the District of Columbia. It also presents evidence of the successful operation of the homestead act, under the provisions of which 1,160,533 acres of the public lands were entered during the last fiscal year—more than one fourth of the whole number of acres sold or otherwise disposed of during that period. It is estimated that the receipts derived from this source are sufficient to cover the expenses incident to the survey and disposal of the lands entered under this act, and that payments in cash to the extent of from forty to fifty per cent. will be made by settlers, who may thus at any time acquire title before the expiration of the period at which it would otherwise vest. The homestead policy was established only after long and earnest resistance; experience proves its wisdom. The lands, in the hands of industrious settlers, whose labor creates wealth and contributes to the public resources, are worth more to the United States than if they had been reserved as a solitude for future purchasers.

The lamentable events of the last four years, and the sacrifices made by the gallant men of our Army and Navy, have swelled the records of the Pension Bureau to an unprecedented extent. On the 30th day of June last, the total number of pensioners was 85,986, requiring for their annual pay, exclusive of expenses, the sum of $8,023,445. The number of applications that have been allowed since that date will require a large increase of this amount for the next fiscal year. The means for the payment of the stipends due, under existing laws, to our disabled soldiers and sailors, and to the families of such as have perished in the service of the country, will no doubt be cheerfully and promptly granted. A grateful people will not hesitate to sanction any measures having for their object the relief of soldiers mutilated and families made fatherless in the efforts to preserve our national existence.

The report of the Postmaster General presents an encouraging exhibit of the operations of the Post Office Department during the year. The revenues of the past year from the loyal States alone exceeded the maximum annual receipts from all the States previous to the rebellion, in the sum of $6,038,091; and the annual average increase of revenue during the last four years, compared with the revenues of the four years immediately preceding the rebellion, was $3,533,845. The revenues of the last fiscal year amounted to $14,556,158, and the expenditures to $13,694,728, leaving a surplus of receipts over expenditures of $861,430. Progress has been made in restoring the postal service in the southern States. The views presented by the Postmaster General against the policy of granting subsidies to ocean mail steamship lines upon established routes, and in favor of continuing the present system, which limits the compensation for ocean service to the postage earnings, are recommended to the careful consideration of Congress.

It appears, from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, that while, at the commencement of the present year, there were in commission 530 vessels of all classes and descriptions, armed with 3,000 guns and manned by 51,000 men, the number of vessels at present in commission is 117, with 830 guns and 12,128 men. By this prompt reduction of the naval forces the expenses of the Government have been largely diminished, and a number of vessels, purchased for naval purposes from the merchant marine, have been returned to the peaceful pursuits of commerce. Since the suppression of active hostilities our foreign squadrons have been reestablished, and consist of vessels much more efficient than those employed on similar service previous to the rebellion. The suggestion for the enlargement of the navy-yards, and especially for the establishment of one in fresh water for iron-clad vessels, is deserving of consideration, as is also the recommendation for a different location and more ample grounds for the Naval Academy.

SENATE &amp; HO. OF REPS.

Message of the President.

39TH CONG....1ST SESS.

In the report of the Secretary of War, a general summary is given of the military campaigns of 1864 and 1865, ending in the suppression of armed resistance to the national authority in the insurgent States. The operations of the general administrative bureaus of the War Department during the past year are detailed, and an estimate made of the appropriations that will be required for military purposes in the fiscal year commencing the 1st day of July, 1866. The national military force on the 1st of May, 1865, numbered 1,000,516 men. It is proposed to reduce the military establishment to a peace footing, comprehending fifty thousand troops of all arms, organized so as to admit of an enlargement by filling up the ranks to eighty-two thousand six hundred, if the circumstances of the country should require an augmentation of the Army. The volunteer force has already been reduced by the discharge from service of over eight hundred thousand troops, and the Department is proceeding rapidly in the work of further reduction. The war estimates are reduced from $516,240,131 to $33,814,461; which amount, in the opinion of the Department, is adequate for a peace establishment. The measures of retrenchment in each bureau and branch of the service exhibit a diligent economy worthy of commendation. Reference is also made in the report to the necessity of providing for a uniform militia system, and to the propriety of making suitable provision for wounded and disabled officers and soldiers.

The revenue system of the country is a subject of vital interest to its honor and prosperity, and should command the earnest consideration of Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury will lay before you a full and detailed report of the receipts and disbursements of the last fiscal year, of the first quarter of the present fiscal year, of the probable receipts and expenditures for the other three quarters, and the estimates for the year following the 30th of June, 1866. I might content myself with a reference to that report, in which you will find all the information required for your deliberations and decision, but the paramount importance of the subject so presses itself on my own mind, that I cannot but lay before you my views of the measures which are required for the good character, and, I might almost say, for the existence of this people. The life of a republic lies certainly in the energy, virtue, and intelligence of its citizens; but it is equally true that a good revenue system is the life of an organized Government. I meet you at a time when the nation has voluntarily burdened itself with a debt unprecedented in our annals. Vast as is its amount, it fades away into nothing when compared with the countless blessings that will be conferred upon our country and upon man by the preservation of the nation's life. Now, on the first occasion of the meeting of Congress since the return of peace, it is of the utmost importance to inaugurate a just policy, which shall at once be put in motion, and which shall commend itself to those who come after us for its continuance. We must aim at nothing less than the complete effacement of the financial evils that necessarily followed a state of civil war. We must endeavor to apply the earliest remedy to the deranged state of the currency, and not shrink from devising a policy which, without being oppressive to the people, shall immediately begin to effect a reduction of the debt, and, if persisted in, discharge it fully within a definitely fixed number of years.

It is our first duty to prepare in earnest for our recovery from the ever-increasing evils of an irredeemable currency, without a sudden revulsion, and yet without untimely procrastination. For that end, we must, each in our respective positions, prepare the way. I hold it the duty of the Executive to insist upon frugality in the expenditures; and a sparing economy is itself a great national resource. Of the banks to which authority has been given to issue notes secured by bonds of the United States, we may require the greatest moderation and prudence, and the law must be rigidly enforced when its limits are exceeded. We may, each one of us, counsel our active and enterprising countrymen to be constantly on their guard, to liquidate debts contracted in a paper currency, and, by conducting business as nearly as possible on a system of cash payments or short credits, to hold themselves prepared to return to the standard of gold and silver. To aid our fellow-citizens in the prudent management of their monetary affairs, the duty devolves on us to diminish by law the amount of paper money now in circulation. Five years ago the bank-note circulation of the country amounted to not much more than two hundred millions; now the circulation, bank and national, exceeds seven hundred millions. The simple statement of the fact recommends, more strongly than any words of mine could do, the necessity of our restraining this expansion. The gradual reduction of the currency is the only measure that can save the business of the country from disastrous calamities; and this can be almost imperceptibly accomplished by gradually funding the national circulation in securities that may be made redeemable at the pleasure of the Government.

Our debt is doubly secure—first in the actual wealth and still greater undeveloped resources of the country; and next in the character of our institutions. The most intelligent observers among political economists have not failed to remark, that the public debt of a country is safe in proportion as its people are free; that the debt of a republic is the safest of all. Our history confirms and establishes the theory, and is, I firmly believe, destined to give it a still more signal illustration. The secret of this superiority springs not merely from the fact that in a republic the national obligations are distributed more widely through countless numbers in all classes of society; it has its root in the character of our laws. Here all men contribute to the public welfare, and bear their fair share of the public burdens. During the war, under the impulses of patriotism, the men of the great body of the people, without regard to their own comparative want of wealth, thronged to our armies and filled our fleets of war, and held themselves ready to offer their lives for the public good. Now, in their turn, the property and income of the country should bear their just proportion of the burden of taxation, while in our impost system, through means of which increased vitality is incidentally imparted to all the industrial interests of the nation, the duties should be so adjusted as to fall most heavily on articles of luxury, leaving the necessities of life as free from taxation as the absolute wants of the Government, economically administered, will justify. No favored class should demand freedom from assessment, and the taxes should be so distributed as not to fall unduly on the poor, but rather on the accumulated wealth of the country. We should look at the national debt just as it is—not as a national blessing, but as a heavy burden on the industry of the country, to be discharged without unnecessary delay.

It is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury that the expenditures for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1866, will exceed the receipts $112,194,947. It is gratifying, however, to state that it is also estimated that the revenue for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, will exceed the expenditures in the sum of $111,682,818. This amount, or so much as may be deemed sufficient for the purpose, may be applied to the reduction of the public debt, which, on the 31st day of October, 1865, was $2,740,854,750. Every reduction will diminish the total amount of interest to be paid, and so enlarge the means of still further reductions, until the whole shall be liquidated; and this, as will be seen from the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, may be accomplished by annual payments even within a period not exceeding thirty years. I have faith that we shall do all this within a reasonable time; that, as we have amazed the world by the suppression of a civil war which was thought to be beyond the control of any Government, so we shall equally show the superiority of our institutions by the prompt and faithful discharge of our national obligations.

The Department of Agriculture, under its present direction, is accomplishing much in developing and utilizing the vast agricultural capabilities of the country; and for information respecting the details of its management, reference is made to the annual report of the Commissioner.

I have dwelt thus fully on our domestic affairs because of their transcendent importance. Under any circumstances, our great extent of territory and variety of climate, producing almost everything that is necessary for the wants, and even the comforts of man, make us singularly independent of the varying policy of foreign Powers, and protect us against every temptation to "entangling alliances," while at the present moment the reestablishment of harmony, and the strength that comes from harmony, will be our best security against "nations who feel power and forget right." For myself, it has been and it will be my constant aim to promote peace and amity with all foreign nations and Powers; and I have every reason to believe that they all, without exception, are animated by the same disposition. Our relations with the Emperor of China, so recent in their origin, are most friendly. Our commerce with his dominions is receiving new developments; and it is very pleasing to find that the Government of that great empire manifests satisfaction with our policy, and reposes just confidence in the fairness which marks our intercourse. The unbroken harmony between the United States and the Emperor of Russia is receiving a new support from an enterprise designed to carry telegraphic lines across the continent of Asia, through his dominions, and so to connect us with all Europe by a new channel of intercourse. Our commerce with South America is about to receive encouragement by a direct line of mail steamships to the rising empire of Brazil. The distinguished party of men of science who have recently left our country to make a scientific exploration of the natural history and rivers and mountain ranges of that region, have received from the Emperor that generous welcome which was to have been expected from his constant friendship for the United States, and his well-known zeal in promoting the advancement of knowledge. A hope is entertained that our commerce with the rich and populous countries that border the Mediterranean sea may be largely increased. Nothing will be wanting, on the part of this Government, to extend the protection of our flag over the enterprise of our fellow-citizens. We receive from the Powers in that region assurances of good-will; and it is worthy of note that a special envoy has brought us messages of condolence on the death of our late Chief Magistrate from the Bey of Tunis, whose rule includes the old dominions of Carthage, on the African coast.

Our domestic contest, now happily ended, has left some traces in our relations with one at least of the great maritime Powers. The formal accordance of belligerent rights to the insurgent States was unprecedented, and has not been justified by the issue. But in the systems of neutrality pursued by the Powers which made that concession, there was a marked difference. The materials of war for the insurgent States were furnished, in a great measure, from the workshops of Great Britain; and British ships, manned by British subjects, and prepared for receiving British armaments, sallied from the ports of Great Britain to make war on American commerce, under the shelter of a commission from the insurgent States. These ships, having once escaped from British ports, ever afterward entered them in every part of the world, to refit, and so to renew their depredations. The consequences of this conduct were most disastrous to the States then in rebellion, increasing their desolation and misery by the prolongation of our civil contest. It had, moreover, the effect, to a great extent, to drive the American flag from the sea, and to transfer much of our shipping and our commerce to the very Power whose subjects had created the necessity for such a change. These events took place before I was called to the administration of the Government. The sincere desire for peace by which I am animated led me to approve the proposal, already made, to submit the questions which had thus arisen between the countries to arbitration. These questions are of such moment that they must have commanded the attention of the great Powers, and are so interwoven with the peace and interests of every one of them as to have insured an impartial decision. I regret to inform you that Great Britain declined the arbitrament, but, on the other hand, invited us to the formation of a joint commission to settle mutual claims between the two countries, from which those for the depredations before mentioned should be excluded. The proposition, in that very unsatisfactory form, has been declined.

The United States did not present the subject as an impeachment of the good faith of a Power which was professing the most friendly dispositions, but as involving questions of public law, of which the settlement is essential to the peace of nations; and, though pecuniary reparation to their injured citizens would have followed incidentally on a decision against Great Britain, such compensation was not their primary object. They had a higher motive, and it was in the interests of peace and justice to establish important principles of international law. The correspondence will be placed before you. The ground on which the British minister rests his justification is, substantially, that the municipal law of a nation, and the domestic interpretations of that law, are the measure of its duty as a neutral; and I feel bound to declare my opinion, before you and before the world, that that justification cannot be sustained before the tribunal of nations. At the same time I do not advise to any present attempt at redress by acts of legislation. For the future, friendship between the two countries must rest on the basis of mutual justice.

From the moment of the establishment of our free Constitution, the civilized world has been convulsed by revolutions in the interests of democracy or of monarchy; but through all those revolutions the United States have wisely and firmly refused to become propagandists of republicanism. It is the only government suited to our condition; but we have never sought to impose it on others; and we have consistently followed the advice of Washington to recommend it only by the careful preservation and prudent use of the blessing. During all the intervening period the policy of European Powers and of the United States has, on the whole, been harmonious. Twice, indeed, rumors of the invasion of some parts of America, in the interest of monarchy, have prevailed; twice my predecessors have had occasion to announce the views of this nation in respect to such interference. On both occasions the remonstrance of the United States was respected, from a deep conviction, on the part of European Governments, that the system of non-interference and mutual abstinence from propagandism was the true rule for the two hemispheres. Since those times we have advanced in wealth and power; but we retain the same purpose to leave the nations of Europe to choose their own dynasties and form their own systems of government. This consistent moderation may justly demand a corresponding moderation. We should regard it as a great calamity to ourselves, to the cause of good government, and to the peace of the world, should any European Power challenge the American people, as it were, to the defense of republicanism against foreign interference. We cannot foresee and are unwilling to consider what opportunities might present themselves, what combinations might offer to protect ourselves against designs inimical to our form of government. The United States desire to act in the future as they have ever acted heretofore; they never will be driven from that course but by the aggression of European Powers; and we rely on the wisdom and justice of those Powers to respect the system of non-interference which has so long been sanctioned by time, and which, by its good results, has approved itself to both continents.

The correspondence between the United States and France, in reference to questions which have become subjects of discussion between the two Governments, will, at a proper time, be laid before Congress.

When, on the organization of our Government, under the Constitution, the President of the United States delivered his inaugural address to the two Houses of Congress, he said to them, and through them to the country and to mankind, that "the preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered as deeply, perhaps as finally, staked on the experiment intrusted to the American people." And the House of Representatives answered Washington by the voice of Madison: "We adore the invisible Hand which has led the American people, through so many difficulties, to cherish a conscious responsibility for the destiny of republican liberty." More than seventy-six years have glided away since these words were spoken; the United States have passed through severer trials than were foreseen; and now, at this new epoch in our existence as one nation, with our Union purified by sorrows, and strengthened by conflict, and established by the virtue of the people, the greatness of the occasion invites us once more to repeat, with solemnity, the pledges of our fathers to hold ourselves answerable before our fellow-men for the success of the republican form of government. Experience has proved its sufficiency in peace and in war; it has vindicated its authority through dangers, and afflictions, and sudden and terrible emergencies, which would have crushed any system that had been less firmly fixed in the heart of the people. At the inauguration of Washington the foreign relations of the country were few, and its trade was repressed by hostile regulations; now all the civilized nations of the globe welcome our commerce, and their Governments profess toward us amity. Then our country felt its way hesitatingly along an untrodden path, with States so little bound together by rapid means of communication as to be hardly known to one another, and with historic traditions extending over very few years; now intercourse between the States is swift and intimate; the experience of centuries has been crowded into a few generations, and has created an intense, indestructible nationality. Then our jurisdiction did not reach beyond the inconvenient boundaries of the territory which had achieved independence; now, through cessions of lands, first colonized by Spain and France, the country has acquired a more complex character, and has for its natural limits the chain of lakes, the Gulf of Mexico, and on the east and the west the two great oceans. Other nations were wasted by civil wars for ages before they could establish for themselves the necessary degree of unity; the latent conviction that our form of government is the best ever known to the world, has enabled us to emerge from civil war within four years; with a complete vindication of the constitutional authority of the General Government, and with our local liberties and State institutions unimpaired. The throngs of emigrants that crowd to our shores are witnesses of the confidence of all peoples in our performance. Here is the great land of free labor, where industry is blessed with unexampled rewards, and the bread of the working-man is sweetened by the consciousness that the cause of the country "is his own cause, his own safety, his own dignity." Here every one enjoys the free use of his faculties and the choice of activity as a natural right. Here, under the combined influence of a fruitful soil, genial climes, and happy institutions, population has increased fifteen-fold within a century. Here, through the easy development of boundless resources, wealth has increased with twofold greater rapidity than numbers, so that we have become secure against the financial vicissitudes of other countries, and, alike in business and in opinion, are self-centered and truly independent. Here more and more care is given to provide education for every one born on our soil. Here religion, released from political connection with the civil government, refuses to subserve the craft of statesmen, and becomes, in its independence, the spiritual life of the people. Here toleration is extended to every opinion, in the quiet certainty that truth needs only a fair field to secure the victory. Here the human mind goes forth unshackled in the pursuit of science, to collect stores of knowledge and acquire an ever-increasing mastery over the forces of nature. Here the national domain is offered and held in millions of separate freeholds, so that our fellow-citizens, beyond the occupants of any other part of the earth, constitute in reality a people. Here exists the democratic form of government; and that form of government, by the confession of European statesmen, "gives a power of which no other form is capable, because it incorporates every man with the State, and arouses everything that belongs to the soul."

Where, in past history, does a parallel exist to the public happiness which is within the reach of the people of the United States? Where, in any part of the globe, can institutions be found so suited to their habits or so entitled to their love as their own free Constitution? Every one of them, then, in whatever part of the land he has his home, must wish its perpetuity. Who of them will not now acknowledge, in the words of Washington, that "every step by which the people of the United States have advanced to the character of an independent nation, seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency?" Who will not join with me in the prayer, that the invisible Hand which has led us through the clouds that gloomed around our path, will so guide us onward to a perfect restoration of fraternal affection, that we of this day may be able to transmit our great inheritance, of State governments in all their rights, of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor, to our posterity, and they to theirs through countless generations?

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, December 4, 1865.

Report of the Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, November 22, 1865.

MR. PRESIDENT: The military appropriations by the last Congress amounted to the sum of $516,240,131 70. The military estimates for the next fiscal year, after careful revision, amount to $33,814,461 83. The national military force on the 1st of May, 1865, numbered 1,000,516 men. It is proposed to reduce the military establishment to 50,000 troops, and over 800,000 have already been mustered out of service. What has occasioned this reduction of force and expenditure in the War Department, it is the purpose of this report to explain.

At the commencement of the last session of Congress much had been accomplished toward suppressing the rebellion and restoring Federal authority over the insurgent States. But the rebels still held Richmond as the capital of their so-called confederate government, and the semblance of State government existed in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, and Texas, while a strong military force occupied a considerable portion of Arkansas and Louisiana. Their principal army, under its favorite commander, General Lee, defended with undaunted front impregnable positions around Petersburg and Richmond. Another army, under General Hood, was moving north, with purpose to invade Tennessee and Kentucky. West of the Mississippi, a large force, under General Kirby Smith, threatened Arkansas, Kansas, and Missouri. The chief sea-ports of the rebel States—Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile—were strongly garrisoned and fortified, and our blockading squadrons were unable to prevent trade and supplies reaching the enemy. Pirate steamers, built in foreign ports for rebel cruisers, armed, manned, equipped, and supplied by foreign capital, roamed the high seas, burning our ships and destroying our commerce. Marauders, hired by the rebel government and harbored on our northern frontier, were setting on foot piratical expeditions against our commerce on the lakes, planning to burn and plunder our towns and cities, and were plotting murder against the President and Vice President of the United States, in hopes of overthrowing our Government by anarchy. Faith in their final success and hope of open recognition by foreign Governments still animated leading traitors.

But now the approaching session of Congress will find the authority of the Federal Government effectually and peacefully exercised over the whole territory of the United States. All the armies heretofore arrayed against the national Government have laid down their arms, and surrendered as prisoners of war. Every hostile banner has been hauled down; the so-called confederate government is overthrown; its president is a prisoner in close custody, awaiting trial; while its vice president and three of its chief executive officers have been recently enlarged from prison by your clemency. All the ordinances, laws, and organizations created or existing under or by virtue of the so-called confederate government have been swept away, and, by your sanction, the people of the insurgent States have organized, or are busily engaged in organizing, State governments, in subordination to the Federal authority. In harmony with this new condition of affairs, the military force of the Federal Government has been reduced, large armies disbanded, and nearly a million of brave men, lately soldiers in arms, paid and honorably mustered out of service, have gone from camps, garrisons, and posts to their homes, and most of them are engaged already in the peaceful pursuits of civil life.

Among the causes which, under divine Providence, have brought about these wonderful results, successful military operations stand first in order.

A clear comprehension of these operations requires a brief glance at the military position just before the spring campaigns of 1864.

Notwithstanding the successful campaigns on the Mississippi in 1863, by the reduction of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, severed in twain the rebel territory and restored to us the navigation and commerce of the Mississippi, while the victory at Gettysburg drove back the rebel invaders from the northern States, yet the military strength of the rebels continued formidable. The army of Virginia, under General Lee, recovered from its disaster at Gettysburg, occupied its former lines in Virginia, protecting the rebel capital, and holding inactive and in check the army of the Potomac. Another large army, under General Bragg, reinforced by Longstreet's corps, threatened the reconquest of Tennessee. After the disastrous battle of Chickamauga, our army of the Cumberland, shut up and surrounded at Chattanooga, unable to move by reason of the inclemency of the weather and impassable roads, was in extreme jeopardy.

At this discouraging juncture a change of military organization was made. The departments of the Ohio, the Tennessee, and the Cumberland were united in one military division, called the division of the Mississippi, under Major General Grant. Command of the army of the Cumberland was given to Major General George H. Thomas, relieving General Rosecrans. A winter campaign was immediately directed against Bragg's army. The battles of Wauhatchie, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, and Chattanooga opened our communications, and routed Bragg's army with heavy loss. The movement of Longstreet's corps against Knoxville, to recover East Tennessee, also proved a disastrous failure to the rebels, who were driven off and forced back to the mountains.

In the month of February, 1864, General Sherman's movement, with a large force, from Vicksburg, into the interior of the State of Alabama, as far as Meridian, inflicted heavy loss upon the enemy by the destruction of railroads and supplies, the capture of prisoners, and the escape of negroes and refugees. This operation demonstrated the capacity of an invading army to penetrate the rebel States and support itself on the country, and was the forerunner of the great movements in Georgia.

The arrangements for the spring campaigns of 1864 were made, on the part of the Government, to put forth its strength. In all the bureaus of the War Department supplies were provided on a scale of great magnitude, to meet any exigency that could be foreseen. The estimates were based upon an army organization of one million men. The States were called upon to strengthen the armies by volunteers; new drafts were ordered and put into execution throughout all the loyal States; vast supplies of arms, ammunition, clothing, subsistence, medical stores, and forage were provided and distributed in depots, to meet the wants of the troops wherever they might operate; horses, mules, wagons, railroad iron, locomotives and cars, bridge timber, telegraph cable and wire, and every material for transportation and communication of great armies under all conditions, were supplied. Congress, with unstinting hand, voted large appropriations for recruiting, paying, and supplying the troops. The office of Lieutenant General, to command all the armies, was created by law. Ulysses S. Grant was appointed to that rank by the President, and assumed command, as Lieutenant General, on the 17th day of March, 1864, from which time the operations of all the armies were under his direction.

The national forces engaged in the spring campaign of 1864 were organized as armies or distributed in military departments, as follows:

The army of the Potomac, commanded by Major General Meade, whose headquarters were on the north side of the Rapidan. This army was confronted by the rebel army of Northern Virginia, stationed on the south side of the Rapidan, under General Robert E. Lee.

The Ninth corps, under Major General Burnside, was, at the opening of the campaign, a distinct organization, but on the 24th day of May, 1864, it was incorporated into the army of the Potomac.

The army of the James was commanded by Major General Butler, whose headquarters were at Fortress Monroe.

The headquarters of the army of the Shenandoah, commanded by Major General Sigel, were at Winchester.

Three armies were united under Major General William T. Sherman, namely, the army of the Cumberland, Major General Thomas commanding; the army of the Tennessee, Major General McPherson commanding; and the army of the Ohio, Major General Schofield commanding. General Sherman's headquarters were at Chattanooga. The effective strength of these three armies was nearly 100,000 men, and 254 guns, to wit:

Army of the Cumberland, Major General Thomas commanding:

About these figures were maintained during the campaign; the number of men joining from furlough and hospitals compensating for the loss in battle and from sickness.

In the department of Kentucky there was likewise a large active force, under command of Major General Burbridge, and also in East Tennessee, under Major General Stoneman. Adequate forces were reserved in the department of Washington, under Major General Augur, to protect the capital and the immense depots of military supplies at Washington and Alexandria, and also in the military department under Major General Lewis Wallace, to cover Baltimore and the important lines of supply and communication in that department. Besides the armies operating actively in the field, troops were assigned to garrison exposed and important strategic points, to guard hospitals, recruiting stations, prison camps, supply depots, railroad lines, and to defend border States and the northern frontier from rebel raids.

In the department of the South a force was operating against Charleston and in Florida, under General Gillmore.

West of the Mississippi the forces were under the respective departmental commanders. In the department of the Gulf, embracing Louisiana and Texas, Major General Banks had his headquarters at New Orleans. The department of Arkansas was in command of Major General Steele. Major General Curtis commanded the troops assigned for the department of Kansas and the Indian Territory. The troops in the department of Missouri were under command of Major General Rosecrans. The defense of the northwestern States and Territories against Indians, expeditions to check incursions and reduce hostile tribes, and to protect the overland route to California, employed a considerable force under Major General Pope, in the Northwest department, General Carleton in New Mexico and Arizona, and General Conner in the Indian Territory. The States and Territories on the Pacific coast required but a small force, under Major General McDowell.

The headquarters of the Lieutenant General commanding all the armies were with the army of the Potomac in the field.

Official reports show that on the 1st of May, 1864, the aggregate national military force of all arms, officers and men, was 970,710, to wit:

Active military operations west of the Mississippi commenced in the month of March, 1864. The principal rebel forces beyond the Mississippi were concentrated under General Kirby Smith, at Shreveport, on the Red river. Against this force an expedition was undertaken by Major General Banks, with a large army from New Orleans, to be cooperated with by troops from the department of Arkansas, under General Steele, and from the division of the Mississippi, under General A. J. Smith, and also a large naval force under Admiral Porter. General Banks with his forces reached Alexandria about the 20th of March. Advancing thence toward Shreveport, a series of disasters commenced, that ended in the failure of the expedition with heavy loss of men and material. The cause of this failure is still a subject of discussion, not material to the present report. Although by this mishap the enemy was enabled to occupy the attention of a large force designed and that might have been employed in other fields, he was himself kept in check and hindered from taking part in the great campaigns east of the Mississippi.

The campaigns in Virginia opened on the 4th day of May. By simultaneous movements the army of the Potomac crossed the Rapidan, and City Point, on the south side of the James, was seized and occupied by General Butler. The crossing of the Rapidan was effected without resistance from the enemy. The movement against City Point took him by surprise. The army of the Potomac was directed at Lee's army, while the city of Richmond was the objective point of the army of the James.

Minute details of the subsequent campaigns are given in the accompanying reports of the Lieutenant General and other distinguished commanders, so that nothing more than a cursory view of the main results is here required.

The antagonist armies of Meade and Lee met in conflict near Mine Run on the 5th day of May. Forty-three days of desperate fighting or marching by day and night forced back the rebel army from the Rapidan to their intrenchments around Richmond, and carried the army of the Potomac to the south side of the James river. The strength of the enemy's force when the campaign opened, or the extent of his loss, is not known to this Department. Any inequality of numbers between Lee's army and the army of the Potomac was fully compensated by the advantage of position. Resolute purpose and desperate valor were exhibited on both sides. In the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court-House, Jericho Ford, Hawe's Shop, and Cold Harbor, many brave soldiers and gallant officers perished. Among them were Brigadier General Wadsworth, Brigadier General Hays, and Major General Sedgwick. Lieutenant General Grant in his report observes:

"The battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, and Cold Harbor, bloody and terrible as they were on our side, were even more damaging to the enemy, and so crippled him as to make him wary ever after of taking the offensive. His losses in men were probably not so great, owing to the fact that we were, save in the Wilderness, almost invariably the attacking party, and when he did attack it was in the open field."

Although expectations of destroying Lee's army, and the speedy capture of Richmond and Petersburg, were disappointed, and the enemy had found refuge behind impregnable fortifications, the campaign was still prosecuted with determined purpose toward the same object. While the rebel army was sheltered in his intrenchments the national forces were busy at work outside strengthening and advancing their position, breaking the communications of the enemy, cutting off and destroying his supplies, narrowing his limits, harassing him by raids, and occupying his attention to prevent detachments or reinforcements being sent to operate elsewhere.

Active operations were also going on in the valley of the Shenandoah. On the 1st of May an expedition, under Generals Crook and Averill, was sent out by General Sigel, which reached Wytheville and accomplished the destruction of much rebel property. General Sigel advanced, on the 8th day of May, with his force, from Winchester to New Market, where, met by the enemy under General Breckinridge, he was defeated and fell back to Cedar creek. General Hunter was then placed in command of the department. He marched with a strong force toward Staunton, and in a brilliant engagement at Piedmont defeated the enemy with severe loss. Advancing to Staunton, he was joined there by Crook and Averill, and moved against Lynchburg. Reinforcements from the enemy having arrived before him, General Hunter retired by way of the Kanawha. Meanwhile, in order to repair the losses of the army of the Potomac, the chief part of the force designed to guard the Middle department and the department of Washington, was called forward to the front. Taking advantage of this state of affairs, in the absence of General Hunter's command, the enemy made a large detachment from their army at Richmond, which, under General Early, moved down the Shenandoah valley, threatening Baltimore and Washington. Their advance was checked at Monocacy, where a severe engagement was fought by our troops under General Wallace, reinforced by a part of the Sixth corps under General Ricketts. After this battle the enemy continued to advance until they reached the intrenchments around Washington. Here they were met by troops from the army of the Potomac, consisting of the Sixth corps, under General Wright, a part of the Eighth corps, under General Gillmore, and a part of the Nineteenth corps, just arrived from New Orleans, under General Emory. By these troops the enemy were driven back from Washington, and retreated hastily to Virginia, pursued by our forces under General Wright.

On the 7th day of August, 1864, General Sheridan was placed in command of the military division comprising the department of Washington, the department of West Virginia, the department of the Susquehanna, and the Middle department. In two great battles, at the crossing of the Opequan on the 19th of September, and at Fisher's Hill on the 22d of September, the rebel army under Early was routed and driven from the valley with immense loss of prisoners, artillery, and stores. A desperate effort was made by the enemy to recover their position. Early was strongly reinforced, and on the morning of the 19th of October, in the absence of General Sheridan, his lines were surprised, his position turned, and his forces driven back in confusion. At the moment when a great disaster was impending, Sheridan appeared upon the field, the battle was restored, and a brilliant victory achieved. The routed forces of the enemy were pursued to Mount Jackson, where he arrived without an organized regiment of his army. All his artillery and thousands of prisoners fell into Sheridan's hands. These successes closed military operations in the Shenandoah valley, and a rebel force appeared there no more during the war.

Major General William T. Sherman began the brilliant series of his campaigns early in May. The first objective point was Atlanta. To reach that city his armies must pass from the northern limit to the center of the great State of Georgia, forcing their way through mountain defiles and across great rivers, overcoming or turning formidable intrenched positions, defended by a strong, well-appointed, veteran army, commanded by an alert, cautious, and skillful general. The campaign opened on the 6th day of May, and on the 2d day of September the national forces entered Atlanta. This achievement is thus described in General Sherman's Field Order No. 68:

"On the 1st of May our armies were lying in garrison, seemingly quiet, from Knoxville to Huntsville, and our enemy lay behind his rocky-faced barrier at Dalton, proud, defiant, and exulting. He had had time since Christmas to recover from his discomfiture on the Mission Ridge, with his ranks filled, and a new commander-in-chief, and second to none in the confederacy in reputation for skill, sagacity, and extreme popularity. All at once our armies assumed life and action, and appeared before Dalton. Threatening Rocky Face, we threw ourselves upon Kennesaw, and the rebel army only escaped by the rapidity of its retreat, aided by the numerous roads with which he was familiar, and which were strange to us. Again he took post in Allatoona, but we gave him no rest, and, by our circuit toward Dallas and subsequent movement to Acworth, we gained the Allatoona Pass. Then followed the eventful battles about Kennesaw, and the escape of the enemy across the Chattahoochee river.

"The crossing of the Chattahoochee and the breaking of the Augusta road was most handsomely executed by us, and will be studied as an example in the art of war. At this stage of our game our enemies became dissatisfied with their old and skillful commander, and selected one more bold and rash. New tactics were adopted. Hood first boldly and rapidly, on the 20th of July, fell on our right at Peach Tree creek, and lost. Again, on the 22d, he struck our extreme left, and was severely punished; and finally, again, on the 28th, he repeated the attempt on our right, and that time must have become satisfied, for since that date he has remained on the defensive. We slowly and gradually drew our lines about Atlanta, feeling for the railroad which supplied the rebel army and made Atlanta a place of importance.

"We must concede to our enemy that he met these efforts patiently and skillfully, but at last he made the mistake we had waited for so long, and sent his cavalry to our rear far beyond the reach of recall. Instantly our cavalry was on his only remaining road, and we followed quickly with our principal army, and Atlanta fell into our possession as the fruit of well-concerted measures, backed by a brave and confident army."

For military reasons, stated in the report of the Lieutenant General, it was determined that Atlanta should be destroyed, and Sherman's armies push forward to Savannah or some other point on the Atlantic.

Shortly before the fall of Atlanta, General Johnston had been superseded in command of the rebel army by General Hood, who, adopting a different system from that pursued by his cautious predecessor, boldly assumed the offensive, with a view to force General Sherman from Georgia, by cutting off his communications, and invading Tennessee and Kentucky. Pursuant to this plan, Hood, by a rapid march, gained and broke up, at Big Shanty, the railroad that supplied Sherman's army, advanced to Dalton, and thence moved toward Tennessee. Hood was followed from Atlanta by General Sherman far enough north to cover his own purpose and assure him against Hood's interrupting the contemplated march to the sea-coast. Sherman turned back suddenly to Atlanta. That city, and all the railroads leading to it, were destroyed, and on the 15th of November the march commenced for Savannah. Advancing in three columns, and living upon the country, the capital of the State and other large towns were occupied without resistance. General Sherman's command, on the 10th of December, "closed in on the enemy's works which covered Savannah." Fort McAllister was gallantly carried by assault on the same day. The city of Savannah, strongly fortified, and garrisoned by a large force under General Hardie, was summoned, but surrender was refused. Preparations for assault were made, and in the night of the 20th of December, Hardie evacuated the city, and, with a large part of his garrison, escaped under cover of darkness. The United States troops entered the city early in the morning of the 21st of December. Immense quantities of arms, ammunition, ordnance, and military stores were captured, and the cotton that fell into our hands amounted in value to many million dollars.

While General Sherman's army was marching south from Atlanta to the sea-coast the rebel army under Hood, strongly reinforced, was moving north, threatening Tennessee. The task of encountering this formidable foe, and defending the border States from invasion, was intrusted to Major General George H. Thomas, who was ably assisted by his second in command, Major General Schofield. In his report General Thomas says:

"I found myself confronted by the army which, under General J. E. Johnston, had so skillfully resisted the advance of the whole active army of the military division of the Mississippi from Dalton to the Chattahoochee, reinforced by a well-equipped and enthusiastic cavalry command of over 12,000 men, led by one of the boldest and most successful cavalry commanders in the rebel army. My information from all sources confirmed the reported strength of Hood's army to be from forty to forty-five thousand infantry and from twelve to fifteen thousand cavalry. My effective force at this time consisted of the Fourth corps, about 12,000, under Major General D. S. Stanley; the Twenty-third corps, about 10,000, under Major General Schofield; Hatcher's division of cavalry, about 4,000; Croxton's brigade, 2,500; and Capron's brigade, of about 1,200. The balance of my force was distributed along the railroad, and posted at Murfreesboro', Stevenson, Bridgeport, Huntsville, Decatur, and Chattanooga, to keep open our communications and hold the posts above named, if attacked, until they could be reinforced, as up to this time it was impossible to determine which course Hood would take, advance on Nashville or turn toward Huntsville. Under these circumstances, it was manifestly best to act on the defensive until sufficiently reinforced to justify taking the offensive. On the 12th of November communication with General Sherman was severed, the last dispatch from him leaving Cartersville, Georgia, at twenty-five minutes past two o'clock p. m. on that date. He had started on his great expedition from Atlanta to the seaboard, leaving me to guard Tennessee, or to pursue the enemy if he followed the commanding general's column. It was, therefore, with considerable anxiety that we watched the force at Florence, to discover what course they would pursue with regard to General Sherman's movements, determining thereby whether the troops under my command, numbering less than half those under Hood, were to act on the defensive in Tennessee, or take the offensive in Alabama."

When the possibility of Hood following Sherman was over, General Thomas took measures to act on the defensive. Reinforcements of new regiments were hurried forward to him by the Governors of the western States. All troops fit for any military duty were collected and sent forward from the hospitals; absentees on leave were called in; the employés in the quartermaster's department were armed and organized for duty in the intrenchments, and two divisions of veteran infantry, under command of General A. J. Smith, that had been serving on the Red river, and afterward in Missouri, were pushed forward to General Thomas. By these means his forces were speedily swelled, when concentrated, to an army nearly as large as that of the enemy. The public property and garrisons were drawn in from exposed positions and points not required to be held, the fortifications of Nashville were strengthened, and every preparation was made for a struggle of no ordinary magnitude. Hood advanced to Columbia, where his attempt to cross Duck creek was checked for a while by General Schofield, who repulsed the enemy many times with heavy loss. Schofield's main force in front of Columbia was withdrawn on the night of the 29th of November, and a position taken at Franklin on the morning of the 30th. Here took place one of the most fierce and bloody battles of the war.

"The enemy," says General Thomas in his report, "followed closely after General Schofield's rear-guard in the retreat to Franklin, and upon coming up with the main force, formed rapidly and advanced to assault our works, repeating attack after attack during the entire afternoon, and as late as ten p. m. his efforts to break our lines were continued. General Schofield's position was excellently chosen, with both flanks resting on the river, and his men firmly held their ground against an overwhelming enemy, who was repulsed in every assault along the whole line. Our loss, as given by General Schofield in his report, transmitted herewith, (and to which I respectfully refer,) is 189 killed, 1,033 wounded, and 1,104 missing, making an aggregate of 2,326. We captured and sent to Nashville 702 prisoners, including 1 general officer and 33 stands of colors. Major General D. S. Stanley, commanding Fourth corps, was severely wounded at Franklin while engaged in rallying a portion of his command which had been temporarily overpowered by an overwhelming attack of the enemy. At the time of the battle the enemy's loss was known to be severe, and was estimated at 5,000. The exact figures were only obtained, however, on the re-occupation of Franklin by our forces, after the battles of December 15 and 16, at Brentwood Hills, near Nashville, and are given as follows: buried upon the field, 1,750; disabled and placed in hospital at Franklin, 3,800; which, with the 702 prisoners already reported, makes an aggregate loss of 6,252, among whom were 6 general officers killed, 6 wounded, and 1 captured. The important results of this signal victory cannot be too highly appreciated; for it not only seriously checked the enemy's advance, and gave General Schofield time to remove his troops and all his property to Nashville, but it also caused deep depression among the men of Hood's army, making them doubly cautious in their subsequent movements."

On the night after the battle of Franklin, General Schofield, by the direction of General Thomas, fell back to Nashville, in front of which city, on the heights, a line of battle was formed by noon of the 1st of December. Hood's army appeared before Nashville on the 2d of December. The intense severity of the weather prevented operations for several days. Both armies were ice-bound for a week previous to the 14th of December, when the weather moderated, and General Thomas, having completed his preparations, issued orders for battle the ensuing day. At an early hour on the morning of the 15th of December, General Thomas moved against Hood's army. The battle was furiously contested until nightfall.

"The total result was the capture of 16 pieces of artillery and 1,200 prisoners, besides several hundred stand of small arms and about forty wagons. The enemy had been forced back at all points, with heavy loss, and our casualties were unusually light. The behavior of the troops was unsurpassed for steadiness and alacrity in every movement, and the original plan of battle, with but few alterations, was strictly adhered to. The whole command bivouacked in line of battle during the night on the ground occupied at dark, while preparations were made to renew the battle at an early hour on the morrow."

The battle was renewed on the 16th, at six o'clock in the morning. At three o'clock in the afternoon the enemy's strong position on Overton's Hill was assaulted by the Fourth corps.

"Immediately following the effort of the Fourth corps, Generals Smith's and Schofield's commands moved against the enemy's works in their respective fronts, carrying all before them, irreparably breaking his lines in a dozen places, and capturing all his artillery and thousands of prisoners, among the latter four general officers. Our loss was remarkably small, scarcely mentionable. All of the enemy that did escape were pursued over the tops of Brentwood or Harpeth Hills. General Wilson's cavalry dismounted, attacked the enemy simultaneously with Schofield and Smith, striking him in reverse, and gaining firm possession of Granny White Pike, cut off his retreat by that route. Wood's and Steedman's troops, hearing the shouts of victory coming from the right, rushed impetuously forward, renewing the assault on Overton's Hill, and although meeting a very heavy fire, the onset was irresistible, artillery and innumerable prisoners falling into our hands. The enemy, hopelessly broken, fled in confusion through the Brentwood Pass, the Fourth corps in a close pursuit, which was continued for several miles, when darkness closed the scene, and the troops rested from their labors. During the two days' operations there were 4,462 prisoners captured, including 287 officers of all grades from that of major general, 53 pieces of artillery, and thousands of small arms. The enemy abandoned on the field all of his dead and wounded."

At the battle of Nashville Hood's army, which at one time was considered the best drilled and most formidable rebel force set on foot during the war, disappeared as an army organization. Commanded successively by Bragg, Johnston, and Hood, many bloody fields proved the courage of the soldiers and the skill of its commanders. The shattered fragments of this army were pursued from Nashville to the Tennessee river by the main forces of General Thomas, and were followed and harassed for two hundred miles by detached commands. In his report General Thomas remarks:

"To Colonel Palmer and his command is accorded the credit of giving Hood's army the last blow of the campaign, at a distance of over two hundred miles from where we first struck the enemy on the 15th of December, near Nashville."

What troops escaped from the pursuit were afterward united with other fragments of rebel forces under General Johnston, and finally laid down their arms to General Sherman at Raleigh.

While the events that have been mentioned were transpiring in the main armies, other military operations of less magnitude, but contributing to the general result by harassing and weakening the enemy, were in progress. A large rebel force, under John Morgan, invaded Kentucky, and was defeated by General Burbridge in a severe engagement at Cynthiana on the 12th day of June. John Morgan was surprised and killed, and his staff captured by General Gillem on the 4th day of September, 1864. In the month of November a rebel expedition, under Breckinridge, Duke, and Vaughn, was repulsed by General Ammen, and driven from East Tennessee. An expedition, under General Stoneman and General Burbridge, penetrated to Saltville, in southwestern Virginia, destroyed the works at that place, broke up the railroads, and inflicted great destruction upon the enemy's supplies and communications.

After the withdrawal of our troops from the Red river, a large rebel force advanced under Sterling Price into Kansas, and penetrated thence into the department of the Missouri. But they were at length driven back with heavy loss.

Other military operations, of greater or less magnitude, occurred during the year—some attended with disaster, some with brilliant success. Of the former class were Kilpatrick's raid against Richmond; the capture of Plymouth and its garrison, at the commencement of the year, by the rebels under Hoke; the defeat of the expedition from Memphis, under General Sturgis; the capture of Fort Pillow by Chalmers and Forrest; and Stoneman's expedition to Andersonville. On the other hand, the raids of Grierson from Memphis, in December, of Stoneman and Burbridge into Virginia, of Wilson into Alabama, inflicted sore distress upon the enemy, and brought the rebels to a solemn sense of the sufferings caused to themselves by the war they had undertaken against their Government.

At the commencement of the year 1865 all hearts were more anxious than ever to bring the war to a speedy close. Every preparation to that end was made by the Department, and by the military commanders in the field. Adequate appropriations were voted and new popular loans authorized by Congress. Further measures for recruiting the Army, prompted by experience, were enacted. A new draft for half a million men was put into prompt execution. The State Executives renewed their labors in calling for volunteers. The people responded to the demands of the occasion, and rapid recruitment began in all the States, and was at its height when Richmond fell. Troops were at that time being raised, organized, armed, and equipped as fast as they could be conveniently transported to the field. To the coming campaigns through the Carolinas and in Virginia all eyes looked for a speedy and decisive result that should end the war. The military position is thus stated by the Lieutenant General:

"In March, 1865, General Canby was moving an adequate force against Mobile and the army defending it, under General Dick Taylor; Thomas was pushing out two large and well-appointed cavalry expeditions—one from Middle Tennessee, under Brevet Major General Wilson, against the enemy's vital points in Alabama; the other from East Tennessee, under Major General Stoneman, toward Lynchburg—and assembling the remainder of his available forces, preparatory to offensive operations from East Tennessee. General Sheridan's cavalry was at White House; the armies of the Potomac and James were confronting the enemy under Lee in his defenses of Richmond and Petersburg; General Sherman, with his armies, reinforced by that of General Schofield, was at Goldsboro'; General Pope was making preparations for a spring campaign against the enemy under Kirby Smith and Price, west of the Mississippi; and General Hancock was concentrating a force in the vicinity of Winchester,

The active operations of 1865 began with the reduction of Fort Fisher, by a combined expedition of land and naval forces. The port of Wilmington, North Carolina, during the whole war, had been a principal point of foreign trade with the rebels. The advantage of its position defied the most rigorous blockade, and, after the fall of Savannah, it was the only gate through which foreign supplies could pass to the rebels. The strong works and garrison of Fort Fisher, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, were the main defense of Wilmington. On the 13th of December a force of about 6,500 men, under Major General Butler, started from Fortress Monroe to operate, in conjunction with a naval force under Admiral Porter, against Fort Fisher. General Butler effected a landing on the 25th of December, but reëmbarked on the 27th, and returned with his troops to Fortress Monroe. The Lieutenant General ordered the enterprise to be renewed by General Terry, who, on the 2d of January, was placed in command of the same troops, with a reinforcement that made the whole number about 8,000. On the morning of the 13th of January the troops were disembarked, under cover of a heavy and effective fire from the fleet. An assault was made in the afternoon of the 15th of January, and, after desperate hand-to-hand fighting for several hours, the works were carried, the enemy driven out, and about midnight the whole garrison, with its commander, General Whiting, surrendered. The fall of Fort Fisher carried with it the other defenses of Cape Fear river. Fort Caswell and the works on Smith's Island fell into our hands on the 16th and 17th. Fort Anderson on the 19th, and, General Schofield advancing, the enemy were driven from Wilmington on the 21st of February.

Early in the month of January Major General

Sherman, having refitted his army, entered upon his campaign from Savannah, through the States of South Carolina and North Carolina, the incidents of which are detailed in his accompanying report. Its result is thus stated in his special Field Order No. 76:

"Waiting at Savannah only long enough to fill our wagons, we again began a march, which, for peril, labor, and results, will compare with any ever made by an organized army. The floods of the Savannah, the swamps of the Combahee and Edisto, the 'high hills' and rocks of the Santee, the flat quagmires of the Pedee and Cape Fear rivers, were all passed in mid-winter, with its floods and rains, in the face of an accumulating enemy; and after the battles of Averysboro' and Bentonville, we once more came out of the wilderness to meet our friends at Goldsboro'. Even then we paused only long enough to get new clothing, to reload our wagons, and again pushed on to Raleigh and beyond, until we met our enemy suing for peace instead of war, and offering to submit to the injured laws of his and our country."

The operations in General Canby's military division also exercised an important influence at this juncture. After the disaster upon the Red river, a change of the military organization west of the Mississippi was made to meet the emergency. The departments of Arkansas and the Gulf, including Louisiana and Texas, were united in one military division, West Mississippi, under the command of Major General Canby. His efforts were directed to the organization and concentration of the forces and material within his division, and in measures to prevent the rebel troops west of the Mississippi from reinforcing the armies operating east of that river. In the month of July, Fort Gaines, Fort Powell, and Fort Morgan, constituting important defenses of Mobile bay, were reduced by a combined movement of land forces, under General Gordon Granger, detached by General Canby, and coöperating with a naval force under Admiral Farragut. Early in the spring of 1865, a large force, under Generals A. J. Smith, Gordon Granger, and F. Steele, was directed against the city of Mobile. The enemy were driven out of Spanish Fort by bombardment, Fort Blakely was taken by assault, and the city of Mobile was evacuated by the enemy on the 12th of April. The brilliance of these achievements has been overshadowed by the grander scale of operations in other quarters, but their skill and success are worthy of high admiration. After the fall of Savannah, Charleston, and Wilmington, the enemy had placed his last hopes on retaining a foothold in the cotton States at Mobile. It was strongly fortified and garrisoned, and orders were issued to hold it at every hazard.

In the latter part of February, General Sheridan, under direction of the Lieutenant General, moved from Winchester to Staunton, which place he captured on the 2d of March, taking prisoners, artillery, and military stores. He thence moved on Charlottesville, and destroyed the Richmond and Lynchburg railroad, and the bridges across the Rivanna river. Dividing his forces, one column moved to New Market and crossed the James River canal; the other column pushed toward Lynchburg, destroying the railroad to Amherst Court-House. These columns, reuniting, moved to the White House, on the Pamunkey, effecting great destruction of the canal on their route, and thence put themselves in communication with the forces around Richmond.

The month of March, 1865, opened the great campaign against Richmond and the rebel army that had so long defended the rebel capital.

Instructions were given by the Lieutenant General on the 24th of March for a general movement of the national forces around Richmond. It commenced on the morning of the 29th of March. Ten days' marching and fighting finished the campaign. Richmond, Petersburg, the army of Virginia, and its commander, were captured. Jefferson Davis and his so-called confederate government were fugitives or prisoners of war. Davis fled from Richmond in the afternoon of Sunday, the 2d day of April. The national forces occupied Petersburg and entered Richmond Monday morning. Lee's army was pursued until it reached Appomattox Court-House, where, on Sunday, the 9th day of April, it laid down its arms on the terms prescribed by General Grant.

From this period the history of the war is but an enumeration of successive surrenders by rebel commanders. On the 26th day of April General Johnston surrendered his command to Major General Sherman, at Raleigh, North Carolina. General Howell Cobb, with twelve hundred militia and five generals, surrendered to General Wilson, at Macon, Georgia, on the 20th of April. General Dick Taylor, on the 14th of May, surrendered all the remaining rebel forces east of the Mississippi to General Canby. On the 11th of May, Jefferson Davis, disguised and in flight, was captured at Irwinesville, Georgia. On the 26th of May, General Kirby Smith surrendered his entire command west of the Mississippi to Major General Canby. With this surrender the organized rebel force disappeared from the territory of the United States.

The flag of the United States was lowered at Fort Sumter on the 14th of April, 1861, by Major Anderson, who, long besieged by overwhelming rebel forces, was compelled, with his small garrison, to evacuate the works. On the anniversary of that day, four years later, the rebel forces having been driven from Charleston, the national banner was planted again upon Fort Sumter, under the orders of the President, by the hands of General Anderson, with appropriate military and naval ceremonies, and a commemorative address delivered by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

Their victorious campaigns ended, the armies of the Tennessee and the Cumberland, and the army of the Potomac, marched through Richmond to the Federal capital, where they were reviewed by the President and the distinguished commanders under whom they had so long and so gallantly served in the field. After this national ceremony they and their fellow-soldiers in other commands, were paid, and, as rapidly as the condition of affairs would admit, were released from the military service of the country; and, returning to their homes in the several States, they were welcomed with the thanks and rejoicings of a grateful people.

One other event may properly be noticed in this report, as a part of the military history of the rebellion. While our armies, by their gallantry and courage and the skill of their commanders, were overcoming all resistance in the field to the national authority, a swift and sudden blow was aimed at the national existence, and at the life of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, which, for atrocity in its circumstances, the cruel art that designed it, and the peril to which it exposed the Government, is unsurpassed in the history of nations. Shortly before the Richmond campaign opened, President Lincoln went to the headquarters of Lieutenant General Grant, where he remained until the capture of Petersburg and Richmond. After their occupation by our forces, he visited those cities, and returned to Washington on the evening of Sunday, the 9th day of April. The dispatch of the Lieutenant General, announcing General Lee's surrender, was communicated to him about eleven o'clock Sunday night. From that time until he was assassinated, his attention was earnestly directed to the restoration of peace and the reorganization of civil government in the insurgent States. In a public address to an assemblage that met at the Executive Mansion on the evening of Wednesday, the 12th of April, to congratulate him on the success of our arms, his views and some of his measures were explained. On the night of the following Friday the President was shot by an assassin, and expired at about seven o'clock on the morning of Saturday, the 15th of April. This assassination appeared to be part of a deliberate, comprehensive conspiracy to assassinate the President, Vice President, Secretary of State, Lieutenant General, and other officers of the Government, with a view to its disorganization. About the same hour of the President's murder, an effort was made to assassinate the Secretary of State, who was then confined to his bed by serious injuries, accidentally received a few days before. He and other members of his family were dangerously wounded. Some of the parties engaged in this conspiracy were tried, convicted, and executed; and others are still under sentence of imprisonment for life. The details are given in the report of the Judge Advocate General. The designs upon the Vice President and the Lieutenant General failed; and, upon the death of the President, the Vice President was sworn into office, and assumed the duties of President of the United States. These events were promptly communicated to the armies by general orders, and from thenceforth until the present time the Government has been administered by Andrew Johnson, as Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

The destruction of the rebel military power opened the way to reestablish civil government in the insurgent States. From that period the functions of the military department became simply coöperative with other branches of the Federal Government.

Nashville, Tennessee, was the first capital of an insurgent State in which the Federal authority was reestablished. The rebel army was driven out on the 23d day of February, 1862, and that city occupied by the Union forces. On the 3d day of March, 1862, Andrew Johnson, then Senator in Congress from the State of Tennessee—the only Senator from an insurgent State who retained his seat in Congress—was appointed military governor of the State of Tennessee. He accepted the appointment, and promptly entered upon his duties, and continued to exercise them until his resignation on the 3d day of March, 1865. In all the vicissitudes of war his administration was directed to the establishment and maintenance of the Constitution and laws of the United States within and over the State of Tennessee. Without entering upon details, it is sufficient to remark that extension of civil authority kept pace with the reduction of the rebel power. The Federal courts were opened, and justice administered. Under his direction, against many discouragements and much opposition, great advance was made toward the full reestablishment of civil authority, and the restoration of the State to its practical relations to the Federal Government. He issued a proclamation on the 6th of January, 1864, for the election of township and county officers, justices of the peace, constables, trustees, sheriffs, clerks, registers, and tax collectors. In the month of May a convention was held at Knoxville, East Tennessee, to devise measures for restoring civil government in the State.

In the month of August another convention was called to meet at Nashville on the 5th of September, to reorganize the State. A full convention being prevented by the condition of military affairs, this body recommended that another convention, "elected by the loyal people," should assemble at an early day to revise the State constitution. The governor issued a proclamation on the 7th of September, announcing that he should proceed to appoint officers and establish tribunals "in all the counties and districts of the State whenever the people gave evidence of loyalty and a desire for civil government, and a willingness to sustain the officers and tribunals." A convention was called to meet on the 9th of January, 1865, at Nashville, to revise the State constitution. This convention met, amendments to the State constitution were adopted, slavery was abolished, and provision made for submitting the amendments to the people, and for holding elections. The amendments were ratified by popular vote. A Governor, Legislature, and members of Congress were subsequently (on the 4th of March) elected by the people. The Legislature assembled on the first Monday of April; the abolition of slavery was enacted, Senators to Congress elected, and a State government was fully organized, and has since continued in action. This system of reorganization having been found practicable by actual experience, it was adopted by the President, with such modifications as he deemed proper, for all the insurgent States, and is now in course of execution.

The disposition exhibited after the surrender of their armies in all the insurgent States to submit to the national authority dispensed with the necessity of keeping large armies on foot, and indicated the degree to which the war power might be reduced. So much only of the national military force has been kept in each State as is needed to keep the peace, protect the public property, and enforce the laws.

It was apparent that by the surrender of General Lee and his army, the military power, on which alone the rebellion rested, was irretrievably broken, no doubt being entertained that Lee's surrender would be followed by that of Johnston, and perhaps by all other commanders of the insurgent forces. The attention of the Department was immediately directed to the following objects, and on the 13th of April, four days after Lee's surrender, public notice was given that orders would be speedily issued to carry them into effect, namely:

First. To stop all drafting and recruiting in the loyal States.

Second. To curtail purchases of arms, ammunition, quartermaster and commissary supplies, and reduce the expenses of the military establishment in the several branches.

Third. To reduce the number of general and staff officers to the actual necessities of the service.

Fourth. To remove all military restrictions upon trade and commerce, so far as might be consistent with the public safety.

These measures have been carried into effect from time to time, as the exigencies of the service would admit. It will be seen from the report of the Adjutant General that troops to the number of 800,963 have already been mustered, paid off, and disbanded. Further reduction is contemplated. Upon the discharge of troops the services of a great number of staff, field, and general officers were no longer required. Of these some have resigned, and others were honorably mustered out. No doubt in many instances it has been painful for gallant and accomplished officers to leave that service to which they have been accustomed, and where they have won honorable distinction. But it is to the credit of the volunteer service that they have recognized the obligation of the Government to reduce the military establishment with the occasion that called it into existence, and that their own wishes or interests have not been importunately urged against the necessities of the service.

The disposition of the Veteran Reserve corps presented some considerations of peculiar nature. It was the inclination of the Department to retain it in service until the meeting of Congress. But inquiry showed that a very small per cent. of enlisted men were content to remain in service. All who desired have therefore been discharged, and supernumerary officers mustered out.

Recruiting to fill the regular regiments has continued. Several thousand applications for commissions in the regular service are on file. These commissions, hitherto, have been conferred only by promotion from the ranks. But to secure the requisite number of competent officers, a board has been appointed to examine applicants and determine their relative merit. From the list selected by the board, and in the order of merit, appointments are to be made. Two years' actual service in the war is indispensable for appointment.

The establishment of a well-organized militia system is one of the most important subjects that will demand the attention of Congress. This subject has already received careful consideration, and it is believed that, after conference with the appropriate committees, a practical system may be agreed upon.

Measures for the establishment of homes, and some provisions for the aid and relief of wounded and disabled soldiers, is also a subject that will commend itself strongly to every patriotic heart. Whether this duty, which the country owes to patriots who have suffered in the national defense, can best be performed by the national Government or administered by the respective State authorities, and whether relief can best be afforded by an increase of pension, or by establishing homes, are points on which opinions differ, and which can only be settled by the wisdom of Congress.

The Board of Visitors to the Military Academy at West Point, in June last, made an elaborate report, which is herewith submitted. They recommend a reorganization, and a number of measures which, in their opinion, will enhance the benefits of that national institution. To these the attention of Congress is respectfully invited, with the recommendation that the number of cadets be increased, as recommended, and that the superintendence of the institution be no longer confined to the Engineer Bureau. It is believed that the Military Academy is at present well conducted, and that their responsible duties are efficiently performed by the officers, professors, and instructors charged with the institution.

The war appropriations at the last session of Congress, as has been stated, amounted to the sum of $516,240,131 70. The estimates for the next fiscal year, commencing June 30, 1866, are $33,814,461 83.

These estimates are based upon a standing force of 50,000 men, so organized as to admit of an increase, without additional organizations, to 82,600 troops of all arms.

This estimate has been made after conference and careful consideration, and is believed to be adequate for any national exigency, if the country should be blessed with peace. The reduction of the national military force, in its rapidity and numbers, is without example, and if there be any alarm in the public mind because this reduction is made while grave questions at home and abroad are unsettled, a brief consideration of the subject will show that there is no cause for apprehension.

The force to be retained is small compared with that which was organized to subdue the rebellion. But the only reasons demanding greater force are—1, renewal of the insurrection; 2, a foreign war. For either or both emergencies the national resources remain ample. The chief demands for the war, as shown by our experience, are—1, troops; 2, arms and ammunition; 3, clothing; 4, transportation; and 5, subsistence supplies.

The troops disbanded were chiefly volunteers, who went to the field to uphold the system of free government established by their fathers, and which they mean to bequeath to their children. Their oils and sufferings, their marches, battles, and victories, have not diminished the value of that Government to them; so that any new rebellion would encounter equal or greater force for its reduction; and none can ever spring up with such advantages at the start, or be conducted with superior means, ability, or prospect of success. A foreign war would intensify the national feeling, and thousands, once misled, would rejoice to atone their error by rallying to the national flag. The question of time in which armies could be raised to quell insurrection or repel invasion is, therefore, the only question relating to troops. Our experience on this point is significant. When Lee's army surrendered, thousands of recruits were pouring in, and men were discharged from recruiting stations and rendezvous in every State. On several occasions, when troops were promptly needed to avert impending disaster, vigorous exertion brought them into the field from remote States, with incredible speed. Official reports show that after the disasters on the Peninsula, in 1862, over eighty thousand troops were enlisted, organized, armed, equipped, and sent into the field in less than a month. Sixty thousand troops have repeatedly gone to the field within four weeks. And ninety thousand infantry were sent to the armies, from the five States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin, within twenty days.

When the rebellion commenced, the nation was a stranger to war. Officers had little experience, privates had none. But the present generation of men in this country are now veteran soldiers. For the battle, the march, or the siege, they are already trained. They are as much at home in the tented field as in the farm-house, the manufactory, or the shop. No time is required to train them; and the speed of the railroad and telegraph determines the time required to raise an army in the United States.

Second. As to arms and ammunition. The disbanded armies were allowed to take home their arms at a nominal price. Rust is not likely to gather on the musket or saber borne through the campaigns of 1864 and 1865. The Government retains in its arsenals more than a million of the best quality of arms and equipments. The artillery on hand tasks the Department for its means of storage. The manufacture of ammunition requires materials for which we have in some degree relied upon other countries, because they could be had cheaper. For this reason, and to guard against any mischance, three years' stock of material for ammunition has already been kept in store, and the supply on hand is ample for any war that can be waged against us by any nation.

Third. Clothing, transportation, and subsistence. After selling or distributing among freedmen and refugees all damaged or irregular clothing, the stock of clothing and material in the quartermasters' depots is sufficient for any armies that may be called into service. The water transports and rolling stock, mules, wagons and horses held by the Government were adequate to the movement and supply of larger forces, in less time, than had heretofore been known in war. The Government has disposed or is disposing of this transportation, but it remains in this country, and can answer any exigency.

Army subsistence is derived from the country in which military operations are carried on, or supplied from other markets. During the war this most vital branch of the service never failed. It answers to the demand, and is ever ready to meet the national call.

It is plain, therefore, that the abundance of our means for war enables the Government of the United States to reduce the standing force to a lower degree than any other nation. Unless war be actually raging, the military force can be brought within very narrow limits. However sudden the exigency calling for an exhibition of military power, it can be promptly met. With our education, habits, and experience, the nation, while in the midst of peace, is prepared for war.

The present military organization comprehends nineteen departments, embraced in five military divisions, as follows:

1. The department of the East, Major General Joseph Hooker to command, to embrace the New England States, New York, and New Jersey. Headquarters at New York city.

2. The Middle department, Major General W. S. Hancock to command, to embrace the States of West Virginia, Maryland, (excepting the counties of Montgomery, that part of Anne Arundel lying south of the Annapolis and Elk Ridge railroad, and excluding the city of Annapolis, Prince George's, Calvert, Charles, and St. Mary's,) the county of Loudoun, and the Shenandoah valley as far south as and including Rockingham county, in Virginia, the States of Delaware and Pennsylvania. Headquarters at Baltimore.

3. The department of Washington, Major General C. C. Augur to command, to embrace the District of Columbia, the counties of Montgomery, that part of Anne Arundel lying south of the Annapolis and Elk Ridge railroad, and including the city of Annapolis, Prince George's, Calvert, Charles, and St. Mary's, in Maryland, and Alexandria and Fairfax counties, in Virginia. Headquarters at Washington.

4. The department of the Ohio, Major General E. O. C. Ord to command, to embrace the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan. Headquarters at Detroit.

5. The department of the Tennessee, Major General George Stoneman to command, to embrace the State of Tennessee. Headquarters at Knoxville.

6. The department of Kentucky, Major General John M. Palmer to command, to embrace the State of Kentucky, and Jeffersonville and New Albany, in Indiana. Headquarters at Louisville.

7. The department of the Missouri, Major General John Pope to command, to embrace the States of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, and the Territories of Colorado, Utah, Nebraska, Dakota, New Mexico, and Montana. Headquarters at St. Louis.

8. The department of Virginia, Major General Alfred H. Terry to command, to embrace the State of Virginia, excepting Alexandria, Fairfax, and Loudoun counties, and the Shenandoah valley as far south as and including Rockingham county. Headquarters at Richmond.

9. The department of North Carolina, Major General J. M. Schofield to command, to embrace the State of North Carolina. Headquarters at Raleigh.

10. The department of South Carolina, Major General Daniel Sickles to command, to embrace the State of South Carolina. Headquarters at Charleston.

11. The department of Georgia, Major General James B. Steedman to command, to embrace the State of Georgia. Headquarters at Augusta.

12. The department of Florida, Major General John G. Foster to command, to embrace the State of Florida. Headquarters at Tallahassee.

13. The department of Mississippi, Major General Thomas J. Wood to command, to embrace the State of Mississippi. Headquarters at Vicksburg.

14. The department of Alabama, Major General C. R. Wood to command, to embrace the State of Alabama. Headquarters at Mobile.

15. The department of Louisiana, Major General E. B. S. Canby to command, to embrace the State of Louisiana. Headquarters at New Orleans.

16. The department of Texas, Major General H. G. Wright to command, to embrace the State of Texas. Headquarters at Galveston.

17. The department of Arkansas, Major General J. J. Reynolds to command, to embrace the State of Arkansas and the Indian Territory. Headquarters at Little Rock.

18. The department of the Columbia, Brigadier General F. Steele to command, to embrace the State of Oregon, and Territories of Washington and Idaho. Headquarters at Fort Vancouver.

19. The department of California, Major General Irvin McDowell to command, to embrace the States of California and Nevada, and Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. Headquarters at San Francisco.

1. The military division of the Atlantic, Major General George G. Meade to command, to embrace the department of the East, Middle department, department of Virginia, department of North Carolina, and department of South Carolina. Headquarters at Philadelphia.

2. The military division of the Mississippi, Major General W. T. Sherman to command, to embrace the department of the Ohio, department of the Missouri, and department of Arkansas. Headquarters at St. Louis.

3. The military division of the Gulf, Major General P. H. Sheridan to command, to embrace the department of Louisiana, department of Texas, and department of Florida. Headquarters at New Orleans.

4. The military division of the Tennessee, Major General G. H. Thomas to command, to embrace the department of the Tennessee, department of Kentucky, department of Georgia, department of Mississippi, and department of Alabama. Headquarters at Nashville.

5. The military division of the Pacific, Major General H. W. Halleck to command, to embrace the department of the Columbia and department of California. Headquarters at San Francisco.

Indian hostilities upon the plains and the overland routes to the Pacific coast have given much annoyance, required the employment of many troops, and occasioned great expense to the Military Department. Several Indian councils have been held during the past season, and large military expeditions sent out against hostile tribes and bands. What has been accomplished by treaty or by fighting will doubtless be exhibited in the official reports of the Indian campaigns, which have not yet reached the Department.

Disbanding the troops reduces at once the amount to be expended in some items of appropriation, but in others requires larger immediate expenditures. Upon their discharge the soldiers became entitled to all the installments of bounty which would have fallen due at later periods, and in many cases exceeding a year's pay. The transportation of large armies from the field, in southern States, to their remote homes in the West, or in eastern and northern States, made extraordinary drafts on the quartermaster's department, beyond what would be required for armies marching or encamped. The vast amount of live stock on hand requires forage until sales can be made. These are effected with the utmost diligence; but still this large item of expenditure continues through a large part of the fiscal year. The financial effects, therefore, of the reduction of the Army and retrenchment of expenditures can only operate to any great extent on the next fiscal year.

To accomplish the great object of promptly reducing the military expenditures, the following General Order was made by the Secretary of War on the 28th of April:

FOR REDUCING EXPENSES OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

General Orders, No. 77.

Ordered—I. That the chiefs of the respective bureaus of this Department proceed immediately to reduce the expenses of their respective departments to what is absolutely necessary, in view of an immediate reduction of the forces in the field and garrison, and the speedy termination of hostilities, and that they severally make out statements of the reduction they deem practicable.

II. That the Quartermaster General discharge all ocean transports not required to bring home troops in remote departments. All river and inland transportation will be discharged except that required for necessary supplies to troops in the field. Purchases of horses, mules, wagons, and other land transportation will be stopped; also purchases of forage, except what is required for immediate consumption. All purchases for railroad construction and transportation will also be stopped.

III. That the Commissary General of Subsistence stop the purchase of supplies in his department, except for such as may, with what is on hand, be required for forces in the field, to the 1st of June next.

IV. That the Chief of Ordnance stop all purchases of arms, ammunition, and materials therefor, and reduce the manufacturing of arms and ordnance stores in Government arsenals as rapidly as can be done without injury to the service.

V. That the Chief of Engineers stop work on all field fortifications and other works, except those for which specific appropriations have been made by Congress for completion, or that may be required for the proper protection of works in progress.

VI. That all volunteer soldiers (patients) in hospitals, except veteran volunteers, veterans of the First Army corps, (Hancock's,) and enlisted men of the Veteran Reserve corps, who require no further medical treatment, be honorably discharged from service, with immediate payment.

All officers and enlisted men who have been prisoners of war, and now on furlough, or at the parole camps, and all recruits in rendezvous, except those for the regular Army and the First Army corps, (Hancock's,) will likewise be honorably discharged.

Officers whose duty it is, under the regulations of the service, to make out rolls and other final papers connected with the discharge and payment of soldiers, are directed to make them out without delay, so that this order may be carried into effect immediately. Commanding generals of armies and departments will look to the prompt execution of this work.

VII. The Adjutant General of the Army will cause immediate returns to be made by all commanders in the field, garrisons, detachments, and posts, of their respective forces, with a view to their immediate reduction.

VIII. The Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Ordnance, Engineer, and Provost Marshal General's departments will reduce the number of clerks and employees to that absolutely required for closing the business of their respective departments, and will, without delay, report to the Secretary of War the number required of each class or grade.

The Surgeon General will make similar reductions of medical officers, nurses, and attendants in his bureau.

IX. The chiefs of the respective bureaus will immediately cause property returns to be made out of the public property in their charge, and a statement of the property in each that may be sold, upon advertisement and public sale, without prejudice to the service.

X. The Commissary of Prisoners will have rolls made out of the name, residence, time and place of capture, and occupation of all prisoners of war who will take the oath of allegiance to the United States, to the end that such as are disposed to become good and loyal citizens of the United States, and who are proper objects of executive clemency, may be released upon the terms that the President shall seem fit and consistent with public safety.

The administrative details of the Department during the great military operations that have been mentioned, and what has been done toward a reduction to a peace establishment, will appear in the reports of the respective chiefs of bureaus.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S REPORT.

From the report of the Adjutant General, it will be seen that the recruiting service of the regular Army is progressing favorably; the number of recruits enlisted for all arms, from October 31, 1864, to October 1, 1865, having been 19,555. The regiments comprising it have been distributed to stations, and their ranks are rapidly filling up, thus enabling the Department to relieve regiments of volunteer troops. The present authorized strength of the regular regiments is 952 officers and 41,819 enlisted men. This estimate is made on the basis of forty-two privates to a company, the number now allowed by law at all except frontier posts.

It is recommended in the report that the maximum standard be fixed at one hundred enlisted men to a company.

The Adjutant General recommends that provisions be made by law for enlisting one hundred boys, not under twelve years of age, as musicians, as was done before the laws of 1864 and 1865 prohibited the enlistment of minors under the age of sixteen years; that the laws by which one half of their pay, during the period of absence, is lost by officers absent with leave for more than thirty days in one year, except from wounds or sickness, be repealed; and that an act be passed providing for the enlistment of meritorious disabled soldiers as superintendents of the national cemeteries, numbering about forty, each to receive the pay and allowance of an ordnance sergeant.

Eight volumes of reports of battles, with maps and indexes, prepared under the resolution of Congress of May 19, 1864, have been completed and sent to the Government Printing Office. The publication of the greater part of the remaining reports is only deferred until the receipt of others not yet rendered, and which are required to preserve the chronological order observed in the preparation of the volumes already completed. The Register of volunteer officers called for by resolution of June 30, 1864, and embracing some 200,000 names, will be completed by the time Congress assembles.

The aggregate of volunteers, drafted men, and substitutes ordered to the field between the 1st of November, 1864, and 30th of April, 1865, was 202,117. The number of volunteers, drafted men, and militia mustered out and discharged within the same period was 61,000. In disbanding the forces no longer same machinery of mustering officers and depots has been used as in recruiting. Regiments have been sent home as fast as they could be transported and paid, the officers being held responsible for the good behavior of the men. Instances have been rare of any disorders. Much credit is due to mustering officers, paymasters, and railroad companies, through whose efforts troops numbering in the aggregate 800,963 men, have been transported, mustered out, and paid.

On the 28th of April, 1865, it was ordered that returns be made of the volunteer forces in the field, with a view to their immediate reduction, and in connection with this order regulations were prepared and promulgated for their muster out and discharge. In executing this work, promptness and a proper protection of the interests of the Government and the troops were held in view; and among other measures necessary to its completion, rendezvous were established in the field, as well as in most of the States. At the field rendezvous all surplus property was taken possession of by the staff officers of the respective supply departments, and the muster-out rolls and other discharge papers prepared under the direction of corps commissaries of musters and their assistants. Corps and department commanders were instructed to see that the work was pushed with energy, using for that end the division and brigade commanders, with their respective staff officers, to superintend it. As soon as a regiment or other organization had its muster-out papers prepared, it was placed en route to its State for payment and final discharge. At the State rendezvous was located the chief mustering officer of the State, or one or more of his assistants, with paymasters, quartermasters, commissaries of subsistence, and ordnance officers, whose duties were with the payment and final discharge of the troops; their care while awaiting the same; the reception of the public property turned in by them, and their transportation to their homes after discharge.

By the foregoing arrangements the entire force of commissaries and assistant commissaries of musters for troops in the field have been made available for the work, in connection with the chief and other State mustering officers. The most experienced mustering officers and those most familiar with the regimental records were secured; the records from which the mustering-out data were to be obtained were readily accessible, and the loss of records, (so common through the neglect of regimental officers,) while the regiments were en route from the field to their States, was avoided. Regimental officers have been held to a strict accountability in preparing the records, and the interests of the enlisted men thus protected. Order and discipline have been maintained while the troops were en route to the States and after arrival therein. Troops have been comfortably cared for up to the moment they were paid off and ready to start for their homes. Dissatisfaction among them has been obviated and causes for complaint removed, and all public property has been easily secured and readily accounted for.

The arrangements for the care of discharged troops being completed, orders to muster out and discharge the forces from service were issued as follows:

April 29.—All recruits, drafted men, substitutes, and volunteers remaining at the several State depots.

May 4.—All patients in hospitals, except veteran volunteers and veterans of the First Army corps, (Hancock's.)

May 8.—All troops of the cavalry arm whose term of service would expire prior to October 1.

May 9.—All officers and enlisted men whose terms would expire prior to May 31, inclusive.

May 17.—All organizations of white troops in the army of the Potomac whose terms of service would expire prior to September 30, inclusive.

May 18.—All organizations of white troops in Major General Sherman's command, whose terms of service would expire prior to September 30, inclusive.

May 29.—All artillery in the army of the Potomac, Ninth Army corps, army of Georgia, and army of the Tennessee.

May 29.—All organizations of white troops whose terms of service would expire prior to September 30, inclusive, in armies and departments, except departments of the East, New Mexico, Pacific, and Northern.

June 2.—All surplus light artillery; that only absolutely required by the necessities of the service in the respective armies and departments to be retained.

June 5.—All dismounted cavalry, all infantry in the Northern department and department of the East, and all cavalry in the department of the East.

June 16.—All troops in the department of the Pacific whose terms of service would expire prior to October 1.

June 17.—All enlisted men of the Veteran Reserve corps who would have been entitled to their discharge had they remained with their regiments.

June 28.—Eighteen thousand veterans (infantry) of the army of the Potomac; 15,000 of the army of the Tennessee, (then consisting of the remaining regiments of the army of Georgia and army of the Tennessee;) and 7,000 of the Middle military division.

June 30.—All surplus troops, except in the department of the Gulf, army of the Tennessee, Provisional corps army of the Potomac, and First Army corps. Strength of commands, for all arms, to be reduced to the minimum necessary to meet the requirements of the service.

July 1.—All remaining veteran regiments of the army of the Tennessee and Provisional corps army of the Potomac; (that corps was the remnant of the army of the Potomac.)

July 6.—The remainder of the army of the Tennessee.

July 7.—The remainder of the Provisional corps army of the Potomac.

July 21.—All cavalry in the department of Virginia except two regiments, all in the department of North Carolina except one regiment, and all in the Middle department except one regiment.

August 1.—All white troops, infantry, cavalry, and artillery, in the department of Texas, which, in the judgment of Major General Sheridan, could be dispensed with.

August 3.—The same order was extended to the department of Louisiana.

August 14.—Additional infantry and heavy artillery (white) in military departments, as follows: Virginia, 5,000; North Carolina, 8,000; Washington, 8,000; Mississippi, 2,000; Kentucky, 5,000; Middle, 6,000.

August 21.—Three thousand additional white troops in the department of Arkansas.

September 8.—All surplus troops in the department of Washington, so as to reduce that command to 6,000 officers and men of all arms.

September 8.—All organizations of colored troops which were enlisted in northern States.

October 9.—All the remaining forces (white) of the cavalry arm east of the Mississippi.

October 9.—All troops on the Pacific coast, as many as possible immediately; the remainder on the arrival of the last battalion of the fourteenth United States infantry.

October 10.—All troops in New Mexico; one regiment immediately, the remainder on the arrival of certain regular troops.

In addition to the foregoing, and from time to time, as the services of the troops could be dispensed with, sixty-eight regiments, seven companies, and six battalions were ordered mustered out.

The rapidity with which the work has been executed will be apparent from the fact that to August 7, 640,806 troops had been mustered out; August 22, 719,338; September 14, 741,107; October 15, 785,205; November 15, 800,963.

The command of Major General Sherman (army of the Tennessee and army of Georgia) and the army of the Potomac were first to complete their musters out entirely. Regiments commenced leaving General Sherman's command, then numbering, present and absent, 116,183 officers and men, from the rendezvous near Washington, on the 29th of May, and on the 1st of August the last one of the regiments mustered out left Louisville, Kentucky, to which point the command (after the musters out therefrom were partly completed,) was transferred, and the armies composing it merged into one, called the army of the Tennessee. The work of mustering out the troops was not continuous, it having been delayed by the transfer of the two armies from this city to Louisville and their subsequent consolidation.

Regiments commenced leaving the army of the Potomac (when numbering, including Ninth corps, 162,851 officers and men, present and absent) from the rendezvous near this city on the 29th of May, and about six weeks thereafter (July 19) the last regiment started for home. During the interval the work, like that from General Sherman's command, was not continuous, it being interrupted and delayed by the movement of the Sixth corps from Danville, Virginia, to Washington, and the consolidation, by orders of June 28, of the remaining portion of the army into a Provisional corps, numbering, present and absent, 22,699 officers and men.

Thus, for the two commands in question, and between the 29th of May and the 1st of August, (two months,) 279,034 officers and men, present and absent, were mustered out and placed en route to their homes. Including other armies and departments, the number was increased by August 7 (two months and seven days) to 640,806 officers and men.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the mass of the forces discharged were mustered out by September 14, or within two and a half months from the time the movements of troops homeward commenced. The average per month during that time is 296,442.

By reference to the report of the officer in charge of the bureau for the organization of colored troops, it will be seen that the increase in the number of these troops since his last annual report is 49,509, of which 4,244 were recruited in States in rebellion, and credited to the loyal States, under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864. The whole number of colored men enlisted into the service of the United States during the rebellion was 178,975. The largest number in service was on the 15th of July, 1865, namely, 123,156. The loss during the war from all causes, except muster out, was 68,178. There have been 33,234 colored troops mustered out. The number remaining in service after existing orders for muster out shall have been executed will be 85,024. The number of applicants for commissions in colored troops amounted to 9,019, of which 3,790 were examined. Of this number 1,472 were rejected, and 2,318 received appointments. The number of soldiers discharged from regiments, &c., of white troops to accept appointments in organizations of colored troops, was 1,767. It is ascertained, from the reports of inspecting officers, that the morale of the organization is good.

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL.

On the 1st day of November, 1864, the date to which the last annual report of the Provost Marshal General was brought up, the business of recruiting and the draft under the call of July 18, 1864, was in progress:

The number called for was.....	500,000
Reduced by credits on former calls.....	265,673
To be obtained.....	234,327

The whole number of voluntary enlistments under that call was 188,172, namely:

Volunteers, (white).....	146,392
Volunteers, (colored).....	15,961
Regulars.....	6,339
Seamen.....	17,606
Marine corps.....	1,874
Total.....	188,172

The whole number of drafted men and substitutes obtained under that call was 54,797, namely:

Number held to personal service.....	26,205
Number of substitutes for drafted men.....	28,502
54,707
Number of substitutes for enrolled men.....	29,584
Total.....	84,291

Whole number obtained under the July call.....272,463

On the 19th of December, 1864, a call was made for 300,000 men.

Under this call the whole number of voluntary enlistments was 157,038:

Volunteers, (white).....	130,620
Volunteers, (colored).....	10,055
Regulars.....	6,958
Seamen.....	9,106
Marine corps.....	319
Total.....	157,038

The whole number of drafted men and substitutes under that call was 24,580:

Number held to personal service.....	12,566
Number of substitutes for drafted men.....	12,014
24,580
Number of substitutes for enrolled men.....	12,997
Total.....	37,577

Whole number raised under December call was.....194,635

The suspension of active military operations occurred while the business of the draft, under this call, was in progress, and orders were issued on the 13th of April, 1865, to discontinue the business of recruiting and drafting; and on the next day all drafted men who had not been forwarded to general rendezvous were ordered to be discharged, and soon after all who had not been forwarded to the field were discharged by orders through the Adjutant General.

The aggregate quotas charged against the several States, under all calls made by the President of the United States, from the 15th day of April, 1861, to the 14th day of April, 1865, at which time drafting and recruiting ceased, were.....2,759,049

The terms of service varying from three months to three years, as shown in detail by the books of the Provost Marshal General's office.

The aggregate number of men credited on the several calls, and put into service of the United States in the Army, Navy, and Marine corps, during the above period, was.....2,656,553

Leaving a deficiency on all calls, when the war closed, of.....102,496

Which would have been obtained in full if recruiting and drafting had not been discontinued.

This number does not embrace the "emergency men" put into service during the summer of 1863, by the States of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, nor those furnished by the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, during the "Morgan raid," amounting in all to over 120,000 men, who served periods of about two or three weeks.

In estimating the number of troops called into service, it has been the rule of the Department to take into account the whole number of men mustered, without regard to the fact that the same persons may have been previously discharged, after having been accepted and credited on previous calls.

Under the different calls, volunteers have been accepted for various terms of service, namely, three, six, and nine months, and one, two, and three years respectively; and a large number of persons who had served under one call have subsequently enlisted under another.

Thus a portion of those who enlisted under the call, in April, 1861, for 75,000 three-months' men, again enlisted under succeeding call in July following for three years; others reentered the service for nine months, or for one or two years, and at the expiration of these periods again reënlisted for three years; and the entire "veteran volunteer" force consisted of those who, having served two years, reënlisted for three years more.

It will be observed, therefore, that a large portion of the number counted in filling calls has been furnished, first by the reënlistment of those in service, and, second, by those who have reentered the service after a discharge from a former enlistment under which they had been credited; that is, the different calls were filled by crediting each accepted enlistment, instead of limiting the credit to the actual number of persons who entered the service anew; and hence to determine the number of men actually entering the service for the first time, under the different calls, the number credited should be reduced in the same ratio that the enlistments of the same persons have been repeated. The extent of this reduction cannot be calculated at this time, or even estimated with sufficient accuracy to be useful.

It follows, therefore, that on account of a necessary repetition of credits, incident to enlistments, the tax upon the military basis of the country has been less than would appear by considering simply the number of men embraced in the different calls for troops, or the number of credits allowed upon these calls.

The amount of commutation money received from November 1, 1864, to November 1, 1865, was—

On account of draft and substitute fund..	$317,150 00
On account of sick and wounded soldiers (from non-combatants, under section 17 of the act of February 24, 1864).....	340,987 53
Total.....	658,117 53

The total amount of "draft and substitute fund" received under the act approved March 3, 1865, is.....	$25,902,029 00
The total amount expended.....	16,387,135 80

Balance remaining in Treasury to credit of this fund.....	9,514,893 45
---	--------------

There are just claims still outstanding which have to be met from this fund.

The regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps have been performing garrison duty in Washington and its defensive works, at the various depots for recruits and drafted men, at the provost marshals' rendezvous, escorting recruits to the field, and more recently performing garrison duty at the several rendezvous for muster out of the volunteer forces.

Since the termination of active operations no transfers have been made to this corps, nor have any officers been appointed.

The amount expended from the appropriation for "collecting, drilling, and organizing volunteers," from November 1, 1864, to November 1, 1865, was $1,422,281 73.

The balance of this appropriation remaining in the Treasury is $12,163,386 09; and about half a million dollars is still in the hands of the disbursing officers, which is needed to pay outstanding accounts and expenses incurred in mustering out the volunteer forces of the United States.

As fast as the exigencies of the service permitted, the force employed has been reduced. The surgeons and commissioners of boards of enrollment in all the districts, 370 in number, have been discharged. The different districts have been consolidated, and but thirty-three provost marshals are now in the service, all of whom will be discharged as soon as their services can be dispensed with.

No appropriation of money will be required for the support of this bureau during the next fiscal year.

The full report of the operations of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau will contain much statistical and other valuable information, which will be submitted when completed.

39TH CONG....1ST SESS.

PAYMASTER GENERAL.

The Paymaster General reports that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, $7,839,225 47 were paid to the regular Army, while $300,738,635 95 were paid to volunteers, and that the total disbursements since June 30, 1864, to the date of his report, amount in the aggregate to $524,054,946 37. Payments amounting to $270,000,000 have been made to about 800,000 mustered-out troops. The highest number of additional paymasters in service during the fiscal year was 447; the number now in service is 210. All the troops retained in service have been paid to June 30, 1865, and many organizations to August 31, 1865, and to all discharged troops in full to date of discharge.

The anticipated payments of bounties to soldiers, and three months' additional pay to officers mustered out that has fallen due by reason of muster out, amount to $91,750,000.

The whole sum disbursed by the pay department since the commencement of the war, namely, from July 1, 1861, to July 1, 1865, amounts to $1,029,239,000.

The total losses and defalcations during the same period, if nothing should be recovered, amount to the sum of $541,000, and it is believed that not less than half of this amount will be recovered. The total expenses of disbursement, including all pay and allowances, commutation of quarters, fuel, and traveling expenses, for four years and four months, amount to $6,429,600.

Thus it is seen that the costs of disbursement to armies in the field, and amid all the hazards of unexampled war, and including all losses and expenses, are less than three fourths of one per cent.

COMMISSARY GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE.

The subsistence stores required during the year for distribution to the armies in the field have, as during the earlier years of the war, been purchased in the principal markets of the northern States. The facilities and cost of transportation to the various points where they were required for issue, the relative prices of the different markets, and a due regard to the general commercial interests of the country, have governed the subsistence department in apportioning those purchases among the several market centers of the country. As New Orleans is gradually resuming a healthy commercial condition, a considerable portion of the supplies required for distribution from that point can be obtained in that market. Although the present general condition of the southern States is not such as to afford a large amount of supplies, still subsistence officers are able, in some parts of those States, to enter into contracts for the partial supply of the troops serving therein.

The principal purchasing officers have exhibited much ability in the performance of their duties, and great fidelity to the interests of the country. The principal commissaries immediately responsible for the subsistence of the several armies in the field have discharged the important and often difficult duties of receiving, protecting, and distributing the supplies forwarded to them with commendable efficiency and success. They have also, by great energy, been able to a considerable extent to subsidize the troops upon the resources of the country in which the armies were operating, or through which they were passing. It is believed that during the entire war no campaign, contemplated movement, or expedition, has failed on account of the inability of the subsistence department to meet its proper requirements, and that the troops, wherever stationed or operating, have, with rare exceptions, been supplied with rations in good and wholesome condition.

The muster out of a large part of the Army, consequent upon the sudden close of active military operations, unavoidably left on hand in some of the depots an excessive supply of subsistence stores. These have been sent to other points where they were required. Surplus and damaged stores will be disposed of by sale. A sufficient quantity of hard bread and other articles has been kept from earlier sale with the view of meeting, in an economical manner, the wants of those people, white and colored, who, by the events of the war, have been reduced to a suffering condition.

Under orders of June 29, 1865, the whiskey ration was discontinued, and the sale of the supply on hand has already taken place at many points, and will soon be completed.

During the past year, as in previous years of the war, a very considerable income has been derived from the sale of the hides, tallow, and other parts of beef cattle not issuable as beef to the troops.

Prisoners of war, held at thirty-two forts, prison barracks, camps, and hospitals, have been well subsisted, having received a sufficient portion and variety of the ration to insure health, leaving in the hands of the several issuing commissaries, as "savings," that portion of the ration not deemed necessary for persons living in entire idleness. The pecuniary value of these "savings" has constituted a prison fund, available, under the instructions of the Commissary General of Prisoners, for the purchase of articles necessary for the prison barracks and hospitals, and for meeting other necessary expenses of the prisons. There has been transferred to the subsistence department a "savings" credit of the amount of $1,507,859 01, and there remains yet to be transferred an amount not less than $337,766 98, making a total amount of $1,845,625 99.

Under section three of the act of July 4, 1864, 1,470 claims have been submitted, of which 50 have been approved for payment, and 418 disallowed; 650 are awaiting explanation, and 357 remain to be examined.

It is proposed to ascertain and exhibit, in a tabular form, the total quantity of each article of subsistence stores purchased for the use of the Army during each year of the war, from 1861 to 1865, inclusive. Such a statement, it is believed, would prove an interesting addition to the commercial statistics of the country.

The officers of the subsistence department, regular and volunteer, have, with but few exceptions, discharged their duties with fidelity and success.

SURGEON GENERAL.

The Surgeon General reports that the receipts from all sources and available for the expenses of the medical department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, were $20,489,680 47. Disbursements during the year, $19,828,499 23, leaving a balance in the Treasury on June 30, of $1,161,181 24.

The ample provision for sick and wounded existing at the date of the last annual report was increased during the ensuing months until a maximum of 204 general hospitals, with a capacity of 136,894 beds, was reached.

Upon the termination of active military movements, immediate measures were taken to reduce the expenses of the medical department. Of the 201 general hospitals open on January 1, 1865, 171 have been discontinued. Three of the sea-going hospital transports have been discharged; the fourth is now constantly engaged in transfer of sick and wounded from southern ports to the general hospitals in New York harbor. All of the river hospital-boats have been turned over to the quartermaster's department, and but a single hospital train is retained in the Southwest. The vast amount of medicines and hospital supplies made surplus by the reduction of the Army has been carefully collected at prominent points, and is being disposed of at public auction, most of the articles bringing their full value, and in some instances their cost price.

Two hundred and fourteen surgeons and assistant surgeons of volunteers have been mustered out, and of the 265 hospital chaplains appointed during the war 29 only are still in commission.

The returns of sick and wounded show that of white troops 1,057,423 cases have been treated in general hospitals alone, from 1861 to July 1, 1865, of which the rate of mortality was eight per cent. In nearly all sections of the country the health of the troops has been fully equal to that of preceding years, though military movements of unprecedented magnitude have been pushed to successful termination, without regard to seasons. An epidemic of yellow fever prevailed at Newbern, North Carolina, in the fall of 1864, and the released or exchanged prisoners arriving at Wilmington, North Carolina, from rebel prisons, suffered from an epidemic of typhoid fever. With these exceptions no serious epidemics have appeared, and it is interesting to note that quarantine regulations, strictly enforced by military authority, have proven, during the occupation of southern seaports and cities by our troops, to be an absolute protection against the importation of contagious or infectious diseases. In view of the apprehensions entertained in regard to the Asiatic cholera, now devastating the shores of the Mediterranean, this becomes a significant fact.

In addition to the alphabetical registers of dead, not yet fully completed, the records of the medical department contain thirty thousand special reports of the more important forms of surgical injuries, of diseases and operations. These reports, with statistical data, and a pathological collection numbering 7,630 specimens, furnish a mass of valuable information, which is being rapidly arranged and tabulated, as a medical and surgical history of the war, for the publication of the first volume of which an appropriation will be asked.

In this connection, and as illustrating more in detail the importance of this work, the Army Medical Museum assumes the highest value. By its array of indisputable facts, supported and enriched by full reports, it supplies instruction otherwise unattainable, and preserves for future application the dearly-bought experience of four years of war. Apart from its great usefulness, it is also an honorable record of the skill and services of those medical officers whose contributions constitute its value, and whose incentive to these self-imposed labors has been the desire to elevate their profession. A small appropriation has been asked to continue and extend this collection.

For recommendation of measures tending to the greater efficiency of the medical department, reference is made to the special report from the Surgeon General's office, which will be submitted to the appropriate congressional committees.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL.

The report of the Quartermaster General contains a statement of the operations and expenditures of the department under his control for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1865. The principal movements of troops by the quartermaster's department during that time are described. They have been made promptly and with few accidents, and are striking illustrations of the improvements in the art of war which have been developed during the late contest.

The Twenty-third Army corps, after fighting at Nashville, in the midst of ice and snow, in December, 1864, was, on the conclusion of the campaign in the West, transferred from the valley of the Tennessee to the banks of the Potomac, moving by river and rail down the Tennessee, up the Ohio, across the snow-covered Alleghenies, a distance of 1,400 miles, and in the short space of eleven days was encamped on the banks of the Potomac, then blocked up with the ice of a most severe winter. Vessels were collected to meet this corps, the obstacles interposed by the ice were overcome, and early in February the troops composing it were fighting before Wilmington, on the coast of North Carolina.

The transfer of the Eleventh and Twelfth corps, under General Hooker, in 1863, from the Potomac to the Tennessee, is the only parallel to this movement. That was an almost unexampled operation at the time. General Hooker's command contained 23,000 men, and was accompanied by its artillery and trains, baggage and animals, and accomplished the distance from the Rapidan, in Virginia, to Stevenson, in Alabama, a distance of 1,192 miles, in seven days, crossing the Ohio river twice. The Twenty-third Army corps moved 15,000 strong.

Other important operations are described, among which are the supply of the army of Lieutenant General Grant before Richmond; of the army of General Sherman at Atlanta, preparatory to his march to Savannah; of the same army at the depots on the Atlantic, on his communicating with the coast, first at Savannah and afterward at Goldsboro', at both of which places depots were established, and his army reinforced and equipped with everything necessary to make successful campaigns.

The transfer of the Twenty-fifth Army corps, 25,000 strong, in the month of May, from the James to the coast of Texas, is fully described, and the extent and cost of the fleet used in this movement are set forth in full.

Transportation was promptly supplied from all parts of the South to their homes in the North, for the immense army which has been disbanded, and the organization of the department which has made it possible to meet these demands so promptly is believed to have been at least as perfect as that of any other nation.

The report gives tables of the quantities of the principal military supplies, clothing, forage, fuel, horses, mules, and wagons, which have been purchased, transported, and used during the fiscal year. It contains full statements of the vessels which have been in the service during that time upon the western rivers and upon the ocean and bays. Many of them have now been discharged from service or advertised for sale, orders for the reduction of the transport fleet having been given as soon as hostilities ceased.

The return of the armies from the South, the transportation of the discharged soldiers to their homes, the transfer of troops to Texas, the return of refugees expelled from the South by General Sherman, and of rebel prisoners released at the termination of the war, have, however, taxed the resources of the quartermaster's department heavily during the last spring and summer.

The transport service has been most satisfactorily performed. Upon the ocean a fleet of over 700 vessels has been constantly employed, with the reported loss by storm, by collision, and by fire, of only 3; one steamship was destroyed in each of these modes.

The repair of the railroads from Chattanooga to Atlanta by the military railroad branch of the quartermaster's department, under the charge of Brevet Brigadier General D. C. McCallum, was referred to in the last annual report. Upon the advance of General Sherman from Atlanta, he destroyed the railroad in his rear, blew up all the railroad buildings at Atlanta, sent back his surplus stores and all the railroad machinery which had to that time supplied his army. The stores and the railroad stock were safely withdrawn to Nashville, and after the dispersion of the army of Hood, which had broken the railroad in Georgia and Tennessee in its advance, the railroad construction corps again took the field, and reopened railroad communication with Chattanooga, Atlanta, and Decatur. After the fall of Macon and Augusta, it became necessary, in order to supply the army of Major General Wilson, to open railroad communication between Augusta and Atlanta, and Macon. This was successfully accomplished.

A division of the Construction corps, fully organized, under the command of Colonel Wright, with tools and equipments, was transferred, in December and January, from the Tennessee to Savannah, by way of Baltimore. As General Sherman did not repair the railroads of Georgia and South Carolina, but marched northward, lightly equipped, living upon the supplies in his wagon trains, and by foraging upon the enemy, this division of the Construction corps was transferred to Beaufort, North Carolina, and after its fall, to Wilmington, where it repaired and restocked the railroads from these ports to Goldsboro' and to Raleigh. General Sherman's army was thus quickly provisioned, reclothed, reshoed, and equipped for a march to the James.

The surrender of the rebel armies and pacification of the southern States have enabled the quartermaster's department to return to their former possessors most of the railroads which have been in military possession during the war. The department, in transferring them to their boards of directors—reorganized upon a loyal footing—delivers up the roads and bridges in whatever condition they may be at the time of the transfer.

The great accumulation of railroad engines and cars upon the western military railroads is being disposed of to the railroads of the Southwest, which have suffered severely from the operations of both armies during the war. Under the orders of the Executive, this stock is being delivered to the companies, who are to pay for it within two years, at a valuation fixed by a board of officers and experts assembled by the Government.

The reconstruction of these roads and their successful operation are of great importance, not only to the districts in which they are located, but to the general commerce and prosperity of the country; and the liberal policy pursued toward them will react favorably upon the revenue and credit of the nation.

The agreement made early in the war with the railroad companies of the loyal States, fixing reduced rates of military transportation, remains in force, and has been extended to the railroads in the southern States since the termination of hostilities.

Full reports are given of the quantities of clothing and camp and garrison equipage furnished to our armies during the past year, and also during the war. The tables accompanying the Quartermaster General's report give information on these points, which shows in a favorable light the manufacturing power of the country.

The vast supplies of forage required for the armies have been promptly furnished and transported to the depots. While moving through the southern country the armies found ample quantities, and it was only when lying still in camp that they had any difficulty in supplying themselves.

During the year over 29,000,000 bushels of grain and 400,000 tons of hay have been provided by the depots of the quartermaster's department; 336,000 cords of wood and 832,000 tons of coal have also been supplied by the depots. Troops in the field have supplied themselves with fuel from the forests in which they have operated. The depots of the quartermaster's department have, during the war, furnished the Army with 23,000,000 bushels of corn, 78,000,000 bushels of oats, 93,000 bushels of barley, 1,500,000 tons of hay, 20,000 tons of straw, 550,000 cords of wood, and 1,600,000 tons of coal, all of which have been purchased, measured, transported, issued, and accounted for by its officers and agents. At the depot of Washington alone there have been issued during the year 4,500,000 bushels of corn, 29,000,000 bushels of oats, 490,000 tons of hay, 210,000 cords of wood, and 392,000 tons of coal.

The supply of horses and mules for the Army has been regular and sufficient. There were purchased during the fiscal year 141,632 cavalry horses; from September 1, 1864, to 30th June, 1865, 20,714 artillery horses; and from 1st July, 1864, to 30th June, 1865, 58,818 mules. Prices of horses varied during the year from $144 to $185; of mules, from $170 to $195.

The reduction of the Army has enabled the quartermaster's department to dispense with large numbers of horses and mules, and to the 17th October the sales of animals are estimated to have produced $7,000,000.

The teams and animals of the armies have, as during previous fiscal years, averaged about one wagon to twenty-four men in the field, and one horse or mule to every two men.

The burial records of the quartermaster's department, which do not include the names of those who fell in battle, and were buried immediately on the field by their comrades, show the interment in cemeteries of 116,148 persons, of whom 98,827 were loyal, 12,586 disloyal, and of whom 95,803 were whites and 20,345 colored persons.

The military cemeteries at Washington, Alexandria, Arlington, and Chattanooga have been carefully tended and decorated.

An officer, with material and men, to mark the graves of our brethren who fell victims to rebel barbarity at Andersonville, was dispatched from Washington as soon as the country was opened to us, and reports that he has inclosed the cemetery and marked the graves of 12,912 soldiers buried therein. Of these the captured records of the prison hospital enabled him to identify 12,461, and their names were recorded upon head-boards, painted white, and planted at the head of their graves. On 451 graves he was compelled to put the sad inscription, "Unknown United States soldier." The list of these names is in course of publication. The names of those who have been interred in the military cemeteries of the District of Columbia and at Arlington have already been published and distributed to State authorities and public institutions, as well as to newspapers which publish official advertisements, so as to be made accessible to their friends.

The military organization of the operatives and agents of the quartermaster's department, referred to in the last annual report, was kept up until the close of the war. It did good service in the fortifications, at the attack on Washington in July, at the attack on Johnsonville in the fall, and bore a part in the battle of Nashville, on the 15th and 16th of December, 1864, which gave the final blow to the rebellion in the West. Upon the cessation of hostilities this organization was disbanded, its arms restored to the arsenal, and most of its members have returned to peaceful pursuits.

The employment of colored men in the quartermaster's department, in connection with the trains of the Army, as laborers at depots, and as pioneers of the troops of the western army, continued to the close of the war. In all these positions they have done good service, and materially contributed to the final victory which confirmed their freedom.

The great cost of transportation of supplies across the western plains and mountains to the depots and posts of the wilderness, and for the supply of troops operating against the Indians, is reported, and the Quartermaster General calls attention to the importance, in this view, of the vigorous prosecution of the work of the railroads to connect the Mississippi valley with the Pacific coast, as a military precaution, and a measure of economy, deserving the fostering care of the Government.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S BUREAU.

The Quartermaster General reports that immediately on the termination of active hostilities, under orders from the Secretary of War, he took measures to reduce expenditures; to discharge operatives and agents; to discharge chartered transports, and to sell those belonging to the United States not needed to bring home troops for muster out; to reduce the number of horses in reserve at the depot; to stop the purchase of horses and mules, and to sell those belonging to the troops disbanded; to cease making contracts and purchases of clothing and equipment; to stop the repair and construction of military railroads; to return all such railroads to their former owners, and to sell or dispose of the rolling stock and other material used thereon.

He reports sales of 128,840 horses and mules, for which the sum of $7,500,000 was received.

Of 5,355 persons employed in the Cavalry bureau, three fourths have been discharged. Those still employed are engaged in receiving, caring for, and selling the animals turned in by the armies.

The purchase and manufacture of clothing, which during the past fiscal year had caused an expenditure of between eight and nine millions per month, has ceased entirely, and, by compromise with merchants, contracts for clothing and equipment, amounting to $4,000,000, have been canceled.

Twenty-five hundred buildings, vacated, have been ordered for sale.

The sales of buildings, wagons, harness, tools, iron, and other like material, have realized thus far $1,000,000.

Over 1,700 miles of military railroad, operated for the department by 23,700 workmen and agents, at a monthly cost of $1,500,000, have been restored to their former owners, and the number of persons employed in completing the accounts, in taking care of and disposing of the railroad property not yet sold or transferred, has been reduced to less than five hundred, the rest having been discharged.

The rolling mill at Chattanooga, its product, and the scrap iron there collected, have been sold; the mill for $175,000, the rolled iron for $200,000, and the old iron for about $100,000.

Eighty-three engines and one thousand and nine cars have been sold for $1,500,000. Over two hundred locomotives and two thousand cars have been sold at appraised values, on credit, to the southern railroads.

Of five hundred and eighty-eight steamboats and other boats employed on the western rivers, all but eleven have been put out of commission. The sales of many of those owned by the United States have been effected. These sales are not yet concluded; they will produce about $1,100,000.

Of the transport fleet upon the ocean on the 1st of January last, four hundred and sixty steamers and vessels of all kinds have been discharged or laid up for sale, and many of them have already been sold. The fleet has been reduced over one hundred thousand tons, and vessels are daily arriving at home ports to be discharged or sold. The monthly expenses of the transport fleet have been reduced $1,814,180.

A million dollars has been received from the sales of vessels belonging to the department, which will be increased by future sales.

In all, 83,887 persons, employed on wages, had been discharged from the service of the quartermaster's department at the end of September, 1865, reducing its expenses per month $4,086,098.

The sales of property of all kinds reported and recorded on the books of the Quartermaster General's office, from the 20th of April to the 8th of November, 1865, amount to $13,357,345.

The cost of forage issued to the armies during the month of March last is estimated at $3,294,000. In the month of September it is estimated at $1,134,000, a reduction in monthly expenditure of $2,160,000. The armies on the eastern coast have been supplied with forage purchased before the end of May last. No considerable purchases have been made in the East since that time. Purchases of forage since May have been confined to the supply of the troops in Georgia and upon the Gulf coast in Texas, and upon the western plains.

The consumption of coal in the month of March last was 90,685 tons, costing $748,151. In September it had been reduced to 25,592 tons, costing $204,736.

CHIEF ENGINEER.

The report of the Chief Engineer of the Army gives the operations of the department under his charge, and the duties of the officers of the corps of Engineers. This corps consisted, on June 30, 1865, of eighty-five officers, the Military Academy, and five companies of engineer troops. Every member of the corps has been on duty uninterruptedly during the year. At the date of the report twelve officers, being generals in command of troops, were on detached service, and others were on staff duty, or detailed for service under the orders of the Light-House Board and the Department of the Interior, the remainder being on duty at the Military Academy, on sea-coast defenses, survey of the lakes, with the Engineer battalion, and as assistants to the Chief Engineer. The particular services rendered by these officers are recited in the narratives and other statements accompanying the report, and comprise the professional duties of the engineer, together with those of the various arms of the service to which the officers have been assigned. In general, every army and military expedition has had assigned to it officers of this corps. Their reports give the plans of attack and defense, as well as the outlines of the marches by the armies to which they were attached, and together constitute a comprehensive statement of the last year's operations of the armies.

The sea-coast defenses have progressed in proportion to the available means and the number of officers who could be assigned to this branch of duty. The efforts of the engineer department have been principally directed to constructions for mounting the guns of large caliber now essential in consequence of corresponding armaments in iron floating batteries. The permanent forts on the Gulf, since their repossession by the Government, have been repaired and put in a defensive condition. The available means of the department will suffice to accomplish all that is required at these works, and at those of the southern Atlantic coast, until plans are matured for modifications adapting them to the existing sea-coast armaments.

The Military Academy has continued to furnish a limited number of graduates for the subordinate grades of the Army, a number, however, which has not for years past sufficed to fill the vacancies, in the line and staff, occasioned by the casualties of the service. The Chief Engineer, in view of this fact, recommends an increase of the number of cadets; and, in order to economize in the expenses of the institution, proposes a mode of selecting candidates from nominees for each vacancy, that will, he thinks, with more certainty insure proficiency in studies and the military art by those aspiring to enter the service.

The survey of the northern lakes has progressed during the year as heretofore. The repairs and preservation of the harbors on the lakes and on the Atlantic have been prosecuted to the full extent of the resources of the department in officers and available funds. Success in this branch of engineering is attended with greater difficulties than are met in most others in which science and skill are called upon to promote the interests of the country. Heretofore the plans of improvement adopted have been directed to secure immediate results, and the source of the evil having been left to exercise its influence, has rendered constant repetitions of labor and expenditures necessary. The Chief Engineer is now calling upon the officers charged with works of this character for plans to arrest the cause of constant obstructions to commerce, and it is hoped that measures may be devised by which these improvements may be made to endure for a longer period, if not to become permanent in their nature.

The expenditures of the engineer department during the year amounted to $5,479,420 23.

ORDNANCE BUREAU.

The fiscal resources of the Ordnance Bureau for the past year amounted to $45,783,656 10, and the expenditures to $43,112,581 27, leaving a balance of $2,671,124 88 to the credit of disbursing officers, in the Government depositories, on June 30, 1865.

The estimates for the next year are for objects not confined to a state of war, but for such as are required to keep up a proper state of preparation, and to preserve the large and valuable munitions of war now on hand. On the termination of the war, measures were promptly taken to reduce the procurement of supplies, and to provide storage for the munitions returned to the arsenals from the armies, and captured from the enemy. Commodious fire-proof workshops are being erected at Allegheny, Watervliet, and Frankford arsenals, and it is contemplated to erect similar shops at Washington arsenal, for which there is an appropriation. These shops can be advantageously used for storage when their entire capacity for manufacturing purposes is not needed.

From the evident importance of arming the permanent fortifications as fast as they are built, the construction of cannon and carriages for this purpose, so far as existing appropriations warrant, has not been intermitted. It is contemplated to increase the capacity of manufacturing sea-coast carriages in proportion to the readiness of the forts to receive them, and to discontinue the fabrication of wooden carriages for field and siege guns, in favor of iron carriages, which experiments have shown are preferable for that service. Cast-iron smooth-bore cannon, of large caliber, as now made, are found to be entirely reliable; but not so the heavy rifled cannon, as heretofore made and tried. The failures, on trial, of the wrought-iron guns made by Mr. Horatio Ames, indicate that these guns cannot be relied upon, and that no more of them ought to be made for this department. Two experimental cast-iron eight-inch rifle guns have been made of the model and weight supposed to render them reliable for service. They are now undergoing extreme proof to test them thoroughly.

The manufacture of arms at the national armory was reduced at the conclusion of hostilities as rapidly as could be done with economy, and at present no new muskets are being made there. With a view to change the model of small-arms from muzzle-loaders to breech-loaders, extensive experiments have been made; but they have not yet resulted in the selection of a model of such decided excellence as to render its adoption for the service advisable. It is hoped that such a model may soon be found. A plan for altering the musket of the present pattern into efficient breech-loaders has been devised, and five thousand of them are being so altered for issue to troops for practical test. There are nearly one million of good Springfield muskets on hand, and upward of half a million of foreign and captured muskets. The latter will be sold whenever suitable prices can be obtained for them, and also other ordnance stores of a perishable nature, which are in excess of the wants of the service.

The necessity of providing a suitable depository for gunpowder, with proper magazines for its storage and preservation, which was stated in the last annual report, is again mentioned, and the requisite legislation is urged.

A partial provision for this object, as far as respects a supply for the Mississippi valley, has been made on the military reserve at Jefferson Barracks.

The Government has not yet acquired a title to the property on Rock Island, taken possession of under the act of July 19, 1864. It is important that this be done with as little delay as practicable. The importance of having full possession and control of Rock Island, including the adjacent islands, and the right of way, is stated in the report of the Chief of Ordnance, and additional legislation therefor, if necessary, is recommended.

Several of the southern arsenals have been reoccupied, and it is intended to reoccupy them all, except that at Fayetteville, North Carolina, which has been destroyed. The necessary measures have been taken for the preservation of the powder mill at Augusta, and the laboratory and unfinished armory at Macon, Georgia, which have been captured.

The number of permanent United States arsenals and armories is twenty-eight. The command and supervision of these, together with the inspection services required at the arsenals, the foundries, the powder mills, and other private establishments engaged in work for the Government, furnish constant employment for the whole number of ordnance officers (sixty-four) now authorized by law. The proper discharge of these essential duties requires that that number should be continued as part of the military peace establishment of the country.

The armies in the field have been amply and well supplied with arms and other ordnance stores, and the fortifications have had their armaments kept in order and strengthened and increased by additional guns of heavy caliber and great efficiency.

THE SIGNAL CORPS.

On the 1st of November, 1864, the Signal corps numbered 168 officers and 1,350 enlisted men, distributed in detachments among the armies in the field and the military departments. All that portion of the Signal corps on duty east of the Mississippi has been mustered out of service, the act of Congress under which the corps was organized having limited its organization to the duration of the rebellion. There now remain 9 officers and 37 enlisted men in the military division of the Mississippi, and 15 officers and 98 enlisted men in the military division of the Gulf. These detachments are operating with the troops on the plains, in Texas, and along the southwestern boundary.

The expenditures from appropriations for the signal service amounted to $8,537.06 during the year ending September 30, 1865. The balance unexpended amounts to $248,062.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH.

The telegraph has continued to be a most efficient and important instrument in military operations. Its officers have shown the same devotion and fidelity which have signalized their efforts during former years. There have been constructed during the year 3,246 miles of military telegraph; 8,323 miles have been in operation during the year, and at its termination 6,228 miles were still in use. The expenditure upon the military telegraph during the fiscal year was $1,360,000; since the beginning of the war $2,655,500. There have been constructed and operated in all during the war about 15,000 miles of military telegraph. Control has been assumed of the telegraphs of the late rebellious districts as fast as they fell into our hands, and arrangements are now made by which the lines are kept in repair by the stockholders, the United States being at the expense only of purely military lines and stations.

MILITARY PRISONERS AND PRISONERS OF WAR.

The report of the Commissioner of Exchanges exhibits the exchange transactions during the war, with statistical tables and other information respecting the condition and treatment of prisoners on each side.

Frequent inspections of military prisons have been made from time to time, and all military prisoners have been released, except such as were under sentence or awaiting trial for murder, arson, or other grave offenses. Clemency has been extended liberally as was deemed compatible with public security. All persons imprisoned for offenses against the draft laws have been released, and all deserters from the volunteer service. Since the surrender of Lee's army the danger to the national safety from combinations and conspiracies to aid the rebellion or resist the laws in the States not declared to be insurgent has passed away; it is therefore recommended that the proclamation suspending the writ of habeas corpus in those States be revoked.

The Commissary General of Prisoners reports that between the 1st of January and the 20th of October, there were in our custody 98,802 prisoners of war. Of these 1,955 enlisted into the United States service. Sixty-three thousand four hundred and forty-two were released after the cessation of hostilities, and 33,127 were delivered in exchange. Besides these, 174,223 prisoners were surrendered in the different rebel armies, and were released on parole, namely:

JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL.

In the Bureau of Military Justice, since March 2, 1865, there have been received, reviewed, and filed, 16,591 records of general courts-martial and military commissions, and 6,123 special reports have been made as to the regularity of proceedings, the pardon of military offenders, the remission or commutation of sentences, and upon the numerous miscellaneous subjects and questions referred for the opinion of the bureau, including also letters of instruction upon military law and practice to judge advocates, reviewing officers, &c. By comparing these details with those presented in March last, it will be perceived that the business of this bureau, especially as an advisory branch of the War Department, has not yet been diminished, or sensibly affected by the altered condition of public affairs.

The "Digest of Opinions of the Judge Advocate General," issued by the bureau in January last, having come into extensive use throughout the Army, has proved of considerable advantage to the service in contributing to establish a uniformity of decision and action in the administration of military justice. As the present edition of the work has been very nearly exhausted, it is proposed to prepare during the coming winter an enlarged edition, containing, in connection with those already published, a selection of the official opinions communicated by the Judge Advocate General during the present year.

The chief of the bureau expresses his satisfaction with the ability and efficiency with which the officers and clerks connected with it have performed their several duties, and, in view of the fact that the business of this branch of the public service will probably not be materially diminished for the next twelve months, is of the opinion that its present organization may well be continued by Congress.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

By an act of the last session of Congress a new bureau in the War Department was created, called the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands. Its object was to supply the immediate necessities of those whose condition was changed by hostilities, and were either escaping or escaped from slavery to obtain freedom, or were driven from their homes by the pressure of war, or the despotism of the rebellion. Its aid was designed for the needy of both races, white and black, and to administer as well aid from the Government and from charitable individuals and associations. No appropriation was made to carry this act into effect, but the condition of the people in the insurgent States required prompt relief. The act of Congress authorized the assignment of military officers to duty in the bureau, and under this provision it was organized. Major General Howard was assigned to duty as Commissioner; other officers selected by him were assigned for agents and assistants, and an organized system of relief has gone into operation. The report of the Commissioner, which has not yet been furnished to the Department, will show the operation of the Freedmen's Bureau during a period of several months, and afford some means to judge what regulations are required. It is plain that some such organization is wanted in the insurgent States to relieve promptly great and pressing need arising from the war, and social disorganization resulting from the war. Proper provisions for the colored population whose condition has been changed by direct act of the Federal Government, to serve its own purposes in the conflict, is a solemn duty. More or less resistance to the performance of this duty is to be expected while any rebellious or hostile spirit remains, but the obligation to perform it cannot be evaded or thrust aside with national honor or safety. A numerous class of white persons who, without fault in themselves, are suffering want occasioned by the ravages of war, have also a just claim for relief. But while discharging these obligations to needy destitute white persons and the freed colored people, the utmost care must be observed to guard against establishing a national system of pauperism that might foster a horde of idle officials or dishonest agents, and engender vice, sloth, and improvidence among a large class of persons. To avoid this evil and insure strict supervision, it is urgently recommended, first, that all appropriations of money for the Freedmen's Bureau be made in specific terms, distinct from any other purpose; second, that the number of agents and employes, and their compensation, be fixed by law; third, that the duties and powers of the bureau, in respect to persons and property, be defined by law.

By the heads of the respective bureaus of the War Department and their staffs the Government has been served with a zeal and fidelity not surpassed by their brethren in the field. To them the honors and distinction of an admiring public have not been opened, but in their respective vocations they have toiled with a devotion, ability, and success for which they are entitled to national gratitude.

Beside the signal success vouchsafed to our arms, other causes contributed to overthrow the rebellion. Among the chief of these may be reckoned:

1. The steadfast adherence of the President to the measure of emancipating the slaves in the rebel States. Slavery was avowed by the leaders of the rebellion to be its corner-stone. By that system millions of people, constituting nearly the whole working population of the South, were employed in producing supplies on the plantation, in the workshops and manufactories, and wherever labor was required, thus enabling the white population to fill the rebel armies. The hopes of freedom, kindled by the emancipation proclamation, paralyzed the industrial power of the rebellion. Slaves seized their chances to escape, discontent and distrust were engendered, the hopes of the slave and the fears of the master, stimulated by the success of the Federal arms, shook each day more and more the fabric built on human slavery.

2. The resolute purpose of Congress to maintain the Federal Union at all hazards, manifested by its legislation, was an efficient cause of our success. Ample supplies appropriated for the Army and Navy, revenue laws for supplying the Treasury, careful revision and amendment of the laws for recruiting the Army and enforcing the draft, gave practical direction to the patriotic purpose of the people to maintain a national existence that should afford protection and respect by means of the Federal Union.

SENATE &amp; HO. OF REPS.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

39TH CONG....1ST SESS.

3. Patriotic measures adopted by the Governors of loyal States, and the efficient aid they rendered the War Department in filling up the ranks of the Army and furnishing succor and relief to the sick and wounded, largely contributed to the national preservation. Of these measures one of the most important was the aid tendered by the Governors of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan in the opening of the campaign of 1864.

On the 21st day of April, 1864, Governors Brough, Morton, Yates, Stone, and Lewis made an offer to the President to the following effect:

That these States should furnish for the approaching campaign infantry troops—30,000 from Ohio, 20,000 from Indiana, the same number from Illinois, 10,000 from Iowa, and 5,000 from Wisconsin; the term of service to be one hundred days; the whole number to be furnished within twenty days; the troops to be armed, equipped, and transported as other troops, but no bounty to be paid, nor any credit on any draft, and the pending draft to go on until the State quota was filled.

After full consideration and conference with the Lieutenant General, this offer was accepted by President Lincoln. The State of Ohio organized within four weeks, and placed in the field, 35,646 officers and men, being 5,646 troops more than the stipulated quota. Other States, less able to meet the contingency, contributed with alacrity all that could be raised.

Although experience had shown that troops raised for a short term were more expensive and of less value than those raised for a longer period, these troops did important service in the campaign. They supplied garrisons and held posts for which experienced troops would have been required, and these were relieved so as to join the armies in the field. In several instances the three-months troops, at their own entreaty, were sent to the front, and displayed their gallantry in the hardest battles of the campaign.

4. The result of the presidential election of 1864 exerted an important influence upon the war. Intercepted letters and dispatches between the rebel leaders showed that their hopes of success rested greatly upon the presidential election. If the Union party prevailed, the prosecution of the war until the national authority should be restored appeared inevitable, and the rebel cause desperate. Even on the battle-field the influence of the election was felt. The overwhelming voice of the people at the presidential election encouraged the heroic daring of our own troops, and dismayed those who were fighting in a hopeless cause.

5. The faith of the people in the national success, as manifested by their support of the Government credit, also contributed much to the auspicious result. While thousands upon thousands of brave men filled the ranks of the Army, millions of money were required for the Treasury. These were furnished by the people, who advanced their money on Government securities, and freely staked their fortunes for the national defense.

Looking to the causes that have accomplished the national deliverance, there seems no room henceforth to doubt the stability of the Federal Union. These causes are permanent, and must always have an active existence. The majesty of national power has been exhibited in the courage and faith of our citizens, and the ignominy of rebellion is witnessed by the hopeless end of the great rebellion.

EDWIN M. STANTON.

Secretary of War.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,

December 4, 1865.

SIR: In my last annual report I presented to Congress and the country such description as the occasion seemed to require of the measures of administration by which our naval force had, during the preceding four years, been created and organized, with an account of the method and manner in which it had been applied in arduous and unexampled forms of action for the suppression of the rebellion. The review then given of the principal operations and the brilliant achievements of our Navy closed with the memorable recovery of the harbor and the almost impregnable defenses of Mobile.

In this report, besides the exposition of the ordinary business of this Department, including the suggestions and recommendations deemed necessary for the proper regulation of the naval service in the present condition of the country, it will be my duty to complete the official record of the triumphs of the Navy in the final operations and closing scenes of the war, to indicate the new arrangement and organization of the several squadrons consequent upon the termination of the blockade and the cessation of active hostilities, to exhibit the vigilance and energy of our blockading and cruising service, as testified by the number and value of the captures made in the unrelaxing and successful efforts to cut off illicit commercial intercourse with rebel ports; and especially to exhibit the policy and measures of the Department in effecting at the earliest moment, in view of returning peace, a reduction of naval expenditures, while providing for the prompt reestablishment at any time of our great naval power in all its efficiency to meet the exigencies of any possible crisis in which its services may be invoked to maintain the rights or vindicate the honor of the country.

The demands upon the naval service, which for four years had been exacting, were relaxed upon the fall of Fort Fisher. That event, and the possession of Cape Fear river, closed all access to Wilmington, the port of rebel supplies, put an end to illicit traffic with the States in insurrection, and extinguished the last remnants of that broken commerce which foreign adventurers had, notwithstanding constant and severe losses, persisted in carrying on by breach of blockade. The capture of Wilmington was preliminary to the fall of Richmond and the surrender of the rebel armies, which were thenceforward deprived of supplies from abroad. It released at once a large portion of our naval force, and led to immediate measures for the reduction of our squadrons and the withdrawal of all vessels which could be dispensed with from the blockade. Such of them as were purchased and no longer required by the Government, have from time to time been sold to meet the demands of reviving commerce, which has rapidly expanded as the country became quieted and industry was resumed at the South. Trade and peaceful employment have led to the reopening of the avenues of commercial and social intercourse, and the steamers bought from the merchant service for war purposes have been to a great extent returned to their former pursuits.

NORTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON—CAPTURE OF WILMINGTON AND ITS DEFENSES.

As early as 1862 the necessity of closing the port of Wilmington became a primary object with this Department, and was never relinquished; but without military aid and cooperation it could not be effected or even wisely attempted. In September, 1864, the Department had such assurances of military assistance as to feel warranted in entering upon the necessary preparations for assembling an adequate naval force to undertake and perform its part in accomplishing the work. In order that there should be no failure, the Department concentrated a sufficient force to insure success. To place that force under the command of the first officer in the Navy was a duty. Vice Admiral Farragut was therefore selected to conduct the enterprise, but impaired health, the result of exposure and unremitting exertions during two years of active labor and unceasing efforts in the Gulf, rendered it imprudent for that distinguished and energetic officer to enter upon this service. He had, moreover, important work yet to be finished on the Gulf coast, where he was then operating, and was therefore, on his own request, excused from his new command. Rear Admiral Porter, who had shown great ability as the commander of the Mississippi squadron, and had identified himself with many of its most important achievements, was transferred to the command of the North Atlantic squadron, which embraced within its limits Cape Fear river and the port of Wilmington.

A fleet of naval vessels, surpassing in numbers and equipments any which had assembled during the war, was collected with dispatch at Hampton Roads. Various causes intervened to delay the movement, and it was not until the early part of December that the expedition departed for Beaufort, North Carolina, the place of rendezvous. Some further necessary preparations were there made, which, together with unfavorable weather and other incidents, delayed the attack until the 24th of December. On that day Rear Admiral Porter, with a bombarding force of thirty-seven vessels, five of which were iron-clads, and a reserved force of nineteen vessels, attacked the forts at the mouth of Cape Fear river, and silenced them in one hour and a quarter; but there being no troops to make an assault or attempt to possess them, nothing beyond the injury inflicted on the works and the garrison was accomplished by the bombardment. A renewed attack was made the succeeding day, but with scarcely better results. The fleet shelled the forts during the day and silenced them, but no assault was made, or attempted, by the troops which had been disembarked for that purpose.

Major General Butler, who commanded the cooperating force, after a reconnoissance, came to the conclusion that the place could not be carried by an assault. He therefore ordered a reembarkation, and informing Rear Admiral Porter of his intention, returned with his command to Hampton Roads. Immediate information of the failure of the expedition was forwarded to the Department by Rear Admiral Porter, who remained in the vicinity with his entire fleet, awaiting the needful military aid. Aware of the necessity of reducing these works, and of the great importance which the Department attached to closing the port of Wilmington, and confident that with adequate military cooperation the fort could be carried, he asked for such cooperation, and earnestly requested that the enterprise should not be abandoned. In this the Department and the President fully concurred. On the suggestion of the President, Lieutenant General Grant was advised of the confidence felt by Rear Admiral Porter that he could obtain complete success, provided he should be sufficiently sustained. Such military aid was therefore invited as would insure the fall of Fort Fisher.

A second military force was promptly detailed, composed of about 8,500 men, under the command of Major General A. H. Terry, and sent forward. This officer arrived off Fort Fisher on the 13th of January. Offensive operations were at once resumed by the naval force, and the troops were landed and intrenched themselves, while a portion of the fleet bombarded the works. These operations were continued throughout the 14th with an increased number of vessels. The 15th was the day decided upon for an assault. During the forenoon of that day forty-four vessels poured an incessant fire into the rebel forts. There was, besides, a force of fourteen vessels in reserve. At three p. m. the signal for the assault was made. Desperate fighting ensued, traverse after traverse was taken, and by ten p. m. the works were all carried, and the flag of the Union floated over them. Fourteen hundred sailors and marines were landed and participated in the direct assault.

Seventy-five guns, many of them superb rifle pieces, and 1,900 prisoners, were the immediate fruits and trophies of the victory; but the chief value and ultimate benefit of this grand achievement consisted in closing the main gate through which the insurgents had received supplies from abroad and sent their own products to foreign markets in exchange.

Light-draft steamers were immediately pushed over the bar and into the river, the channel of which was speedily buoyed, and the removal of torpedoes forthwith commenced. The rebels, witnessing the fall of Fort Fisher, at once evacuated and blew up Fort Caswell, destroyed Bald Head Fort and Fort Shaw, and abandoned Fort Campbell. Within twenty-four hours after the fall of Fort Fisher, the main defense of Cape Fear river, the entire chain of formidable works in the vicinity shared its fate, placing in our possession 168 guns of heavy caliber.

The heavier naval vessels being no longer needed in that quarter, were dispatched in different directions—some to James river and northern ports, others to the Gulf or the South Atlantic squadron. An ample force was retained, however, to support the small but brave army which had carried the traverses of Fort Fisher, and enable it, when reinforcements should arrive, to continue the movement on Wilmington.

Great caution was necessary in removing the torpedoes, always formidable in harbors and internal waters, and which have been more destructive to our naval vessels than all other means combined.

About the middle of February offensive operations were resumed in the direction of Wilmington, the vessels and the troops moving up the river in concert. Fort Anderson, an important work, was evacuated during the night of the 18th of February, General Schofield advancing upon this fort with 8,000 men, while the gunboats attacked it by water.

On the 21st the rebels were driven from Fort Strong, which left the way to Wilmington unobstructed, and on the 22d of February that city was evacuated. Two hundred and twelve guns were taken in the works from the entrance of Old river, including those near the city, and thus this great and brilliant achievement was completed.

SOUTH ATLANTIC SQUADRON—FALL OF CHARLESTON.

In November, 1864, the Department officially advised Rear Admiral Dahlgren that Major General Sherman had commenced his march from Atlanta to the sea-board, and that he might be expected to reach the Atlantic coast, in the vicinity of Savannah, about the middle of December. Rear Admiral Dahlgren was instructed to be prepared to cooperate with General Sherman, and furnish him any needed naval assistance which it might be in his power to render. Before these instructions reached him, Rear Admiral Dahlgren, who was thus not unprepared to hear of the movement of the army from Atlanta to the coast, had conferred with Major General Foster, then commanding the department of the South, and concerted with him plans to assist, so far as their joint forces would allow, in establishing communication with the advancing general. A combined expedition was at once organized for cutting the railroad communication between Charleston and Savannah, and otherwise engaging the attention of the insurgents in that quarter. Force was displayed at the most important points along the Carolina coast, and every available means adopted to aid in the success of the grand and novel military movement which was in progress through the heart of a hostile country.

General Sherman reached the vicinity of Savannah on the 12th of December, and communication between him and Rear Admiral Dahlgren was immediately established. The latter made the best possible disposition of the vessels then under his command, to assist the army in obtaining possession of Savannah. By the 18th of December the investment of that city, by the Navy on one side and the Army on the other, was accomplished. The garrison, however, succeeded in escaping across the river and effecting a retreat toward Charleston, leaving General Sherman to occupy Savannah on the 21st of that month.

Early in January, Rear Admiral Dahlgren was engaged in assisting in the transfer of the right wing of the army to Beaufort, South Carolina, and in the course of General Sherman's march northward that officer and his army were aided by all needful naval demonstrations.

On the 12th and 13th of February a joint movement was made along the approaches from Bull's bay to Mount Pleasant, with a view of embarrassing the military commandant at Charleston, and blinding him as to the actual military design. No real or serious attack on Charleston was meditated. Only a diversion was contemplated at that moment. Other less extensive movements than that at Bull's bay were made about that period, full details of which will be found in the dispatches forming a part of the appendix to this report. They were intended simply to attract the attention of the rebels and aid General Sherman in accomplishing his great purpose of moving toward Richmond. Charleston was in the mean time vigilantly watched to detect the first indications of its abandonment by the rebels, which it was known must take place at an early day. The troops stationed thereabout were advanced, and the iron-clads were moved nearer to the rebel works. During the night of the 17th of February the batteries were ceaselessly employed, and the vessels in the harbor gave them watchful attention. The morning of the 18th revealed the fact that Charleston was evacuated. Thus, without a final struggle, the original seat of the rebellion, the most invulnerable and best-protected city on the coast, whose defenses had cost immense treasure and labor, was abandoned, and the emblem of unity and freedom was again reinstated upon the walls of Sumter.

The evacuation of Charleston was followed by that of Georgetown on the 23d of February, and on the 26th of that month the place itself was occupied by Rear Admiral Dahlgren.

WEST GULF SQUADRON—SURRENDER OF MOBILE AND THE REBEL FLEET.

When Vice Admiral Farragut left the West Gulf squadron in the later autumn of 1864, the command devolved on Commodore James S. Palmer, senior officer on the station. This officer continued operations until the arrival of Admiral Farragut's successor, Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher, who bears testimony to his subsequent efficiency and untiring services throughout the attack on the defenses of Mobile, and acknowledges also his indebtedness to Commodore Palmer for the admirable manner in which the vessels had been prepared for arduous service under that officer's supervision. The resumption of offensive operations against the city of Mobile, under the direction of Major General Canby, was not determined upon until early in January, when Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher, then recently appointed to the command of the West Gulf squadron, was ordered to proceed immediately to New Orleans, in order to cooperate with the military commander.

The force placed under Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher was increased by light-draft iron-clads detached from the Mississippi squadron for service in Mobile bay. A joint movement by land and water was arranged and carried into execution. Indications that the rebels were about to evacuate the city led to a naval reconnaissance in force to ascertain the facts, on the 11th of March, with five monitors, in as close proximity as the shallow water and obstructions would permit. This movement drew from the insurgents such a fire as to place beyond doubt that those defenses were still intact.

The troops were landed on the 21st of March on the left bank of Fisher's river, about seventeen miles from its junction with the bay, and advanced as rapidly as the condition of the road would permit, while the naval vessels shelled the woods and kept open communication by signals with General Canby for cooperation.

The rebels doubtless believed that the naval vessels were not able to cross the bar of Blakely river; and even if successful in crossing, that it was in their power to destroy the boats by their marsh batteries and the innumerable torpedoes with which the river was filled. They did succeed in sinking two of the monitors and four wooden gunboats at the entrance of Blakely river, by these submarine implements of destruction, although the river had been thoroughly dragged, and many torpedoes were removed before the vessels went over the bar. Beyond the sinking of these vessels and the loss of a few lives, no serious consequences attended the approach to and capture of Mobile.

The principal works of defense between the city and the fortresses which guarded the entrance to the bay, captured in August, 1864, by the fleet while commanded by Vice Admiral Farragut, were Fort Alexis and Spanish Fort. By the 3d of April these had been completely invested by the troops, and during the night of the 8th and morning of the 9th they were, after a short but severe bombardment, captured, and with them from one thousand six hundred to two thousand men, with sixteen heavy guns. With the key to Mobile thus secured, the other works of importance, batteries Tracy and Huger, were within easy reach, and on the evening of the 11th they were evacuated.

On the 12th the troops were conveyed to the west side of the city for the purpose of an attack, and the fleet gained a suitable position for performing its share of this work, but it was soon ascertained that the city was at the mercy of our arms, all the remaining defenses having been abandoned. A formal surrender was therefore demanded by General Granger and Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher, which was complied with and possession was taken of the city. The works which environed Mobile were of immense strength and extent. Nearly 400 guns were captured, some of them new and of the heaviest caliber.

The rebel army, on evacuating the city, retreated up the Tombigbee. Preparations to follow and capture them were far advanced, when, on the 4th of May, propositions were received from Commander Farrand, commanding the rebel naval forces in the waters of Alabama, to surrender all the vessels, officers, men, and property yet afloat and under blockade on the Tombigbee. The basis of the terms of surrender being the same as those of General Lee, were accepted. On the 10th of May the formal surrender took place, and the insurgent navy ceased to be an organization. Four vessels were surrendered, and 112 officers, 285 men, and 24 marines, were paroled and permitted to return to their homes.

Sabine Pass and Galveston, the only remaining rebel fortified points on the Gulf coast, soon capitulated. The forts at the first-named place were evacuated on the 23th of May, and the commandant of the defenses of Galveston gave assurances that there would be no opposition to the occupancy of that place by the Navy. On the 2d of June Galveston was surrendered, and the supremacy of the Government was once more established on the entire coast, from Maine to and including Texas.

REDUCTION OF THE NAVAL FORCE—THE SQUADRONS.

Immediately after the fall of Fort Fisher and the capture of Wilmington, measures were taken for the gradual reduction of the naval forces employed on the duties of blockade. The recovery of Charleston, Mobile, and Galveston justified a still further diminution, and as these events successively occurred, measures were promptly taken to reduce the squadrons and economize expenses. On the 24th of February letters were addressed to Admirals Porter, Dahlgren, Stribling, and Thatcher, informing them that the Department was of opinion that the fall of Fort Fisher and the possession of Charleston would enable the Department to reduce naval expenses. They were therefore directed to send North such purchased vessels as needed extensive repairs, and also any naval stores that were not required. A careful scrutiny of requisitions was enjoined before approval, and commanders of squadrons were informed that they would be expected to use every possible exertion and care to diminish the expenses of their respective commands.

About the 1st of May orders were issued to further reduce the squadrons in our domestic waters one half. Near the close of that month a further diminution was directed, so that the entire force retained in commission should not exceed one hundred vessels. In the early part of July another and still further reduction was made, leaving but thirty steamers, which, with receiving store-ships, composed the entire blockading squadrons on the Atlantic and the Gulf.

On the 31st of July the Potomac flotilla, which, under Commander F. A. Parker, had rendered active service, was disbanded.

The Mississippi squadron, comprising at one time about one hundred steamers, was gradually reduced, and on the 14th of August wholly discontinued. Acting Rear Admiral Lee was relieved, and Commodore Livingston, who had acquitted himself with energy at the Norfolk station, and subsequently at Cairo, was intrusted with the duty of disposing of the vessels and closing up the affairs of that squadron.

The reduction of the blockading force involved also a curtailment of the number of squadrons. In June, therefore, the North and South Atlantic squadrons were consolidated into one, known thereafter as the Atlantic squadron, commanded by acting Rear Admiral Radford, who, on the 28th of April, had succeeded Rear Admiral Porter in command of the North Atlantic squadron. Rear Admiral Dahlgren was detached from the command of the South Atlantic squadron, and hauled down his flag at Washington on the 12th day of July.

Acting Rear Admiral Radford, having been appointed commandant of the Washington navy-yard, was succeeded by Commodore Joseph Lanman in the command of the Atlantic squadron on the 10th of October.

The consolidation of the East Gulf squadron, commanded by Acting Rear Admiral Stribling, and the West Gulf squadron, under Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher, was also consummated, and thereafter this force was known as the Gulf squadron. Acting Rear Admiral Thatcher remained in command, and Acting Rear Admiral Stribling returned to Boston in July.

Besides the vessels composing the several squadrons, others are in commission in various capacities. The James Adger is stationed at Aspinwall; the Michigan is assigned to the northern lakes; the Sabine is employed as an apprentice ship; the De Soto is in the West Indies; the Massachusetts and South Carolina are still continued as supply ships for the squadrons on the coast; the Constitution, Macedonian, and several others are connected with the Naval Academy; and twenty vessels are used at the navy-yards as receiving ships and tenders; so that there are actually in commission at this time, at home and abroad, one hundred and seventeen vessels of all descriptions, which number, should the exigencies of the service permit, will be still further reduced.

In January, while Rear Admiral Porter was engaged before Wilmington, affairs on James river assumed such an attitude, involving the welfare and security of the Army by a demonstration on the part of the rebels with their armored rams from Richmond, that it was deemed important to send thither immediately an officer of ability and experience. Vice Admiral Farragut, then in Washington, was selected for this special duty, and on the 24th of that month proceeded to James river for that purpose. The threatening demonstration below Richmond was not long maintained, and the occasion having passed, Vice Admiral Farragut was relieved from this special service on the 2d of February.

A special squadron of vessels, consisting of the Vanderbilt, Tuscarora, Powhatan, and the turreted iron-clad Monadnock, left Hampton Roads on the 2d of November, under the command of Commodore John Rodgers, destined to reinforce the squadron in the Pacific.

In withdrawing a large naval force from active service, in disposing of the vessels, in discharging or detaching to other duties their officers and crews, in making provision for a large surplus of ordnance ammunition and stores, great labor has of course devolved upon the Department and its bureaus. Some idea may be formed of the extent of that labor, from the fact that there were in the several blockading squadrons in January last, exclusive of other duty, 471 vessels and 2,455 guns. There are now but 29 vessels remaining on the coast, carrying 210 guns, inclusive of howitzers. Disposition has been made of all the others. Some of the vessels are laid up in ordinary, some, with their crews, are on foreign service, but many have been sold, and, with most of the men that were actively engaged in hostile operations, are now employed in peaceful occupation.

As soon as our domestic troubles were overcome, the duty of attending to our interests abroad prompted the reestablishing of the foreign squadrons which had been suspended. The European, the Brazil, and the East India squadrons have been organized anew upon an economical a scale as is consistent with their efficiency, the interests of commerce, and a proper regard for our position as a nation.

These squadrons, with another which is soon to be put in operation in the West Indies, and the Pacific squadron, which has never been discontinued, are considered sufficient for the encouragement and protection of our countrymen engaged in legitimate commercial pursuits, and for upholding our flag abroad.

Some modifications of the limit of the respective squadrons, and the substitution of steamers for sailing vessels, will infuse more vigor into the service, and it is designed that there shall hereafter be greater activity and vigilance in their operations. The number of vessels and crews on foreign service will not be greatly increased over those of former years, while the number of guns will be less; yet the superiority of steam over sails for naval war vessels, and the improvement and new patterns of ordnance, will hereafter give our force abroad greatly augmented efficiency and power.

The European squadron is commanded by Rear Admiral L. M. Goldsborough, and consists of the following vessels: the Colorado, Kearsarge, Ticonderoga, Frolic, Ino, and Guard, to which the Canadagua will shortly be added. The field of operation of this squadron, besides the coast of Europe and the Mediterranean, will comprise Madeira, the Canaries, and the African coast as far as St. Paul de Loando.

The Brazil squadron is commanded by Acting Rear Admiral S. W. Godon, who has ten vessels on that station, namely: the Susquehanna, Brooklyn, Juniata, Shamokin, Nipsic, Shawmut, Kansas, Wasp, Supply, and Onward. Besides the eastern coast of South America, this squadron will cruise on the coast of Africa from Cape Town to St. Paul de Loando.

The East India squadron consists at present of four vessels: the Hartford, Wyoming, Wachusett, and Relief. The Shenandoah will be shortly added to this number. This squadron is commanded by Acting Rear Admiral H. H. Bell, who sailed from New York in his flag-ship, the Hartford, in August, and has probably already reached his station.

The Pacific squadron remains in command of Acting Rear Admiral George F. Pearson, and comprises eleven vessels, namely: the Lancaster, Powhatan, Saranac, Suwanee, Mohongo, Wateree, Saginaw, St. Mary's, Cyane, Nyack, and Tuscarora, and two store-ships, the Fredonia and Farallones. Some vessels sent to the Pacific (including two of the iron-clads) will be laid up in the harbor of San Francisco, ready for any emergency that may arise.

The extensive limits of this squadron, embracing the whole western coast of North and South America, with the islands of the Pacific; the rapidly-increasing population of the States; and the growing and expanding commerce, and vast interests involved, render it advisable that the naval force of the Union should be largely reinforced in that quarter. Considerable addition to the number of vessels will therefore be made, and it is proposed at an early day to make a division of the squadron.

But few vessels, and they on merely temporary duty, have as yet been employed in the West Indies. The Connecticut, the Kansas, the De Soto, and nearly all the vessels which have been sent to the coast of Brazil, have visited some of the more important points, particularly in the island of St. Domingo, and given attention to American interests there. It is proposed to revive the West India squadron to cruise in those waters, where we have so large a trade, and where, owing to the proximity of the islands to our shores, it is essential that we should cultivate friendly relations. Commodore James S. Palmer has been designated to command the squadron, having for his flag-ship the Rhode Island. In addition to the De Soto, now on that station, it is proposed to send the Swatara, Monongahela, Florida, Augusta, Shamrock, Ashuelot, and Monocacy, making a squadron of nine vessels.

THE NAVAL FORCE.

When hostilities against the Government were commenced in the spring of 1861, and the ports on our southern coast were ordered to be closed under the form of international blockade, instead of the municipal form of an embargo, the labor, embarrassments, and responsibilities suddenly and unexpectedly imposed upon this Department were immensely increased.

To create and organize a navy such as the order for the blockade required, would have been at any time an immense undertaking, but the task was vastly more onerous when the country, after a long interval of peace, was beginning to be rent by civil convulsions.

In this condition of affairs, with the Navy reduced during fifty years of peace to a low standard of efficiency, without experience or precedent to guide the application of modern inventions to war purposes, with restricted and wholly insufficient navy-yards for the construction and repair of vessels, and without any adequate establishment for the stupendous work before it, the Department was compelled to feel its way and press on its work at the very time when a duty was imposed upon it which a nation fully prepared and furnished with abundant ships and men and material would have found difficulty in performing. But the resources of the country were equal to the emergency. With only limited means at the command of the Department to begin with, the Navy became suddenly an immense power. An unrelaxing blockade was maintained for four years from the capes of the Chesapeake to the Rio Grande, while a flotilla of gunboats, protecting and aiding the Army in its movements, penetrated and patrolled our rivers, through an internal navigation almost continental, from the Potomac to the Mississippi.

After the capture of Forts Matheras and Clark, in August, 1861, port after port was wrested from the insurgents, until the flag of the Union was again restored in every harbor and along our entire coast, and the rebellion eventually wholly suppressed.

Coincident with these operations afloat, the Department had its attention also actively engaged in developing the ingenuity, skill, and resources of the country, in the construction of new classes of vessels, in the introduction of new descriptions of ordnance, torpedoes, and projectiles, in experiments in steam, and in the improvement of steam machinery. Although compelled to encounter opposition in all its forms, the Department has been unrelaxing in its efforts, and in almost every instance has met with a generous response from Congress and the country.

Three hundred and twenty-two officers traitorously abandoned the service to which they had dedicated their lives, proved false to the flag which they had sworn to support, and to the Government which had confided in their honor and relied on their fidelity to sustain it in conflict and peril. The embarrassment caused by these desertions in the moment of trial was temporary. Better men from the merchant marine, educated, and vastly more efficient, promptly volunteered their services, in many instances at great pecuniary sacrifice, to fight the battles of the Union. About seven thousand five hundred of these gallant and generous spirits have, after examination, received appointments and been employed in the Navy. Schools were established to instruct and perfect them in the rudiments of gunnery and nautical routine, and it is due to them to say that they have acquitted themselves with credit and served with zeal and fidelity. The intercourse between these volunteer officers and the officers of the regular Navy has been productive of mutual good-will and respect. It will, I trust, lead to lasting personal friendships and insure enduring intimacy between the commercial and naval service. Most of the volunteer officers have received an honorable discharge and returned to their peaceful professional pursuits. I take this occasion to renew my annual suggestion, that some of the most distinguished of these heroic and loyal men, of admitted capability and merit, who have served the country so faithfully and so well, be added to the Navy after an examination by a board of officers appointed for that purpose. Such an addition to the Navy, of brave and intelligent representatives from the commercial marine, will be a fitting and honorable recognition of the services of a body of men who came gallantly forward in a period of national peril to sustain the cause of their country.

From 7,600 men in service at the commencement of the rebellion, the number was increased to 51,500 at its close. In addition to these the aggregate of artisans and laborers employed in the navy-yards was 16,880, instead of 3,844 previously in the pay of the Government. This is exclusive of those employed in the private ship-yards and establishments, under contracts, constituting an almost equal aggregate number. Two hundred and eight vessels have been commenced and most of them fitted for service during this period. A few of the larger ones will require still further time for completion. Only steamers, the propellers also having sailing power, have been built by the Government during my administration of the Department.

Since the 4th of March, 1861, 418 vessels have been purchased, of which 313 were steamers, at a cost of $18,366,681 83, and of these there have been sold 340 vessels, for which the Government has received $5,621,800 27.

THE CONDUCT OF THE BLOCKADE.

In order to guard the coast and enforce the blockade, the Department was under the necessity of breaking up and ordering home our foreign squadrons. This recall, rendered imperative by the necessities of the case, left our extensive commerce on distant seas unprotected. The great maritime Powers of Europe, as soon as they were aware of our domestic difficulty, hastened to recognize the rebels as belligerents, and proclaimed themselves neutral between the contending parties. The operations of this assumed neutrality were to deprive our national ships of the privileges which they had by national courtesy enjoyed, and while thus restricting and inflicting injury on our Government, the professed and proclaimed neutrality gave encouragement and strength to the rebels who were in insurrection and waging war upon the Union. Each of these European neutrals had treaties of amity, and was in friendly official and commercial intercourse, with the Government of the United States, while with the rebels, who were without a recognized flag or nationality, they had neither treaties nor official relations. The United States had a navy which commanded respect, and a commerce that covered every sea, while the rebels had neither navy nor commerce to be affected by neutral exclusions and restrictions. Consequently this action of the neutral league operated, on the one hand, to injure and embarrass a friendly Government that was cultivating and practicing peaceful and friendly relations with every nation; and, on the other hand, to give countenance and encouragement to rebels engaged in a causeless insurrection to subvert the most beneficent Government on earth.

Virtually excluded from the ports of the great maritime Powers by this assumed neutrality, the difficulty of maintaining even a limited naval force abroad was greatly increased. The withdrawal of our squadrons left our unprotected commerce exposed to the depredations of semi-piratical cruisers, which were built, armed, manned, and sent out to plunder and destroy our merchantmen from the shores of neutral Europe. To these aggravated wrongs we were compelled, in the great emergency which existed, to submit, for under no circumstances would the Department relax the blockade, or permit its efficiency to be impaired.

The suppression of the rebellion enables us to reestablish squadrons abroad, and to display again the flag of the Union in foreign ports. Our men-of-war, released from the blockade, will soon be found in every sea, prepared to assert American rights and protect American interests.

European neutrality, now that the insurrection is suppressed, no longer denies to our national vessels those supplies and courtesies which were refused in the days of our misfortune. No rebel rover, built in neutral ports, remains to take alarm or feel apprehension on the appearance of the armed vessels of the Republic; and now that we have suppressed the insurrection, we may be permitted to receive hospitality and international comity from those neutral nations which during four years excluded our public ships, while they persistently insisted on elevating the rebels to be a distinct belligerent Power.

We had, in 1860, five squadrons on foreign stations, numbering thirty-one vessels, carrying 445 guns. At the present time we have on the several stations abroad thirty-six vessels, mounting 347 guns, and carrying 56 howitzers.

In time of peace our naval force should be actively employed in visiting every commercial port where American capital is employed, and there are few available points on the globe which American enterprise has not penetrated and reached. But commerce needs protection, and our squadrons and public vessels in commission must not be inactive. One or more of our naval vessels ought annually to display the flag of the Union in every port where our ships may trade. The commerce and the navy of a people have a common identity and are inseparable companions. Each is necessary for the other, and both are essential to national prosperity and strength. Wherever our merchantships may be employed, there should be within convenient proximity a naval force to protect them and make known our national power. Such are the energy and enterprise of our countrymen, that they will, now that the war has closed, compete for the trade and commerce of the world, provided the Government performs its duty in fostering and protecting their interests. Besides guarding the channels hitherto occupied and explored, it would be well that examinations be made for new avenues of trade. In connection with this subject, I would suggest the importance of a more thorough survey and exploration of the principal islands in the Pacific ocean, and that the Department have authority to carry this suggestion into effect.

Following the tracks of commerce, and visiting every navigable portion of the globe, the intelligent officers of the Navy are capable, from their position and opportunities, of acquiring and communicating a vast amount of useful information, thereby benefiting commerce, and, by continual additions to the stores of knowledge, promoting the welfare of the country and of mankind.

There are circumstances which render it necessary that a commercial and naval people should have coaling stations and ports for supplies at one or more important points on those seas and oceans where there are important interests to be protected, or naval power is to be maintained. Steamers cannot carry the same amount of supplies as the sailing vessels of former days, and the coal, which is indispensable to their efficiency, must, particularly in time of war, be furnished or obtainable at brief intervals, and in the immediate vicinity of their cruising grounds. A prudent regard for our future interests and welfare would seem to dictate the expediency of securing some eligible locations for the purpose indicated.

REBEL CRUISERS.

Information reached the Department in May that the iron-clad ram Stonewall, a formidable vessel built in France, had arrived in Havana. This vessel had been conditionally sold to Denmark, but not proving satisfactory to that Government, she was purchased by the rebels. Some difficulty in procuring armament and a crew caused a temporary slight embarrassment in her movements, but she was soon met by the English steamer City of Richmond off the coast of France, and her armament, which was made in England, with supplies for a cruise and an English crew, were transferred to the Stonewall. She remained for a short time at Ferrol, where she was watched by the Niagara and Sacramento; and leaving that place, she did not reach Havana until after the downfall of the rebel organization. Like other rebel cruisers which had plundered our commerce, the Stonewall was without a port.

Acting Rear Admiral Godon, who had received orders to command on the Brazil station, and was on the point of sailing, was directed to proceed immediately, with a force hastily collected and placed under his command, in search of the Stonewall, which, it was understood, designed to appear on our coast. He sailed from Hampton Roads on the 16th of May, and arrived off Havana on the 28th, having in his command the Susquehanna, Chippewa, Monticello, Fahkee, and two turreted vessels, the Monadnock and Canonicus. Shortly after his arrival, the Stonewall was delivered over to the Spanish authorities by her commander, and our Government was advised that Spain would place her at the disposal of the United States. It being unnecessary for Acting Rear Admiral Godon to remain longer on this special duty, he left Havana June 6, returned to Hampton Roads on the 12th, and on the 21st proceeded, in pursuance to previous orders, to Brazil.

The English screw-steamer Sea King, built in Glasgow in 1863, early attracted the attention of our officials in England as one of the class of rovers which, like the Alabama, Florida, and Georgia, was destined to prey on American commerce. But the English authorities professed to be incapable of detecting anything wrong in this vessel, and she finally sailed from London on the 8th of October, 1864, with clearance for Bombay. On the following day the steamer Laurel sailed from Liverpool, with officers, men, and guns, and went to Madeira. The Sea King soon appeared off Madeira and signaled to the Laurel, when the two vessels went to a barren island in the vicinity, and on the 17th of October a transfer of officers, men, and guns took place; the name of the pirate was changed, and thenceforward became known as the Shenandoah. J. I. Waddell, a renegade American officer, assumed the command, and proceeded at once on a piratical cruise.

An official communication on the 18th of

SENATE &amp; HO. OF REPS.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

39TH CONG....1ST SESS.

October informed the Department that the crew of the Sea King, as well as that of the Laurel, were all British subjects, that many of them belonged to the Royal Naval Reserve, and that some forty or fifty of the Alabama's men were among them.

Throughout the whole period of the rebellion these exhibitions of the manner in which the English authorities exercised neutrality were witnessed. On one occasion two persons secreted themselves on the United States steamer Tuscarora, at Queenstown, with a view, it was suspected, of entering our service, and the British Government was on that occasion greatly exercised lest some violation of neutrality or breach of the foreign enlistment act had taken place which would work harm to the rebels. A less anxious solicitude appears to have been entertained of breach of neutrality when whole crews were enlisted for the Shenandoah and other rebel piratical cruisers which sallied forth to plunder American commerce. Before leaving the Atlantic the Shenandoah succeeded in destroying several vessels, and was next heard of in Melbourne, Australia, where she was received and entertained with great hospitality and furnished with ample supplies and repairs for the long cruise upon which she was about to enter. On the 8th of February she is reported to have left Melbourne, and was next heard of in the North Pacific ocean and the sea of Okhotsk, where she attacked and captured twenty-nine unarmed whale ships, of which twenty-five were destroyed and four were bonded. Although notified by some of his victims that the rebel armies had surrendered and that the rebellion was suppressed, Waddell gave no heed to the intelligence, but continued his work of destruction until four months after the fall of Richmond, when he was advised by an English vessel that Lee was on parole and Davis a prisoner.

The English Government, in the exercise of all that neutral tenderness and care which it had manifested for the rebels from the beginning of the insurrection, when finally compelled to admit the extinguishment of the rebellion, made special reservation to protect the rebel piratical cruisers, and particularly the Shenandoah, which was an outlaw, without country or home other than England, after the prostration of the rebel organization. Warned by neutral England, whose subjects constituted almost her entire crew, that the organized insurrection was annihilated, the Shenandoah had no alternative but to seek again the shelter and protection of that neutral Power where she was built, and from which she was armed and manned. Under the name of Sea King she had cleared and sailed as an English vessel, with an English flag and an English crew, and as late as February she stood on the books at the Register's office of British shipping in her original name, and in the name of her original owners. Such may have been the case when the pirate was warned that he had not the pretext of a rebel organization to soften his crime, and that he was an outlaw. Of all her captures not one was ever sent in for adjudication, and I am not aware that she ever entered the port of any country but England. It was fitting, therefore, that she should return for refuge to the country of her origin.

The Sea King, alias the Shenandoah, entered the Mersey on the 6th of November, and her pirate captain, in a formal letter to the English minister, surrendered the vessel to the English Government.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE NAVY-YARDS.

Our navy-yards are, all of them, of limited area, and wholly insufficient for our present Navy. Not one of them presents the full requisite conveniences and facilities for promptly fitting out in a rapid and efficient manner more than a single vessel at a time. Vessels which ought to be repaired in three months are often detained for a year, and officers ordered to their ships, which should be ready for sea, have been kept waiting for months, at great expense to themselves and to the country, and to the injury of the service. There is not a public yard where an iron vessel can be constructed, an iron plate made, or whereshafting can be forged, or steam machinery manufactured, except on a moderate scale; nor, with the exception of Mare Island, in California, and Norfolk, have we a navy-yard with sufficient room to erect the necessary works for even present wants. England, besides her great public navy-yards, with which ours can bear no comparison, possesses even several private establishments, in each of which there are more mechanical appliances than are possessed by our whole country. Attention is invited to the interesting and instructive report of Chief Engineer J. W. King upon the dock-yards of England and France, communicated to Congress at its last session.

Any future wars in which we may be involved must be of a maritime character; and unless we make in due season adequate preparations, requiring no inconsiderable expenditure and time for their completion, the country will not escape mortification and reverses and serious disasters.

The most formidable iron-clads are those of the class of the Passaconaway. The turrets of these vessels, which are fifteen inches in thickness, and the machinery, which is of a power to drive them eleven knots an hour, is plain and of moderate size, and yet they cannot be constructed and sent to sea in three years. So it is of all work out of that ordinary routine for which our establishments, public and private, are exclusively designed. The immediate, indispensable, and truly economical remedy for all this disadvantage is to enlarge the navy-yards at Boston and New York, to complete the yard at Mare Island, on the Pacific, rebuild those of Norfolk and Pensacola, and sell the present restricted grounds at Philadelphia after establishing a yard of sufficient capacity at League Island, or some other proper location on the Delaware. With these extensions and improvements, and a proper establishment at some point upon the western waters, our naval position will be so strengthened as to constitute an additional safeguard against expense, and perhaps war.

I have omitted any recommendation in regard to the yard at Kittery, because there are serious objections to it as a naval station, on account of its proximity to the ocean, which renders public property there insecure. Should, it however, be decided to improve the station as a public ship-yard, the acquisition of Seavy's Island, as recommended by the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, should be carried into effect. But the value of the island has been recently greatly enhanced and its acquisition rendered difficult in consequence of a road which passes through the yard, and a bridge connecting the island with the yard, which has been, in my opinion without due consideration, authorized by Congress. If the yard itself is not to be abandoned, the road and bridge should, in justice to the public interest, be discontinued, and Seavy's Island secured.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL VESSELS.

At the beginning of the rebellion the Department was without appropriate vessels for chase or blockade. Steamers of the Colorado class could enter no harbor south of Hampton Roads but Port Royal, and even those of the Hartford class could enter but few of the blockaded ports.

All the vessels constructed before the war possessed only moderate steam power, but had nearly full sailing qualities. Had the Department expended its energies at the commencement in efforts to construct vessels of magnitude for war purposes, with machinery capable of making fifteen knots per hour, as has been earnestly urged, we could scarcely have completed one such vessel before the date of the fall of Wilmington. The Department, without attempting impossibilities, directed its energies to accomplish what was practicable.

After procuring a supply of vessels for the blockade, by purchase and construction, the next pressing want was an iron-clad or armored ship, capable of operating in our waters and going in all weathers from port to port. On a public appeal to the mechanical ingenuity of our countrymen, this want was supplied by the Monitor, a turreted vessel, which, as soon as completed, vindicated its capability, and the model thus projected has been adopted and extensively copied abroad. This class of vessels stands as the undoubted and acknowledged best defense of our shores against any naval armament at present in existence. Different types of turreted vessels, all of them improvements in some respects on the original model, have been constructed. Several of the light-draft vessels of this class, drawing but eight feet of water, completed since the adjournment of Congress, have gone from Boston and other points to Philadelphia and Hampton Roads; and one has made a voyage to Charleston, South Carolina, where she is stationed, and performs with entire satisfaction all the duties required of her.

The double-enders, vessels originating in the peculiar necessities of this war—designed to run head or stern first—were intended for operations in the rivers, bayous, and inner waters that pervade our southern coast, where it was important to avoid the difficulty, delay, and risk of turning round in narrow channels or under fire.

When these arrangements had been made, and the vessels immediately required were well under way, so as not to be interfered with or delayed by additional work, the Department commenced the construction of a superior class of steamers of size and power sufficient to insure high speed. The most forward of these vessels could not be at sea until 1866. The delays and embarrassments which have been experienced demonstrate the importance, if not absolute necessity, of enlarging our principal yards, and the need of a suitable establishment for the construction of engines and heavy iron-work, such as the Department for three years has steadily urged upon the consideration of Congress.

FACILITIES FOR REPAIRING NAVAL VESSELS.

The naval expenditures, which have been moderate for the work performed, are larger than they would otherwise have been, in consequence of the insufficient means and limited area of the several navy-yards. Without further provision in these respects the Government must always depend, in a great degree, on private establishments for much of its work. This is not objectionable, perhaps, in the construction of new hulls and engines. The experience of the last four years has taught us the value and importance of efficient and reliable private establishments to aid the Government in a great emergency. The promptness and energy exhibited at some of these establishments have been wonderful and of invaluable service. Until summoned to assist the Government in the great struggle that was upon us, the ability, power, and resources of these private establishments were not known or appreciated. They generally responded with zeal and vigor to the calls of the Department, and their ability will, in all future wars, give reliable strength to the country.

In constructing new vessels and machinery, the Government can always have the benefit of wholesome competition at private establishments. In making its contracts for new vessels and supervising their execution, the Department will be able to protect itself, but that cannot be the case as regards the constant and often extensive repairs required on vessels which have been in service. These cannot be made by contract, and opportunities for fraud and imposition in making repairs are so great that too many yield to them. Work is often slighted and imperfectly executed; disastrous delays intervene; sometimes the job will be skillfully nursed by more extended and elaborate repairs than are necessary. The charge for materials and labor must of course be, to a considerable extent, at the discretion of those who make the repairs, and it is not surprising, perhaps, that they have frequently been exorbitant, notwithstanding all the vigilance and efforts that were exercised to protect the Government.

True economy would be promoted were the Government to have the necessary workshops and machinery to execute its own repairs in all cases. Almost all of the machinery and engines for the Navy have been constructed at private establishments, and they must continue to be so constructed until the Government shall conclude to change its policy. In the manufacture of heavy shafting and machinery for our naval vessels, which are to cruise for months, and often for years, abroad, it is important that we should have the most substantial workmanship and the best materials, so that the Government can safely rely on the strength and durability of its naval representatives, however remote from the country, and the officers and crews should be enabled to feel a sense of security, so far as human skill can impart it, in the floating homes which the Government may provide.

A failure in the motive power of a steamer, when on a cruise or far removed from establishments where the necessary repairs can be made, is a calamity against which every precaution should be taken.

LAYING UP OF THE IRON-CLADS.

The iron-clad vessels, so formidable in war, but unsuited for active service in peace, have been laid up, ready to be brought forward at any time for active duty should circumstances require. No provision having been made by Congress for a suitable dock-yard or station in fresh water, where alone iron vessels can remain and be preserved, and there being neither room nor accommodations for them at any of our present contracted yards, the Department was under the necessity, until Congress shall make provision, of selecting a suitable place for the purpose. Fresh water being an indispensable requisite for the preservation of this class of vessels, and an interior location from the sea-board being almost equally indispensable for the purpose of safety, I had no hesitation in selecting League Island as possessing these advantages in an eminent degree. The board of naval and scientific gentlemen appointed in 1862, in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the suggestion of the Department, to select a site for a navy-yard for iron purposes, while entertaining different opinions as to the most eligible location for a navy-yard for general objects, were united in favor of League Island "so far as iron vessels are concerned." There is probably no site to be found in the country presenting so many circumstances in its favor for laying up our iron-clad fleet. Removed from the coast, and with fresh water, League Island combines the advantages of both security and preservation—indispensable requisites for vessels of this description.

Had Congress, three years since, authorized the removal of the navy-yard from its present contracted and wholly insufficient limits in Philadelphia to League Island, as recommended by the Department, other important economic advantages would have been attained. I cannot omit the opportunity of again advising the substitution of that site for the present circumscribed yard at Philadelphia, and securing this location, provided it can be obtained, for the Government. It must be borne in mind that, should Congress neglect to obtain it, the Government will be liable, at any moment, to be dispossessed, and compelled to remove its iron-clad fleet.

On the Mississippi river, where there is as yet no public navy-yard, the station at Mound City is retained, and the iron-clads belonging to the Mississippi squadron have there their headquarters. Several vessels of this class which were built at St. Louis and attached to the West Gulf squadron, where they rendered good service, particularly in the bay of Mobile, have been laid up at Algiers, opposite New Orleans.

In this connection, I would respectfully invite attention to the report of a commission appointed under the joint resolution of Congress in June, 1864, to "select the most suitable site for a navy-yard or naval station on the Mississippi river, or upon one of its tributaries." Without intending to indicate any preference as to location, it is not to be doubted that in future wars the vessels, particularly those of iron, and the machinery and armature of our steamers, will, to some extent, be constructed in the valley of the Mississippi, where the material is so abundant. The experience of the past few years has demonstrated the capabilities of that section in producing naval vessels and machinery with rapidity.

The true policy of the Government with regard to our naval force in time of peace will be to keep our iron-clads laid up in fresh water, in perfect fighting order. Our largest steamships should remain in ordinary, distributed among the principal commercial cities, while there should be a force afloat sufficient to visit annually, if necessary, every navigable port on the globe where our trade exists.

HEALTHINESS OF IRON-CLADS.

Some interesting and extraordinary facts and statistics concerning the comparative healthiness of iron-clads and wooden vessels are given in the report of the chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. The monitor class of vessels, it is well known, have but a few inches of their hulls above the water-line, and in a heavy sea are entirely submerged. It has long been doubted whether, under such circumstances, it would be possible long to preserve the health of the men on board, and consequently to maintain the fighting material in a condition for effective service. It is gratifying, therefore, to know that an examination of the sick-reports, covering a period of over thirty months, shows that so far from being unhealthy, there was less sickness on board the monitor vessels than on the same number of wooden ships with an equal number of men, and in similarly exposed positions. The exemption from sickness upon the iron-clads in some instances is remarkable. There were on board the Saugus, from November 25, 1864, to April 1, 1865, a period of over four months, but four cases of sickness, (excluding accidental injuries,) and of these, two were diseases with which the patients had suffered for years. On the Montauk, for a period of one hundred and sixty-five days prior to the 29th of May, 1865, there was but one case of disease on board. Other vessels exhibit equally remarkable results, and the conclusion is reached that no wooden vessels in any squadron throughout the world can show an equal immunity from disease. The facts and tables presented are worthy of careful study.

NAVAL ACADEMY.

The number of midshipmen at the Naval Academy is 451. The present method of selecting candidates is, in many respects, objectionable. Of the enlisted boys, those who from choice betake themselves to the seas, and are nurtured in the Navy, only three are permitted annually to go to the Academy. Few of the multitude of boys who have inclination and aptitude for the naval service can obtain the important advantage of a public education. Of those who annually present themselves under the present system, one fifth fail to pass a satisfactory physical or mental examination. The same defects are more strikingly developed after admission. Nearly thirty-three per cent. fail the first year, and finally only about twenty-five per cent. of those who enter the Academy graduate. In consequence of this state of things, the great wants of the service in the junior grades of officers have been poorly supplied, for the Academy has only graduated a class averaging yearly about twenty-five members. A large portion of the money appropriated for a naval education is thus wasted chiefly in consequence of the defective system of selecting the candidates.

The Board of Visitors, in 1864, instituted some searching inquiries to ascertain whether the requirements for entering the Academy were of too rigid a character, and became fully convinced that the failures were not attributable to that cause, but that many of the boys had neither the mental nor physical qualities to fit them for the naval service.

Competitive examination in each of the congressional districts, which shall be open to all boys, under proper regulations, has been suggested as a remedy. Such examination would probably establish the mental proficiency of the candidate, which, however, might be the result of premature development. The less accomplished scholar, whose powers may not be fully developed, might, nevertheless, possess a mental and physical organization better adapted to the service, which would make him a more eligible pupil and a better naval officer.

The Government should have in training for its naval officers boys of good mental capacity and the best physical development. These are not obtained under the present system. I have elsewhere suggested the expediency of appointing one half of the midshipmen from the enlisted apprentices, and the remainder from congressional districts, the selection to be made from those who possess both the physical and mental qualities that fit them for the position.

In dispensing with vessels propelled wholly by sails from the list of regular men-of-war, it has become necessary to instruct the future naval officer in the principles and practice of steam-engineery. A separate department, having this object in view, has been established at the Naval Academy, under the management and direction of Chief Engineer William W. Wood, assisted by eight others, who are charged with the duty of teaching the midshipmen, not only the theory of the steam-engine, but, as indicated in my last report, its actual manipulation. Sufficient experiments and progress have already been made in running the engines of the vessels attached to the Academy by the midshipmen to warrant the Department to persevere in its purpose of perfecting the education of the future line officers, by making them competent, in addition to their other requirements, to manage and work the engine.

The management of a man-of-war in a gale, on a lee shore, in a narrow harbor, or the splendid maneuvers of battle by sailing vessels, have hitherto been the highest and proudest duties of a thorough naval officer. The skillful disposition of the sails, which was the result of the best training of the old school, is no longer necessary, except as auxiliary to the new motive power which modern invention and science have introduced. The naval vessel is no longer dependent on the winds, nor is she at the mercy of currents; but the motive power which propels and controls her movements is subject to the mind and will of her commander, provided he is master of his profession in the future, as he has been in the past. To retain the prominence which skill and education gave him when seamanship was the most important accomplishment, the line officer must be qualified to guide and direct this new element or power. Unless he has these qualities, he will be dependent on the knowledge and skill of him who manipulates and directs the engine. To confine himself to seamanship, without the ability to manage the steam-engine, will result in his taking a secondary position, as compared with that which the accomplished naval officer formerly occupied.

For the full development and accomplishment of an object which can no longer be considered a doubtful experiment, the active co-operation of naval officers is required. When this change is effected, engineers will become the designers and constructors of engines and other marine works, and the superintendents of the mechanical employment which a navy propelled by steam has developed and may require. They will constitute, in reality, a highly educated and scientific corps, and the line officers will have added to their duties the practical management of the engines.

LOCATION OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

The Naval Academy, which at the beginning of the rebellion was removed to Newport, Rhode Island, was, in conformity with the act of Congress, retransferred to Annapolis in September last. Commodore Blake, who was Superintendent in 1861, continued in charge of the School so long as it remained at Newport.

On the return of the School to Annapolis, Rear Admiral Porter was appointed Superintendent, and, under his immediate supervision, the academic buildings and grounds, which had been seriously impaired while occupied for military purposes, were prepared and made ready for the reception of the midshipmen and academic staff.

Many inconveniences attended the temporary sojourn at Newport; yet when the uncertain and unsettled state of affairs is taken into consideration, the selection of that place for the purpose required was perhaps fortunate.

The academic grounds belonging to the Government at Annapolis include only twenty-one acres, and are wholly insufficient for the School. Their situation in the heart of a city also subjects the youths to temptations, from which, at that period of life, it is desirable they should be removed. When the School was originally established at Fort Severn, the inconveniences and objections that now present themselves may not have been experienced; but, in the present and prospective condition of our naval power, the idea of permanently establishing a national institution of this character on these restricted grounds, where large expenditures must be made in public edifices and buildings and various improvements, cannot be seriously entertained by any who shall give the subject candid and deliberate consideration. There are over thirteen hundred acres connected with the Military Academy at West Point, and there should not be a less area for the Naval School.

In order that there may be suitable and appropriate accommodations at the Academy, much is to be done and a large expenditure of money is to be made. The School was originally designed for one hundred and eighty midshipmen, with the necessary officers, professors, and instructors; but the number has been increased, until there are now authorized by law five hundred and sixty-six midshipmen, with a corresponding increase of the academic staff. There are but ninety-six rooms in the present quarters of the midshipmen, and each room is intended for two occupants. The buildings are defective in many respects, and were originally hastily and imperfectly constructed.

Commodore Blake, the late intelligent Superintendent, in a carefully prepared statement, estimates the cost of the buildings and improvements which will be required at Annapolis, in order to make the institution acceptable and worthy of the country, at $800,000. I do not question that this amount, and even a much larger sum, must be ultimately appropriated for the Academy; but it cannot be considered wise or expedient to make this investment within the narrow and confined area which the Government possesses at Annapolis. No amount of money which Congress may expend in buildings and improvements at that location will be satisfactory, and at no distant day a different and better site will be procured. This should not be delayed. True economy and the best interests of the Government prompt an immediate selection of the best position that can be obtained before any greater expense shall have been incurred in large and costly edifices and other substantial improvements.

The importance of procuring at the beginning, and before making further outlay, the best attainable location for the Academy, is worthy the serious attention of Congress.

There are several places on the shores of Chesapeake bay where ample grounds can be procured at moderate rates—places which combine all the required advantages, and which are relieved from the serious and insurmountable difficulties which attach to the present location. The Government can there possess itself of ample area, not only for permanent structures, but for such other arrangements as a national Naval Academy may require, which will be alike creditable and useful to the country, an honor to the Government, and as enduring as the Union itself. Instead of expending more money in attempts to improve the limited grounds now occupied, I would recommend a new site, one that shall embrace, if possible, an area of at least two thousand acres; which shall not be in the immediate neighborhood of any city, with its temptations; which shall have the requisites of healthfulness, accessibility, ample water front, and space for managing vessels and fleets of boats; good anchorage, with sufficient depth of water, and such proximity to the ocean as circumstances permit, yet inside the lines of permanent defense.

The views of Congress and of the country indicate, wisely in my opinion, a preference for this latitude, where a winter climate will allow out-door exercise on board school-ships aloft, boat-sailing, maneuvering vessels, and other nautical instruction, as a proper location for a Naval Academy. Some necessary preliminary inquiries have already been instituted with a view of ascertaining the most eligible locations on the Chesapeake, the result of which is that there are several sites which are in all essential respects preferable to that of Annapolis, and where ample grounds can be procured. I would therefore recommend that the Department be authorized to secure as soon as possible the refusal, at a reasonable price, of one or more eligible sites for a Naval Academy, embracing an area of not less than two thousand acres.

PAY IN NAVY-YARDS.

In order to regulate the pay of workmen in the public service, always a difficult matter of adjustment, the laws of December 21, 1861, and of July 16, 1862, were enacted, directing that "the hours of labor and the rate of wages of the employés in the navy-yards shall conform, as nearly as is consistent with the public interest, with those of private establishments in the immediate vicinity of the respective yards, to be determined by the commandants of the navy-yards, subject to the approval and revision of the Secretary of the Navy."

The operation of the rule thus sought to be established has been satisfactory neither to the men employed nor to the Government, but, on the contrary, an unceasing source of disturbance and discontent. Committees have been appointed bimonthly at each of the yards to ascertain the rates of wages paid to similar classes of workmen in private establishments, but it has been found difficult to obtain reliable data on this subject. Some parties decline to furnish the information sought, while others give imperfect statements. When, after inquiry and investigation, a scale is adopted, having in view the interests and rights of both the Government and the laborers, there is dissatisfaction, especially if in the fluctuation of the currency, or of supply and demand, there has been a reduction, and the workmen, by visiting the different private establishments, are enabled to procure from some of them certificates that higher wages are paid in some instances than the rates adopted at the yard. These certificates do not state the number or proportion of men employed at these high rates, or whether these prices are paid to all of that class in such establishment. If, on inquiry, it is ascertained that only one or two men of unusual capability receive these high prices, and that those authorized by the Government are fair average rates, the explanation fails to give satisfaction, for the evidence is produced that higher wages than those on the Government scale are paid in private establishments in the vicinity. The impression that there is some unfairness is engendered, complaints and strikes follow or are threatened, vigilant officers who are faithful to the Government become obnoxious, and discontent prevails. I would, therefore, recommend that the acts referred to be repealed.

NAVY-YARD ABUSES, ETC.

The lessons of experience will have been lost as regards the labor employed in the construction of our public ships, and the teachings of this war in a great measure thrown away, should we fail to make thorough and essential changes in the organization and management of our navy-yards. There has been undoubtedly a defective administration of the yards, and a want of proper responsibility pervades the whole system. Much that is wrong has its origin, without doubt, in the partisan character which has been fostered for years in those establishments, where thousands of workmen are employed. Men are often pressed for positions in the navy-yards, not so much for their mechanical skill, industry, and fidelity to the public service, as for supposed or anticipated partisan services in behalf of some active politician or party. Having obtained positions through such influences, the appointees themselves, in the selection of workmen, are governed by similar considerations. The navy-yards, by these means, became crowded with political partisans, many of whom, I apprehend, were not skillful mechanics, to the detriment of the public interests. When elections approach, a system of assessments appear to have been applied, by which the workmen were taxed by irresponsible committee-men for alleged party purposes. Thus the supervising officers took upon themselves, or had imposed upon them, the duty of tax-gatherers for electioneering objects. I understand that the amounts thus collected in navy-yards and elsewhere from Government officers and workmen have been large. How the money thus collected was applied or disposed of is uncertain, for it was without accountability. This evil has been confined to no party. I have, on its being brought in an authentic form to my notice, issued, under your direction, orders to prevent these party assessments and collections in the navy-yards. I have also introduced other regulations intended to check existing abuses. Whether legal prohibitions ought not to be instituted to prevent an evil so demoralizing and baneful is submitted for consideration.

A very considerable reduction in the number of master-workmen has been made, and changes have been introduced in regard to others which will, I am confident, have a salutary influence. Hereafter the several candidates for the position of master will be examined, and the appointments made without regard to locality.

Some improvements in the system of accounts have also been introduced, and will be still further extended.

NAVY AGENTS.

The system of supplying the navy-yards under what is called "open purchase," by Navy agents has been discontinued, and paymasters have been ordered hereafter to make these purchases. The office of Navy agent was superfluous, and had become worse than useless. The system of purchasing on a percentage, limited in the amount which the agent should receive, led to corruption and abuse, which enriched those who chose to participate in such practices, demoralized those who held the office of Navy agent, tended to corrupt the subordinates in the navy-yards and those who furnished articles under these purchases, discouraged and drove away honest dealers, and finally led to attempts to cover the tracks of guilt by technicalities of law, which may perhaps arrest the arm of justice, but cannot suppress the righteous judgment of an honest public opinion.

To open to the light abuses sanctioned by time, and concealed and protected by those who have profited and obtained wealth and influence through hidden mal-practices, is often a difficult as well as an ungracious task; but no officer who faithfully discharges his duty can be aware of misdeemeanors or crimes of this character, and fail to expose or not strive to correct them.

The most efficient remedy for this state of things within the power of the Department has been applied in the transfer of the few remaining agencies to paymasters who receive no percentage but perform their duties under the responsibility of their commissions, and may be subject to court-martial for delinquency, or summarily removed to other duty when the public interest may require it.

MILITARY AND NAVAL ASYLUM.

The act of March 3, 1865, "to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of the totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States," should it ever go into effect, will be likely to operate injuriously to the naval service. It is not desirable that a military and naval asylum should be blended in one establishment. The tastes, pursuits, characteristics, and habits of the sailor and the soldier are so dissimilar that they will scarcely be made to harmonize, especially when age and infirmity are upon them. The experience and practice of all Governments admonish us that the asylums or homes for these two classes should be separate and distinct. The soldier would be satisfied with a location in the interior, but the sailor would wish to spend his declining years in view of the ocean and on its shores.

It would be better that the Army and Navy should each have its own asylum, and it is respectfully recommended that whatever funds may remain in the Treasury from fines or other causes specified in the fifth section of the act referred to, shall be set apart, not for one asylum, but for the two branches of the service. I would recommend that all fines, forfeitures, &c., derived from naval officers or seamen may inure to the benefit of the men of the Navy, irrespective of the asylum indicated in the act of last March, which is more appropriately adapted to the Army.

HOME FOR SAILORS.

At a period when the hearts of the people are filled with gratitude to our sailors for the services which they have rendered, the opportunity is fitting to propose, not only further provision for the disabled of the past, but also to provide against the casualties of the future. A home for sailors exclusively, with arrangements for such of them as have families, would, if practicable, be most satisfactory, doubtless, to this deserving, loyal, and heroic class.

If Congress shall sanction the removal of the Naval Academy to some more ample and suitable location, the grounds and buildings at Annapolis could, with but slight additional expense, be converted into a home for the sailors. For health, salubrity of climate, and vicinity to the water, the location is all that could be desired for such a purpose. While this measure would provide for those who may be disabled in the line of their duty, the Naval Asylum at Philadelphia will continue to receive the aged and infirm, who, through a long and faithful career, have earned a title to the home which receives them.

EDUCATING SEAMEN.

The man-of-war's man of the present day has all the noble and generous qualities of the sailor of former times, and has neither deteriorated in courage, in ability or skill in handling his guns, nor in devotion to his flag. He is not the seaman he was before the introduction of steam, but his qualities are of as high an order; and since the lash and intoxicating drinks have been expelled from the service, the morale and discipline of the man-of-war of these days is an improvement on the past.

In order that the progress of the age may enlighten the path of the sailor, it is important that a thorough system of enlisting and instructing apprentices should be put in operation. The Government desires to obtain a sufficient number of the best boys in the country for apprentices, and to effect this the service must be made attractive. The assurance that a certain number of apprentices who are most capable and most deserving will be promoted annually would be found a strong incentive and inducement. Parents will be disposed to place only unmanageable boys in a service which subjects them to the life of a sailor and holds out no prospect of promotion. We shall struggle in vain to elevate or greatly ameliorate the future of the sailor, so long as the enlisted person is proscribed from advancement, and denied all hope of ever becoming a commissioned officer in the Navy.

There are now by law two appointments of midshipmen at the Naval Academy from each congressional district. It is recommended that hereafter there shall be but one appointed under the present system from each district, and that the other shall be taken from among the naval apprentices who have served two years on board of a practice-ship. The records of the two years' service will show which of the naval apprentices are most proficient, and the most deserving will have earned the privilege of being transferred to the Naval Academy, to be educated at the public expense for the higher duties of the profession.

The youths thus selected will be the most meritorious among several thousand, and a few years' experience will determine whether those thus selected are superior or inferior to those appointed from the districts under the present system.

The fact that the higher grades in the Navy will be open to enlisted boys, under a system which will elevate the most worthy to be commissioned or warrant officers, will attract to the Navy an abundance of the best boys who have aptitude for sea service.

This system will do away with improper favoritism which tends to demoralization, and recognizes the right of the enlisted apprentice to reach the highest honor, provided he proves himself worthy.

PROPERTY CAPTURED AND DESTROYED.

Naval men, while animated with the noblest feelings of patriotism, and ready to sacrifice their lives for their country whose integrity was imperiled, were impressed at first with the conviction that to them, professionally, the war would offer but limited opportunity, for the rebels were not a commercial people, nor addicted to maritime pursuits. No naval conflicts were anticipated, and it was supposed very few captures would be made, but the efforts of the insurgents, cut off from foreign supplies, and the attempts of unscrupulous foreign adventurers to violate the blockade, have rewarded naval vigilance and fidelity with a large number of prizes, many of them of great value. It is a gratifying circumstance that these prize captures have inured to the benefit of the naval service instead of privateers—differing in this respect from previous wars.

The number of vessels captured and sent to the courts for adjudication from May 1, 1861, to the close of the rebellion, is 1,151, of which there were: steamers, 210; schooners, 569; sloops, 139; ships, 13; brigs and brigantines, 29; barks, 25; yachts, 2; small boats, 139; rebel rams and iron-clads, 6; rebel gunboats, torpedo boats, and armed schooners and sloops, 10; class unknown, 7—making a total of 1,149. The numbers of vessels burned, wrecked, sunk, and otherwise destroyed during the same time were: steamers, 85; schooners, 114; sloops, 32; ships, 2; brigs, 2; barks, 4; small boats, 96; rebel rams, 5; rebel iron-clads, 4; rebel gunboats, torpedo boats, and armed schooners and sloops, 11—total, 355; making the whole number of vessels captured and destroyed 1,504. During the war of 1812 the naval vessels, of which there were 301 in service at the close, made but 291 captures. There were 517 commissioned privateers, and their captures numbered 1,428. That war was with a nation having the greatest commerce on the globe. During the recent war we have had no privateers afloat, and the rebels had but a limited commerce from which the prizes of the Navy could be made. Nearly all the captures of value were vessels built in so-called neutral ports, and fitted out and freighted in the ports of a Government with which we had treaties and were on friendly terms, which had publicly pledged itself to a strict neutrality, and manifested its sincerity, so far as we were concerned, by withdrawing hospitality to our national vessels.

The gross proceeds of property captured since the blockade was instituted, and condemned as prize prior to the 1st of November, amount to $21,829,543 98; costs and expenses, $1,616,223 96; net proceeds for distribution, $20,501,927 69. There are a number of important cases still before the courts, which will largely increase these amounts.

The value of the 1,149 captured vessels will not be less than $24,500,000, and of the 355 vessels destroyed at least $7,000,000, making a total valuation of not less than $31,500,000, much of which was British property, engaged in unneutral commerce, and so justly captured and condemned.

NAVAL PENSION FUND.

The naval pension fund, at the present time, amounts to $9,000,000, to which another million of dollars, at least, is to be added on the 1st of January next. There was received in July last, as interest, in currency, the sum of $292,783 69. This fund is wholly derived from the Government's share in the proceeds of captured and condemned prize property; most of it was foreign capital, embarked in foreign bottoms to aid the insurgents. The income from this source will, if rightly husbanded, be ample to meet the requirements of the Government for the payment of naval pensions, without any tax upon the people.

PENSIONS.

On the 1st of November, 1865, the Navy pension roll was as follows:

931 invalids, with annual pensions amounting to.....	$98,357 50
1,006 widows and orphans, annually receiving.....	179,942 60
2,027 persons, receiving the amount of.....	$248,529 50

Being an increase during the year of 418 persons, receiving pensions amounting to $58,870 40.

I again call attention to an unjust discrimination against pensioners who have lost both hands or feet, or both eyes, in the naval service. The act of July 4, 1864, gives increased pensions where such injuries accrue to those in the military service; but as the law is construed not to include persons in the naval service, it is believed that its operation is not what was intended by Congress. There are also several grades of naval officers for whom no provision is made, and it is suggested that the pension act should be revised with a view to include them.

INCREASE OF SALARIES.

The present compensation of our naval officers is insufficient for their support and for those necessary expenses which they are compelled to incur. Only a small portion of the life of a naval officer is spent at home with his family, and not an inconsiderable part of it is passed abroad on foreign stations, where, when in command, he is under the necessity of exercising a liberal hospitality in the interchange of those courtesies which promote friendly feelings and give character to the service and the country.

While giving their time and thoughts, and, if required, their lives to their country, these gallant men should not be harassed with apprehensions that their families are suffering and in want, in consequence of the limited pay which is granted them by their Government. The enhanced prices of the necessaries of life, which are felt by all who are dependent on salaries or a fixed income, have been painfully severe on our naval officers. Their case appeals with force to Congress, and, though always averse to unnecessary and unwise public expenditures, I have felt it my duty to present it for favorable consideration.

SENATE &amp; HO. OF REPS.

Report of the Secretary of the Navy.

39TH CONG... 1ST SESS.

In this connection, I deem it proper also to renew the suggestions made in my last annual report, that, for the reasons then stated, and which still exist, the interest of the Government and the country requires that a more liberal remuneration should be paid to those who are charged with the arduous and important clerical duties of this Department. Their salaries at present do not correspond with those paid for similar services in private establishments, and are not sufficient to secure the right class of men for this work without entailing upon them sacrifices which they ought not to be required to make.

EXPENSES AND ESTIMATES.

The policy of the Department has been to prosecute the war with energy and vigor, and to avoid at all times needless expenditure. In pursuance of this policy, as soon as the war approached its termination, prompt and efficient measures were adopted for reducing the Navy and the naval expenses. The results of these efforts are of a character which will be gratifying to the country, as they are to this Department.

The available resources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, were.....$140,001,125 99
Expenditures during the same time..... 116,781,675 95

Appropriations not wanted, and carried to surplus fund..... 23,309,450 04
900,450 39

Leaving a balance at the commencement of the present fiscal year of..... 22,408,990 65
The appropriations for the current year are..... 119,882,928 75

Making the total available resources from appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866.....$142,291,919 40

This is exclusive of what has been and may be derived from the sale of vessels and other property which the close of the war has enabled the Department to dispose of.

The whole of this large amount will not be needed for disbursement during the year, and several of the bureaus will have balances sufficiently large to cover their expenditures for the succeeding fiscal year. The estimates for the year ending June 30, 1867, are as follows:

Pay of the Navy.....$9,336,638 00
Bounties to discharged seamen..... 800,000 00
Equipment of vessels..... 1,000,000 00
Navy-yards, pay of superintendents, &c. 7,185,536 00
Navigation, Naval Academy, Observatory, &c..... 436,779 00
Surgeons' necessities and hospitals..... 235,750 00
Marine corps..... 1,757,754 50
Contingent and miscellaneous..... 3,200,000 00
Total.....$23,982,457 50

This amount includes the sum of $5,500,000 for the erection of barracks for the accommodation of seamen now quartered on board receiving ships; for the erection of additional dwelling-houses for officers in the several navy-yards, the purchase of land, and other improvements of a permanent character.

The total expenses of this Department, from the 4th of March, 1861, to the 30th of June, 1865, embracing a period of four years and four months, and covering not only the ordinary expenses of the Navy, but such as have arisen in the purchase, construction, and equipment of vessels, and in the maintenance of the large naval force required during the war, were $311,170,960 68—an average annual expenditure of $72,500,990 93. It is gratifying to note that the expenses of this Department since the commencement of the war have been but nine and three tenths per cent. of the expenditures of the Government during the same time.

THE BUREAUS.

During the past year two of the chiefs of the bureaus connected with this Department have died: Captain Percival Drayton, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, an accomplished and patriotic officer, who has been succeeded by Captain Thornton A. Jenkins; and Surgeon William Whelan, chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, whose scientific attainments were widely known and appreciated, who has been succeeded by Surgeon P. J. Horwitz.

You are respectfully referred to the reports of the several chiefs of bureaus, herewith transmitted, for the operations in detail of their respective departments. I can only allude to some of the principal topics suggested.

The chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks calls attention to the necessity for increased accommodations at the navy-yards. Additions to their water-fronts, docks, store houses, &c., are required to meet the demands of the service. In connection with the Kittery yard, the purchase of Scavy's Island is recommended. At the Charlestown yard the purchase of an adjoining wharf and water privilege is advised. In connection with the Brooklyn yard, adjoining ground and water-front, known as the Ruggles property, is urgently needed, and an arrangement has been made under which it can be purchased. The Philadelphia yard has recently been extended, but is wholly insufficient. The Norfolk and Pensacola yards will require large appropriations to place them in a state of efficiency. Works for the increased manufacture of steam machinery are advised, and estimates are submitted for the erection in the yards of houses for the officers and barracks for the seamen now quartered on board receiving ships. A repeal of the law respecting the wages of workmen in navy-yards is recommended.

The chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair states that there are 41 vessels intended for the permanent Navy in various stages of completion, none of which have been launched. The supply of seasoned ship-timber in the navy-yards is exhausted, and it is found difficult to procure some of the requisite pieces for the vessels in process of construction. It is recommended that a surplus of timber be now placed in the yards, with a view to its accumulating and being thoroughly seasoned, to meet any emergency that may hereafter arise, and also that arrangements be made at some suitable place for the construction of iron vessels.

The report of the chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting states that the fuel account of the Navy for the past two years is $11,425,155. Three coal vessels have been captured by the rebels, and 21 coal vessels have, during the past two years, been either lost or destroyed. In view of increasing foreign squadrons, arrangements have been made and are being extended for coal depots abroad. The ropewalk has, during the last year, manufactured 2,204 tons of hemp into cordage. The propriety of establishing a manufactory of wire rope is suggested. The number of seamen enlisted in the Navy from the 4th of March, 1861, to the 1st of May, 1865, was 118,044.

The chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering gives a detailed statement of the number, condition, and progress of the engines now under contract. A board of civilian experts, under the direction of the Department, are making experiments to test the relative efficiency of vertical and horizontal tubular boilers, the effect of different modes of managing fires, different rates of combustion, and all other matters entering into the practical and best methods of generating steam. Experiments are also being made to ascertain the relative economic efficiency of steam with different measures of expansion. The accommodations in the navy-yards for the repair and construction of steam machinery are insufficient for the wants of the service, and additional facilities are urgently required. The chief of the bureau recommends an increase of the pay and position of the Chief Engineer of the Navy. It is not sufficient to induce first-class ability to remain in the service.

The report of the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance calls attention to the large quantities of ordnance and ordnance materials of all kinds which remain on hand, and, with the approval of the Department, recommends a general survey at the several yards and stations, in order that the unserviceable stores may be separated from the serviceable, and disposed of as may be judged best for the interests of the Government. The suggestions made in previous reports for the construction of magazines in the interior, away from our large cities, for the establishment of a gunnery ship, and for a well-organized practice ground, are again presented and urged as measures of paramount necessity. It is also recommended to institute a course of experiments with torpedoes, and establish a corps of operators for future service; and in order to avail ourselves of the results obtained abroad in the manufacture of cannon and small-arms, and their use in naval warfare, that officers of the Navy be detailed to visit Europe from time to time, and witness the experiments made at the foundries and arsenals. The results of the investigation made by a board of ordnance officers into the cause of the failure of the Parrott rifled guns during the naval bombardment of Fort Fisher are appended, and will be found highly interesting.

The chief of the Bureau of Navigation submits the usual reports of the Naval Observatory, Nautical Almanac, and the general administration of his department. Most of the nautical instruments, and many other articles of navigation supplies, turned in from vessels put out of commission since the close of the war, appear to be available for reissue with some repairs and adaptations. Allusion is made to the prospect, apparently improved, of yet being able to dispense with foreign bunting for American flags. The preparation of a "Danger Chart" of the Pacific ocean to facilitate navigation is in progress; and increased attention is recommended to the collection of hydrographic data in that important quarter, toward the construction of new charts and correcting old ones. And the importance of a hydrographic office in this connection, under the direction of the bureau, is strongly urged as a means now wanting of authoritatively promulgating discoveries, &c., in any way affecting the interests of navigation.

The chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing details the measures taken upon the close of the rebellion for promptly reducing the expenses of his department, by discontinuing the purchase of supplies, and the closing of the depots in different sections of the country. The system adopted by the department in supplying the various blockading squadrons during the war with fresh provisions gave great satisfaction to officers and men, and added largely to the sanitary condition of the fleets. To meet the demands of foreign service, store-vessels, which are preferred to store-houses on shore, have been sent to the various headquarters of the squadrons. An increase in the corps of regular paymasters is urgently recommended, and additional accommodations for supplies in connection with, or near to, naval stations are needed.

The chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery presents the usual tables showing the sanitary condition of the Navy. The number of persons under treatment during the year ending 31st December last was 73,555, of whom 1,373 died, and 2,671 were on the sick-list at the close of the year. The total number of deaths from October 1, 1864, to September 30, 1865, was 1,750, being a percentage of about .002 to the whole number of persons in service. The percentage of deaths to the whole number of cases treated is .018, or less than two per cent. During the progress of the war 1,406 persons were killed, 1,638 wounded, and 170 reported missing, making the total number of casualties in the naval service 3,220. But seventy-one persons have availed themselves of the provision of the act of Congress providing artificial limbs. The increased cost of living renders the monthly tax of twenty cents upon the salaries of officers and men inadequate to the support of naval hospitals, and unless some other means are devised, an appropriation by Congress will be required to meet the necessary expenses. A new laboratory building, at a cost of $80,000, is recommended.

The colonel commandant of the Marine corps reports the order and discipline of the corps as alike creditable to officers and men. During the year the strength of the corps has not materially changed. Though now to a considerable extent employed in guard duty on shore, the greater part of the corps have during the year been actively engaged in the operations of the several squadrons bearing their part in the naval operations of the war.

CONCLUSION.

In former reports, rendering an account of the administration of this Department since I entered upon its duties, it has given me pleasure to make known my obligations to the gentlemen who have been associated with me in the conduct of its business. Continued experience has deepened my sense of grateful obligation for their ability, faithfulness, and industry under circumstances which were often not only responsible but embarrassing, and I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to again express my acknowledgment for their support and assistance. In our arduous and vastly extended naval organization and action during the past four eventful years, and especially in the new forms of power which modern inventions have produced, and the new scenes of effort which this unparalleled war has called forth, in which they have been so severely tried and so triumphantly illustrated, an extraordinary opportunity has opened and an unexampled necessity has existed for an administration of the Navy Department at once judicious and efficient.

Under the pressure of such an exigency, I certainly do not claim, and cannot hope, to have always avoided mistakes; but I do sincerely trust that the brilliant and glorious naval record which shines along the line of momentous events during the whole of this period may be accepted as proof that the Department has been faithfully devoted to its duties, and that through its counsels and care the force of our Navy has, in the selection of officers to wield and work it, been and generally to a very fortunate extent confided to the best and fittest hands. In the conduct of our naval operations to put the right man in the right place has been the constant effort of the Department, and the recent history of the Navy bears witness, I think, that the effort has not been unsuccessful nor fruitless. It is my pleasing duty to add that the number of highly meritorious officers, eminent in all the requirements and accomplishments of their profession, which our Navy list presents, has not unfrequently embarrassed the Department in its difficult task of selection.

As peace is being restored among us, the country now puts off the formidable naval armor which it had assumed to vindicate upon a mighty scale that supremacy of the national law which is the very life of our Union. In the details of the policy and the measures by which our naval power is now brought down to the dimensions and distributed to the important operations of a peace establishment, the country will see with relief and gratitude a large and signal reduction of national expenditure. I need hardly say that this great object is kept constantly and carefully in view by this Department.

Such alleviation of the public burdens is the plain dictate of a wise policy. Yet true wisdom directs that this policy of retrenchment in the naval branch of the public service must not be carried too far. It is still wise—the wisest—economy to cherish the Navy, to husband its resources, to invite new supplies of youthful courage and skill to its service, to be amply supplied with all needful facilities and preparations for efficiency, and thus to hold within prompt and easy reach its vast and salutary power for the national defense and self-vindication.

Let the Government still extend in judicious and moderate measure this fostering care to its Navy, and whenever the crisis shall arrive that our national rights or interests are imperiled, we may be assured that the Navy will again vindicate the claim which it has already so signally established to the admiration and gratitude of the country.

GIDEON WELLES,

Secretary of the Navy.

The President.

Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

December 4, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following summary of the operations of the Department of the Interior during the past year, and of the present condition of the diversified and important public interests under its direction.

LANDS.

It appears from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, public lands were disposed of as follows:

Acres sold for cash.....	557,212.53
Acres located with military warrants.....	348,660.00
Acres located with agricultural scrip.....	460,130.27
Acres selected under agricultural college grant.....	808,358.11
Acres approved to the States as swamp lands.....	571,429.24
Acres approved to the States for railroads.....	607,415.39
Acres taken under the homestead law.....	1,160,532.92
	4,513,738.46

During the quarter ending September 30, 1865, the aggregate quantity taken for the same purposes was..... 880,591.13

Making, during five quarters, the total number of acres..... 5,394,329.59

The cash receipts from sales, homestead, and location fees, for the same five quarters, ending September 30, 1865, were $1,088,400 78.

The cash sales for the year ending June 30, 1865, amounted to $748,427 25, an excess of $70,420 04 over the sum received from the same source the previous year.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, 4,161,778 acres of public lands were surveyed. The aggregate quantity of surveyed public lands undisposed of September 30, 1865, was 132,285,035 acres.

Owing to the failure of the appropriation for that purpose at the last session of Congress, no contracts have been made for surveys during the current fiscal year, except where there were unexpended balances from previous years, or where the expense of survey was defrayed by private parties.

The act of September 4, 1841, and the supplemental act of March 3, 1843, confer upon actual settlers, upon certain specified conditions, the right to acquire by preemption surveyed public lands. Since that time the right has been, by various acts, extended to unsurveyed lands, but the period within which the claim must be preferred after settlement differs in the several States and Territories, although proof and payment must be made in all before the day prescribed by proclamation of the President for the sale of the body of lands within which the preemption claimant has settled. In some the claim of settlement must be filed within three months after the return of the approved plat or survey to the local land offices; in others within six months thereafter; in others within three months after the survey has been made in the field; and in some of the newer Territories there is no specific provision on this subject, but all laws of the United States, which are not locally inapplicable, are declared to be in force. The act of June 6, 1862, "establishing a land office in Colorado, and for other purposes," provides that when unsurveyed lands are claimed by preemption, notice of the specified tract claimed shall be filed within six months after the survey has been made in the field, and that on failure to file such notice, or to pay for the tract claimed within twelve months from the filing of such notice, the parties claiming such land shall forfeit all their right therein. This act has been interpreted in some of the local offices as having exclusive application to the Territory of Colorado. This Department has not, upon appeal involving any contested right of preemption, decided whether the terms of the act are not sufficiently broad to make it applicable to all unsurveyed lands to which the preemption settler claims a right. Further legislation is, however, recommended to remove ambiguity and secure harmony in the enforcement of this beneficent policy in all the land States and Territories. No reason is perceived for various and somewhat conflicting laws on this subject in different localities. A few general provisions in regard to unsurveyed lands would suffice. The acts of 1841 and 1843 need no amendment. They regulate the right of preemption to such public lands as have been surveyed prior to the date of settlement.

The homestead law has been in operation since the 1st day of January, 1863. Large bodies of lands have been entered under its provisions. Five years' continued residence is necessary to the perfection of the title of a homestead settler, unless he prefers to purchase the lands at the minimum price, and obtain a patent. It is estimated that from forty to fifty per cent. of persons who have so claimed the privilege of the homestead law will prefer to make payment, and thus secure title before the expiration of the period when it would otherwise vest. The nominal sum paid by the homestead settler, and the fee which he pays to the local officers, are sufficient to cover the expense incident to the survey and the disposal of the land.

In the enactment of this law Congress was doubtless influenced by the conviction that the settlement and cultivation of the public lands were objects of greater importance to the nation than the increased revenue that might be derived from their sale; and future experience will, it is not doubted, attest the wisdom as well as the beneficence of this legislation.

I approve of the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that the law should prescribe a time within which an appeal should be taken from the decision of the local officers to the General Land Office, and from the latter to the Department.

It is a matter of the utmost importance to the settlers in Arizona and New Mexico that early provision should be made by law for the adjustment of Spanish and Mexican titles arising under existing treaties with the republic of Mexico. As the determination of disputed titles involves questions essentially judicial in their character, it seems to be proper that the tribunals of the United States should be charged with the performance of this duty, in conformity with legislative precedents in regard to claims in Louisiana and other States. A period should be prescribed for prosecuting a claim of title, and the decree of the court should determine not only the validity of the title, but also all incidental questions relating to the limits of the land claimed, which could not be properly determined by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in its survey and location on the earth's surface. In regard to cases heretofore confirmed, the confirmee should be required to have surveys made at his own expense, under the surveyor general, subject to the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the ultimate control of this Department; and where such claims are of loose and undefined extent, some limitation as to quantity should be imposed by law.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has held that the United States, as the successor of Mexico, has the exclusive and paramount right to all such sites as may be indispensable for forts or other public uses, and this right will be enforced unless Congress shall otherwise order.

Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

39TH CONG....1ST SESS.

The organization of a Bureau of Mining was recommended in the last annual report of this Department, and the attention of Congress is again invited to the subject. All lands denominated mineral, which do not bear the precious metals, should be brought into market, and thus placed under the guardianship of private owners. In no other mode, it is believed, can the great forests of timber, the growth of centuries, and of vast value to the nation, be effectually preserved from waste. Individual proprietorship, it is conceded, would stimulate the development of coal-fields, petroleum, deposits of iron, lead, and of other gross metals and mineral formations. There can, therefore, be no sufficient reason for withholding such mineral lands from market. Congress has not legislated with a view to securing an income from the product of the precious metals from the public domain. It is estimated that two or three hundred thousand able-bodied men are engaged in such mining operations on the public lands without authority of law, who pay nothing to the Government for the privilege, or for the permanent possession of property worth, in many instances, millions to the claimant.

The existing financial condition of the nation obviously requires that all our national resources, and the product of every industrial pursuit should contribute to the payment of the national debt. The wisdom of Congress must decide whether the public interest would be better promoted by a sale in fee of those mineral lands, or by raising a revenue from their annual product. The impolicy of suffering them to remain in their present condition, without any species of legislation regulating or defining the rights of the parties in interest, must be apparent to all.

There are other questions of interest connected with the public lands, upon which I cannot dwell without extending this paper beyond allowable limits. For further details I refer to the excellent report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It contains interesting statistics and maps, and also presents practical views which merit favorable consideration.

PENSIONS.

The act of February 27, 1865, made an annual allowance of $300 for life to each of the five survivors of the Army of the Revolution. Four of these aged and venerable men lived to receive this token of the nation's gratitude. Two of them have since died. William Hutchings, of Penobscot, Hancock county, Maine, aged one hundred and one years, and Samuel Cook, of Clarendon, Orleans county, New York, aged ninety-nine years, are the only persons among the living known to the Department, who participated in the heroic struggle which achieved our national independence.

The names of 1,115 widows of revolutionary soldiers are inscribed on the pension rolls.

The right to a pension was confined, by the act of July 4, 1836, to those whose marriage with the deceased soldier took place before the close of his military service. It was subsequently extended, by the act of February 21, 1848, to those whose marriage took place prior to January 1, 1794, and by the act of July 29, 1848, to such as were married prior, and by the act of February 3, 1853, to those who were married subsequent, to January 1, 1800. Under the first-named law, there are four surviving claimants, under the second, one hundred and eight; under the third, seventy; and under the fourth, eight hundred and eighty, to five of whom pensions were allowed during the last fiscal year. The remaining widows of revolutionary soldiers receive their pension under special acts of Congress.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, the names of 14,962 Army invalid pensioners were, on the original application, added to the roll, and the number to whom the pension there-before awarded was increased amounted to 366. The whole number admitted was 15,328, requiring an annual payment of $1,220,785 90.

The aggregate number of claims of widows, or other dependent relatives of soldiers of the Army, (except revolutionary,) allowed during the same period, was 24,693; and the number of pensions of this class which were increased during the same period was 14, making a total of 24,707, and constituting an annual charge of $2,574,179.

There was paid during the same year to Army invalids, revolutionary soldiers, widows, and other dependent relatives, including arrearages of pensions and expenses properly chargeable to the appropriation for revolutionary pensions, the sum of $8,319,672 49. The total number of Army pensioners on the rolls at the close of the year ending June 30, 1865, was 84,130, requiring for the payment thereof, exclusive of expenses, an annual appropriation of $7,792,772 51.

The number of Navy invalid pensions allowed on original applications during that fiscal year was 250, and there were 7 Navy invalids whose pensions were increased. Two hundred and sixty-six Navy pensions were awarded to widows or other dependent relatives of deceased officers, seamen, or marines. The aggregate amount paid to naval pensioners of all classes was $205,480 62. At the close of the fiscal year there were on the Navy pension rolls 839 invalids, the amount of whose pensions was $61,854 92, and 1,017 widows and other dependent relatives, requiring the sum of $168,818. The total number of Navy pensioners at that date was 1,856, whose annual stipends amount to $230,672 92. The total amount, therefore, required for the payment of pensions of all classes adjudicated and allowed up to the close of the last fiscal year, or conferred by special acts of Congress, is, exclusive of expenses, $8,023,445 43.

The Navy pension fund, which had accumulated under the act of April 22, 1800, was exhausted many years since; and Congress, by the act of July 17, 1862, declared that all moneys accruing, or which had already accrued, to the United States from the sale of prizes should be, and remain forever, a fund for the payment of pensions to the officers, seamen, and marines who might be entitled to receive the same. If the fund should be insufficient for this purpose, the public faith was thereby pledged to make up the deficiency; if it should be more than sufficient, the surplus was to be applied for the making of further provision for the comfort of the officers, seamen, and marines. The act of July 1, 1864, provides for the investment in the registered securities of the United States of so much of the fund as is not required for the payment of naval pensions, that is, such pensions as by law are chargeable thereto. When the interest payable in coin upon such securities is collected, it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to exchange the amount of such interest for so much of the legal currency of the United States as may be obtained therefor at the current rate of premium on gold. The interest, so converted, is to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the fund. The latter is made applicable, by the act of 1862, to the payment of the pensions of disabled officers, seamen, and marines, but not of the widows and other dependent relatives of such as have died of wounds received, or of disease contracted, in the service. The fund invested in gold-bearing registered bonds of the United States amounts to $9,000,000, and there is on hand, subject to investment, or use if required, the sum of $1,395,114 21. The annual interest upon the invested fund, if payable in paper currency, exceeds by one hundred per cent. the amount required for the payment of all naval pensions authorized by existing laws. No necessity exists, nor is any likely ever to occur, for the large and constantly increasing accumulation of this fund; but further legislative action is necessary to subject it to the payment of all classes of Navy pensions.

Pension agencies were suspended in those parts of the country where the national authority was resisted and loyal State governments subverted during the rebellion. Pursuant to your orders such agencies are being resumed whenever required for the accommodation of restored pensioners, or of such as have been recently added to the rolls. Agents have been appointed at Richmond, Virginia; Nashville and Knoxville, Tennessee; Little Rock, Arkansas; and New Orleans, Louisiana. The act of February 4, 1862, prohibited the payment of a pension to any one who had taken, or might thereafter take, arms against the Government of the United States, "or who had in any manner encouraged the rebels or manifested a sympathy with their cause." Most of the acts, making appropriations for pensions within the last four years, contain a proviso that no portion of the money shall be paid to a disloyal person. The names of all pensioners residing during the rebellion in the parts of the country to which I have adverted, as well as a large number of disloyal pensioners residing in other parts of the Union, have been dropped from the rolls. All those of the former class forfeited their pensions from the date of the proclamation declaring the State in which they respectively resided to be in rebellion. Such of them as claim the benefit of the pension laws and a restoration to the rolls are required to make application, supported by due proof, in accordance with forms and instructions adopted for the adjudication of these special cases, and to take and subscribe the oath prescribed in your amnesty proclamation. The right to a pension inures and takes effect from the date of the completion of the proof establishing the right to such restoration.

The regulations governing the production of proof and the decision of cases in the Pension Bureau, were prepared by the Commissioner and approved by this Department. The rigid enforcement of them has been the subject of occasional complaint; but while it may work hardship in a few exceptional cases, it is, in my judgment, indispensable to the prevention of abuses and the rejection of unfounded and fraudulent demands. Every facility is extended for the presentation and establishment of claims, and they are determined with all the promptitude consistent with a due investigation of their merits.

The increasing number of pension applications requires that the appropriation for the next should largely exceed that made for the current fiscal year. Without regard to the amount they involve, our engagements to our gallant Army and Navy must be performed with scrupulous fidelity. Their sacrifices for an imperiled country have been blessed in the preservation of its unity, the maintenance of the just authority of the national Government, and the vindication of the principles of civil liberty which the fathers of the Republic bequeathed to their children.

For further information relating to this branch of the service, I respectfully refer to the able and elaborate report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The number of Indians residing within the jurisdiction of the United States does not probably exceed three hundred and fifty thousand, a large majority of whom maintained during the past year peaceful relations. Some of them have made gratifying progress in civilization, and manifested, during the late war, a steadfast loyalty to our flag worthy of emphatic commendation. Civilized and powerful tribes, however, residing within the Indian Territory, united early in the year 1861 with the Indians of the prairies immediately west and north, for hostile operations against the United States. In flagrant violation of treaties which had been observed by us with scrupulous good faith, and in the absence of any just ground of complaint, these confederated Indians entered into an alliance with the rebel authorities and raised regiments in support of their cause. The organized troops fought side by side with rebel soldiers, and detached bands made frequent assaults on the neighboring white settlements, which were without adequate means of defense, and on the Indians who maintained friendly relations with this Government. This state of things continued until the surrender of the rebel forces west of the Mississippi. Hostilities were then suspended, and, at the request of the Indians, commissioners were sent to negotiate a treaty of peace. Such preliminary arrangements were made as, it is believed, will result in the abolition of slavery among them, the cession, within the Indian Territory, of lands for the settlement of the civilized Indians now residing on reservations elsewhere, and the ultimate establishment of civil government, subject to the supervision of the United States.

The perfidious conduct of the Indians in making unprovoked war upon us has been visited with the severest retribution. The country within the Indian Territory has been laid waste, vast amounts of property destroyed, and the inhabitants reduced from a prosperous condition to such extreme destitution that thousands of them must inevitably perish during the present winter unless timely provision be made by this Government for their relief.

Hostile relations, such as have existed for several generations, continue between many of the most fierce and warlike tribes of New Mexico and Arizona and the white inhabitants. A considerable military force is necessary for the protection of the latter and the maintenance of public order.
